The Boston Medical Center lawyers knew of just one other full-fledged program like theirs, a new one in Hartford run at Connecticut Children’s Medical Center, in partnership with the Center for Children’s Advocacy at the University of Connecticut Law School. There, said the advocacy center’s director, Martha Stone, “it took a while for medical personnel to exactly understand the concept of the medical-legal partnership project, because lawyers make people nervous.”

“So,” Ms. Stone said, “they had to overcome the bias that we were in there looking at malpractice issues. We were in there doing poverty issues which would affect health outcomes. So it’s taken a lot of education on the part of the lawyer to have the medical staff understand.”

At Boston Medical Center, where the Family Advocacy Program has run since 1993, the program is well accepted by now but is still exploring ways to help poor families and looking for ways to expand. The walk-in lawyers’ hours began just this winter, for example, and have found plenty of takers.

One recent Monday, the mother of a diabetic girl stopped in to see Pamela C. Tames, a staff lawyer, about an administrative hearing scheduled for the next day on whether her daughter should qualify for federal disability money. The girl’s diabetes was still poorly regulated, said the mother, who would not let her name be used, and she frequently had to miss school and stay in bed when her blood-sugar levels went bad. The mother, who is on welfare, had no lawyer of her own and had been denied requests for disability.

“They say being diabetic is not a disability,” she said, “I think it is a disability if a mother has to stay at home and come get the child from school if the child constantly gets sick.”

She came to the law clinic, the mother said, “because I need to know how to represent my case.”

Ms. Tames told her how, beginning with the suggestion that she get an extension from the judge so she could present her case better.

In many ways, the lawyers at the medical center act as typical legal services lawyers, but they describe various forms of synergy with the doctors they help. For one thing, doctors, they say, have become more willing to ask patients questions like, “Do you have enough food?” now that they have lawyers who can help if the answer is no.

Before, Ms. Lawton said, “they didn’t want to screen for something they could do nothing about.”

The Family Advocacy Program said its director, Jean Zotter, is meant to work as preventive medicine; it can catch problems early because patients’ families are more likely to confide troubles to doctors than to agency bureaucrats, and to trust the information they receive in a clinic, she said.

“Traditional medicine can treat the effects of poverty,” Ms. Zotter said, “but this is a program that hopes to intervene so that poverty won’t have the effects it has on children’s health.”

The greatest challenge for would-be imitators of the program, its lawyers say, is probably getting financing for such a hybrid organism. The Boston program costs about $175,000 a year; it is paid for mainly by city money for welfare-to-work transitions, because it helps many families trying to cross that bridge. The Connecticut program, which has one staff lawyer, got a three-year, $260,000 grant from the Hartford Foundation for Public Giving.

But Dr. Zuckerman has been known to unleash national phenomena before. He founded Reach Out and Read, a program beloved of the Clinton and Bush White Houses alike, which makes books a part of pediatric care. It gives children a new book at each checkup and has spread to hundreds of pediatric clinics around the country.

“I don’t see what I’m doing with these non-traditional programs as just add-ons,” Dr. Zuckerman said. “What I’m trying to do is change pediatric care so it can have more of an impact.”

RETIREMENT OF COMMANDER THOMAS K. RICHEY, UNITED STATES COAST GUARD

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to offer my congratulations to a fine Coast Guard officer, Commander Thomas K. Richey, who is retiring this month after more than 20 years of dedicated service to this country. Commander Richey served as a Legislative Fellow in my personal office from 1996 to 1998. During that time he was responsible for maritime, transportation and environmental issues that fell under the jurisdiction of the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee. In 1998 he accompanied me to Kyoto, Japan during the negotiations of the Kyoto Protocol for controlling greenhouse gases.

Throughout his long and distinguished career Commander Richey has demonstrated superb managerial and leadership skills. Tom has served in a variety of demanding billets including Operations Officer of Coast Guard Group Mobile, Alabama, Commanding Officer of Coast Guard Station Atlantic City, New Jersey and Deputy Program Manager for acquisition of Cutter and station boats. Along the way Tom has been awarded five Coast Guard Commendation Medals with Operational Distinguishing Device and one Coast Guard Achievement Medal with the “O” device and numerous other team and unit commendations.

When Tom left my personal office in 1998 he became the Commandant’s Liaison to the United States Senate. This is a top billet reserved for only the finest the service has to offer. His performance in both my personal office and the Senate has been outstanding. As many of my colleagues know, Tom was always quick to respond to any of our questions or concerns and was an invaluable tool in helping us respond to our constituents whenever a Coast Guard issue arose. I am grateful for having had the opportunity to work so closely with Tom.

I offer again my congratulations to Commander Richey and his lovely wife Maureen who reside in Maryland with their two children Patricia and Tommy. I expect great things of this outstanding officer in the future. Mr. President, I yield the balance of my time to my colleagues, Senators BREAUX and DEWINE who wish to express their appreciation as well to Commander Richey for his dedicated service to this country.

Mr. BREAUX. I am honored to join today Senator KERRY on the occasion of Commander Thomas Richey’s retirement from the United States Coast Guard.

Senator KERRY and I both serve on the Oceans and Fisheries Subcommittee, and in fact we have sat next to each other for years during committee executive sessions, hearings and other subcommittee fora. It was during these occasions that I first came to know Commander Richey. I would classify the period of 1996–1998 as a very busy time for the subcommittee. During this period, Tom was instrumental in advising Senator KERRY and subcommittee members in general on crucial oceans and fisheries, and maritime issues.

On a more personal note, I sincerely appreciate Tom's assistance and diligent follow through in support of the issues and concerns of my constituents.

It brings me and all Americans great pride in knowing that the Coast Guard is represented by individuals with such high ideals, integrity and dedication to duty. I know of the sacrifices made by Commander Richey and his family and offer my congratulations and personal thanks for a job well done. I wish Tom the best of luck in all future endeavors.

Mr. DEWINE. I commend and congratulate Commander Thomas Richey of the United States Coast Guard for his more than 20 years of service to our country. Commander Richey has had a distinguished career of public service in defense of our great nation. I greatly appreciate all he has done to assist me and my staff over the past three years with maritime transportation issues on the Great Lakes.

Additionally, Commander Richey played a vital part in helping me gain a better understanding of the varied and critical role our Coast Guard plays in the war on drugs. I've been fortunate to travel with Commander Richey, where I had the opportunity to observe, first-hand, Coast Guard drug interdiction efforts off the coast of the island of Hispanola and Puerto Rico.

Commander Richey's accomplishments have been great and his presence here on Capitol Hill will be sorely missed. I thank him for his dedication and his service to our nation. I wish him and his family all my best.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Monday, May 21, 2001, the Federal debt stood at $5,654,596,844,308.03, five trillion, six hundred fifty-four billion, five hundred ninety-six million, eight hundred forty-four thousand, three hundred eight dollars and three cents.

Five years ago, May 21, 1996, the Federal debt stood at $5,115,827,000,000, five trillion, one hundred fifteen billion, eight hundred twenty-seven million.

Ten years ago, May 21, 1991, the Federal debt stood at $3,463,097,000,000, three trillion, four hundred sixty-three billion, ninety-seven million.

Fifteen years ago, May 21, 1986, the Federal debt stood at $2,030,373,000,000, two trillion, thirty billion, three hundred seventy-three million.

Twenty-five years ago, May 21, 1976, the Federal debt stood at $607,263,000,000, which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion, $5,047,333,844,308.3, five trillion, forty-seven billion, three hundred thirty-three million, eight hundred forty-four thousand, three hundred eight dollars and three cents during the past 25 years.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

SALUTING AMERICA'S VOLUNTEERS

• Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to bring special attention to an area of service that I find particularly important, volunteerism. As we tackle, some of our nation's most pressing needs and problems, we should be promoting and encouraging volunteer activities in our communities.

The importance of volunteering was taught to me as a child. I want to ensure now that we all are mindful of the lessons that volunteering teaches, such as a sense of community and compassion for others. I believe we should remind ourselves of the important role that volunteers play in the delivery of human services.

Volunteers provide an invaluable service to our communities and our citizens. Their presence and contributions put the "caring" back into caregiving. Nowhere is this better illustrated than in the contributions volunteers make to long-term care for our nation's seniors.

For example, the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, a philanthropic health care organization, has been supporting the creative delivery of health care and health systems for years. In my home state of Arkansas, we are working with the Johnson Foundation in a program entitled "Faith in Action."

"Faith in Action" is a faith-based initiative that encourages volunteerism as a strategy for meeting the needs of the chronically ill. This program provides seed money to fund partnerships between interfaith coalitions and other community organizations, such as Area Agencies on Aging, senior centers, and hospitals. All of these organizations share a common goal—to provide volunteer care to their neighbors in need.

These groups provide a variety of services, including organizing outreach to the homebound; training group leaders who oversee outreach ministries; locating homebound people who have lost touch with their communities; recruiting volunteers from church congregations and communities; connecting with local medical and social services; and providing emotional support services to community members.

The efforts of this dedicated group have brought much-needed support back into our Arkansas communities and are changing the lives of thousands of Arkansans. We are eternally grateful to leaders like Bishop Kenneth W. Hicks of United Methodist Church and Mr. Will Dublin, who have made a tremendous commitment to fostering and sustaining Faith In Action programs in Arkansas.

Next week, these men and many other Arkansas community leaders and volunteers will join me in Little Rock for a special event entitled "Caring Across the Continuum," where we will consider new strategies to promote and encourage volunteer services to assist the aging. With their contributions and energy, I believe we can make a real difference in the quality of care we extend to our state's population of seniors.

I commend these volunteers for their efforts, and I encourage them to continue setting the example for us as we seek legislative remedies for our nation's needs. If there is one thing I have come to appreciate about public policy and planning, it is that we are incapable of paying for everything that we need as a nation. Nor should we expect to do so.

Volunteers play a vital role in filling the gaps in our health care and social services systems. The mere act of volunteering encourages us to look outside ourselves, which in turn nurtures the growth of caring communities. Let's encourage the rest of our nation to consider such efforts as we look to the future and seek to re-weave the moral fabric of our country with the qualities of volunteerism.●

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT H. FOSTER, PUBLISHER AND MODEL CITIZEN

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Robert H. Foster of Dover, NH, publisher of the distinguished New Hampshire newspapers Foster's Daily Democrat and the Laconia Citizen, and a number of other papers, in honor of his 80th birthday which he celebrated on May 17. The newspaper is the longest continually managed and owned periodical by direct descendants of its founder with the family name in its banner.

I have known Bob for nearly 20 years. He is man of impeccable character, commitment to his community, and devotion to his family. His dedication to journalistic excellence has won him the respect of many politicians in the Granite State, no matter what philosophy or party affiliation. Robert Foster is known for his fairness, and for impressing upon his writers and editors that "integrity matters."

Robert and his wife, Terri, have been the driving force behind the success of the newspaper. Foster's Daily Democrat is rich in history dating back to the founding father of the newspaper, Joshua Lane Foster. On June 18, 1873, Joshua published the first edition of the Dover area newspaper. Robert assumed ownership of the newspaper upon the death of his father, Frederick Foster, on November 7, 1956. Robert has worked diligently to ensure that the newspaper continually maintains a standard of professionalism.

Today, as in 1873, Robert understands the importance of keeping the citizens of his community abreast of information which affects the quality of life in the Seacoast and the Lakes Region. Robert and Foster's Daily Democrat are a mainstay in the community, providing the latest news and information to their readers.

As members of the greater Dover community, Robert and Terri have been generous benefactors. Among other accolades, they have been honored as "Citizens of the Year" in Dover.

Robert, a World War II and Korean conflict veteran, has also served on the Board of Governors with the New England Newspaper Association and is a former Trustee at the University of New Hampshire.

Bob and Terri have three children: Catherine Hayward, Patrice Foster and Robert F. Foster. They are also proud grandparents of Catherine and Gregg Hayward and Samuel and Joshua Foster.

I commend Robert Foster for his numerous contributions to his community and our state. He is an exemplary leader who has gained the respect of those who know him. It is an honor and a privilege to represent him in the U.S. Senate, and I am proud to call him my friend.●

SMALL BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION AWARDS

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate Susan Dollenmaier of Tunbridge who was chosen as the Vermont Small Business Person of the Year. She has shown extraordinary innovation and vision in building a successful business in Vermont.

Ms. Dollenmaier is the president and co-founder of Anichini Inc., an importing and manufacturing company that designs, wholesales, and retails linens and textiles from Italy, India, the Far East, and Eastern Europe. Anichini also has a furniture division and a line of products for infants. A former social worker for the state of Vermont, Dollenmaier and her ex-business partner, Patrizia Anichini, launched the company about 20 years ago with only a $600 investment. This year, sales of Anichini's linens are expected to top $10 million. Besides its outlet store in West Lebanon, New Hampshire—a site she hopes to move to the Vermont side of the Connecticut River very soon—and a new one slated to open in Manchester, Vermont, Anichini operates retail stores in Beverly Hills and Dallas, along with a boutique in New York City. Susan makes sure that some of the cash flow from her wealthy and demanding clientele finances flex time, day care stipends, generous vacations and holidays, a profit-sharing plan and other benefits—as well as better-than-average wages—for her largely female work force of 45 employees. We are very happy Susan chose to start and maintain her business in Vermont.

I commend Susan and all of her employees for receipt of this prestigious award.

I ask that a copy of an April 15, 2001, article in the Valley News outlining Ms. Dollenmaier's achievements be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

SBA HONORS TURNBRIDGE'S ANICHINI INC.

(By Bob Piasecki)

TURNBRIDGE.—Most people drive right past the yellow farmhouse off Route 110 that contains Anichini Inc.'s offices, and that's just fine with Susan Dollenmaier.

Dollenmaier, president and co-founder of Anichini, the importer, manufacturer, wholesaler and retailer of linens and textiles for the rich and famous, prefers to keep a low profile.

That explains why there isn't a sign outside Anichini's headquarters or its warehouse farther down the road—and why there never will be, as long as Dollenmaier is running the company.

"I'm not into being a celebrity," says Dollenmaier, dressed casually in black leggings and a gray cable-knit sweater. "I just want us to get recognition because of our products."

That won't be possible for much longer because Dollenmaier was just named Vermont's Small Businessperson of the Year by the state's Small Business Administration.

Some of Dollenmaier's employees went ahead and nominated their boss for the prestigious award without telling her, and she ended up winning.

The selection put Dollenmaier in the running for being named the national Small Business Person of the Year award, which will be announced next month in Washington D.C.

The SBA singled out Dollenmaier and Anichini for "seamlessly blending economic success with socially conscious business practices."

Deborah Mathews, who has worked with Dollenmaier virtually since the day Anichini was launched, said she was willing to reduce her salary and make other painful cuts when times were tough.

"Susan's focus on the needs of her staff and the community in which she lives and works made her an ideal recipient for this honor," added Mathews.

"Susan has a profound gift for recognizing hidden potential, and she knows how to bring it out in the open," said Kenneth Silvia, director of the SBA's office in Vermont. "It's manifest not only in her choice of Anichini's product line, but in the people who work at the company—the majority of whom are Vermonters."

A former social worker for the state of Vermont, Dollenmaier and her ex-partner, Patrizia Anichini, launched the company about 20 years ago with a paltry $600 investment. This year, sales of Anichini's linens are expected to top $10 million.

Besides its outlet store in the Powerhouse Mall in West Lebanon, and a new one slated to open this summer in Manchester, Vt., Anichini operates retail stores in Beverly Hills and Dallas, along with a boutique in New York City. Its regular clientele includes celebrities such as Oprah Winfrey, Sharon Stone and Tom Cruise.

Not bad for the daughter of an electrical salesman who grew up in Libertyville, Ill., a small agricultural town 45 miles northwest of Chicago.

Dollenmaier said she always had a thing for beautiful textiles, but doesn't quite know where that fascination came from. "That's something to figure out with a therapist," she jokes. But she suspects it probably has something to do with her grandmother, a dressmaker who also made her own quilts.

She sewed her own clothes as a teenager, and began collecting antique fabrics of all styles and types, never thinking it was ever going to turn into a business.

After graduating from Southern Illinois University, where she earned a degree in design and studied under R. Buckminster Fuller—the inventor of the geodesic dome—Dollenmaier bounced around for a while.

Her life changed in the early 1970s, when she came to south Royalton from Los Angeles to visit her sister, whose husband was attending Vermont Law School at the time, and fell in love with the area.

"It was spring. It was so green and there was so much water," Dollenmaier recalled, sitting at an enormous wooden table in Anichini's spacious conference room.

"It was so refreshing, I turned to my sister and said, 'this has got to be one of the most beautiful places in the world,' and essentially I never left after that."

She got a job as a social worker for the state of Vermont, and helped set up several programs including Meals on Wheels in Tunbridge and many of the other towns along the First Branch of the White River. At the same time, Dollenmaier continued to go to tag sales, flea markets and estate sales, collecting antique fabrics for her burgeoning collection. After she sold part of her cache in New York City, Dollenmaier decided it was time for a major life change.

"It finally dawned on me that I wanted more challenges, and that I was headed toward running some government program in Washington, D.C., if I continued to be a social worker," she says.

So she quit after seven years, and with her partner, rented a loft in Manhattan on 20th Street. "We lived there hand-to-mouth," she said buying, selling and swapping antique linens.

She remembers driving an old, unheated bread truck filled with their wares back and forth from New York and Vermont, where she also kept an apartment in Tunbridge. The duo got their first big break when Barney's, the upscale New York department store, agreed to sell some of their material in its home furnishings store, which was just opening.

During a trip to Venice with her husband, glassblower Robin Mix, Dollenmaier got the idea of making and selling new, heirloom quality textiles, which is essentially what Anichini does today.

"In Italy I found women who were still making the same kind of textiles I was buying and selling," she says. "That's really where the seed of the business was formed."

Soon after that, Anichini caught another break when one of Italy's premier textile weavers took a chance on the fledgling company and agreed to give it $50,000 worth of materials on consignment.

The business sold all $50,000, and was on its way. It grossed $100,000 in its first year, and has continued to expand and grow. Dollenmaier and Anichini eventually sold their loft in New York, and used the proceeds to buy the buildings the company still owns in Tunbridge.

The partners went their separate ways a few years ago, when Dollenmaier bought out Anichini's share in the business.

Today, Anichini has a furniture division, a line of products for infants and is widening its scope to include fabrics and designs from India, the Far East, Eastern Europe and other countries. It no longer bills itself as simply an purveyor of Italian, Dollenmaier says.

The company recently worked out an agreement with a weaver in India who is trying to keep some of the country's old techniques alive.

Dollenmaier acknowledges that the 2,000 or so women who make textiles for Anichini in India are, at least by Western standards, poor. Asked how this squares with Anichini's Ben & Jerry's-style commitment to social responsibility, Dollenmaier says she has thought deeply about this question.

"I guess I'd say they've got to be working doing something, and they are making a lot more money making stuff for us as opposed to someone else."

One thing is certain, Anichini's 60 employees in the United States are treated quite well. The company provides profit sharing, which has averaged more than 10 percent of the employee's salary over the past five years, 11 paid holidays, five weeks vacation after five years of service, and paid membership in gym.

Dollenmaier hopes to eventually move Anichini's outlet store in West Lebanon across the river to the Route 4 corridor in Vermont. Long-range, she also plans to consolidate all of Anichini's operations in a new facility in Tunbridge that will be even harder to find than its existing buildings.

Looking back on her life and how she has parlayed a hobby and passion into a highly successful business, Dollenmaier says: "I'm really doing exactly what I want. I really have very few regrets."•

TRIBUTE TO MAJOR GENERAL MICHAEL W. DAVIDSON

• Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, today I rise to pay tribute to a great American, Major General Michael W. Davidson for his 32 years of meritorious service to our Nation. On June 16, 2001, Major General Davidson will retire from the service, and I know my colleagues join me in expressing our gratitude for his many contributions.

Major General Davidson began his career as an enlisted member of the Army 32 years ago. Since that beginning, he served his Nation in the Active Duty Army, U.S. Army Reserve, and the Army National Guard. His diligence and commitment to the United States Army did not go unnoticed, he was eventually promoted to the rank of two-star General Officer. In this capacity, General Davidson served a three year term as the first ever Assistant to the Chief Joint Chiefs of Staff for National Guard Matters.

During his tenure as Assistant to the Chief Joint Chiefs of Staff for National Guard Matters, Major General Davidson provided considerable insight and made lasting contributions regarding the integration of the Nation's Reserve Component forces into the planning and strategies of the United States Armed Forces. Major General Davidson's comprehensive knowledge of the Reserve Component and its capabilities as well as insightful analysis of our national security concerns were invaluable assets and set the tone for this new position. I am confident that all who follow Major General Davidson will benefit tremendously from his example.

Perhaps even more than his distinguished service, Major General Davidson is justifiably proud of his loving family. He and his wife Jo Ann have three children, twins Megan and Claire, both 22, and Brian, age 15. General Davidson and his family make their home in my hometown of Louisville, KY. Although he lives and was educated in Louisville, Major General Davidson's true allegiance is a few miles down the road in Lexington, or perhaps more specifically, Rupp Arena. Like so many others in the Bluegrass, The General is a huge supporter and fan of Kentucky Wildcat Basketball and I can hope that the next phase of his life will afford him many opportunities to enjoy the Wildcats in person.

In addition to catching as many Big Blue games as possible, Major General Davidson plans to busy himself with consultation work and teaching at the college level. Clearly, his commitment to service will endure.

Michael Davidson's time in uniform may be drawing to a close, however his record of dedicated service will continue for many years to come. On behalf of this body, I thank him for his dedication and contributions to this nation, and sincerely wish him and the entire Davidson family the very best in his retirement.●

NORTHWEST GEORGIA GIRL SCOUT GOLD AWARD WINNERS

• Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I am proud to announce that 53 girls from Northwest Georgia have achieved the Girl Scout Gold Award for the year 2001. The Gold Award is the highest honor a Girl Scout can accomplish, and each girl has endured a rigorous process during the last three years of the Scouting program.

The many lessons learned through the Girl Scout program will serve each girl well in the years to come. Setting and accomplishing goals, becoming effective leaders, and making a commitment to help others are among the many experiences each girl has had that set them apart from their peers. The special skills that the girls developed will be a tremendous asset to them as they finish their education and progress onto greater experiences.

Over the previous 3 years, each girl has illustrated tremendous dedication, effort, and hard work to achieve this prestigious award. However their success could not have been achieved without the support and encouragement of their family, friends, teachers, and troop leaders. On the quest for the Gold Award, each girl has endured challenges and hardships that would not have been overcome without the assistance of their community. As we recognize the achievement of these 53 girls, let us not forget to acknowledge the sacrifice that each family went through to help them reach their goal.

Below are the young ladies from the Girl Scout Council of Northwest Georgia who have achieved the 2001 Gold Award.

The list follows:

Anna Maria Arias, Atlanta, Georgia; Elizabeth Anne Baynes, Conyers, Georgia; Meredith Jane Bridges, Stone Mountain, Georgia; McChelle A. Brown, East Point, Georgia; Whitney Suzanne Calhoun, Stone Mountain, Georgia; Lauren Catchpole, Roswell, Georgia; Lisa Collins, Lawrenceville, Georgia; Erin E. Conboy, Roswell, Georgia; Katherine Davis, Lawrenceville, Georgia; and Amiris Duckwyler-Watson, College Park, Georgia.

Jennifer MaryAlice Ellis, Smyrna, Georgia; Valerie Jaye Elston, Alpharetta, Georgia; Catherine Anne Farrington, Lithonia, Georgia; Courtney Lashan Foster, Ellenwood, Georgia; Elizabeth K. Gilbert, Powder Springs, Georgia; Kara Renita Greene, Fairburn, Georgia; Lindsey B. Harris, Roswell, Georgia; Elizabeth Hollis, College Park, Georgia; and Amanda Katie Lillian Honea, Woodstock, Georgia.

Sharon Ashley Johnson, Stone Mountain, Georgia; Katherine Kauffman, Lilburn, Georgia; Katherine Killebrew, Marietta, Georgia; Adrienne Janiece Lee, Atlanta, Georgia; Catrina Marie Madore, Lilburn, Georgia; Laura Emily Cuvo, Lawrenceville, Georgia; Leanna Jane Dailey, Dalton, Georgia; Maire M. Daly, Roswell, Georgia; Amanda Suzanne Mullis, Marietta, Georgia; and Mai-Lise Trinh Nguyen, Dunwoody, Georgia.

Natalie Nicole Parks, Jonesboro, Georgia; Virginia LaShea Powell, Fayetteville, Georgia; Jessica Ransom, Riverdale, Georgia; Jennifer C. Rausch, Norcross, Georgia; Charlotte Anne Grover, Lawrenceville, Georgia; Ashley Nicole Haney, Atlanta, Georgia; Farrah Leah Harden, Atlanta, Georgia; Joyce Elizabeth Reid, Conyers, Georgia; and Sarah Ellen Sattlemeyer, Stone Mountain, Georgia.

Courtney Laurette Simmons, Atlanta, Georgia; Caroline Elizabeth Smith, Dalton, Georgia; Katherine Leigh Smith, Dalton, Georgia; Natalie Stone, Lilburn, Georgia; Tiffany Nicole

Meriweather, East Point, Georgia; Lauren K. Meyers, Lilburn, Georgia; Margaret Ayers Miller, Dalton, Georgia; Stephanie D. Taylor, Riverdale, Georgia; Chandra L. Teddleton, Decatur, Georgia; Katherine DeAnn Weisz, Stone Mountain, Georgia; Bethany Wiethorn, Lawrenceville, Georgia; and Brooke Wiggins, Lilburn, Georgia.●

DOUGLASS W. COOPER—OHIO TEACHER OF THE YEAR

● Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, as we continue to debate the education reform legislation and the importance of teachers, in particular, I would like to recognize and congratulate an outstanding teacher from my home state, Mr. Douglass W. Cooper, who has been named the Ohio Teacher of the Year for 2001.

Nothing is as important to our children's education than the quality of their teachers. My own high school principal, Mr. Malone, once told me that when it comes to education in our schools, only two things really matter, a student who wants to learn and a teacher who can teach. Mr. Malone was right 35 years ago, and he's still right today!

A good teacher has the power to fundamentally change the course of a child's life. I'm sure that each of us can recall at least one great teacher who inspired us, or motivated us and changed our lives. These teachers guided us then and continue to influence us today.

Douglass Cooper is one of those teachers. He is the kind of teacher who has a life-lasting impact on his students. And, as Ohio Teacher of the Year, Mr. Cooper is being recognized for this and for his outstanding dedication and leadership in the classroom, school, and community.

Mr. Cooper, who received both a bachelor's and a master's degree from Wright State University, is currently a social studies teacher in Clinton County, Ohio, and has been teaching in the Wilmington School System for the last ten years. He serves as the chair of the social studies department at Wilmington High School. Mr. Cooper is a member of the Wilmington Local Professional Development Committee and serves his school as a mentor for entry-year teachers. He is a National Board Certified teacher and received the Ohio Governor's Educational Leadership Award in 1999.

Additionally, Mr. Cooper has spent much of his free time volunteering in his community. He is involved in the Clinton County Kids Voting Steering Committee and serves as Scoutmaster of Boy Scout Troop 909.

I commend Douglass Cooper for his exceptional service and his unending dedication to his students and community. He is a great role model for our young people in school, as well as for his colleagues in the teaching profession. Ohio is honored to have him as a representative this year for teachers all over our State.●

IN CELEBRATION OF SANTA CLARA UNIVERSITY'S 150TH AN- NIVERSARY

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to share with the Senate my thoughts on the 150th Anniversary of Santa Clara University.

Santa Clara University, located in the heart of California's Silicon Valley, became California's first school of higher learning in 1851. The college is celebrating its sesquicentennial this year on the same Santa Clara Valley campus it has occupied continuously since its founding. At the center of campus is the beautiful Mission Santa Clara de Asis, the eighth of the original 21 California missions.

Santa Clara University brings the intellectual rigor, respect for scholarship, and spiritual vision of its Jesuit founders to students of all backgrounds and beliefs. In the fall of 1961, women were accepted as undergraduates and Santa Clara University became the first coeducational Catholic University in California. The college is committed to the diversity that distinguishes California and the United States throughout the world and its student body includes more than 35 percent minority group members.

Santa Clara University's unique community events, undergraduate and nationally recognized graduate programs greatly inform and enrich communities in the Silicon Valley and the State of California. The sesquicentennial of Santa Clara University is a time for celebration by us all. ●

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAM HAZELETT

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate William Hazelett of Colchester who was chosen as the United States Small Business Administration National Exporter of the Year. Bill has shown extraordinary innovation and vision in building a very successful business in Vermont.

Bill Hazelett and his wife Dawn are old friends of mine and Marcelle's. Bill is the president of Hazelett Strip-Casting Corp., a manufacturing firm that designs and makes continuous metal casting machines designed to produce long sheets of metal and wire for everything from pennies to aluminum siding to automobile bodies. Hazelett Strip-Casting now employs 145 people. Foreign business accounts for 70 percent of its $23 million in annual sales, and Hazelett Strip-Casting has clients all around the world, including much of Europe, Canada, Indonesia, Japan, China, Saudi Arabia, Brazil and Chile. Bill moved his company to Vermont from Connecticut in 1957 because, as he says, "I wanted to ski." We are very happy he came and decided to stay.

I commend Bill and Dawn for receipt of this prestigious award.

I ask that a copy of a May 9, 2001, article in the Burlington Free Press outlining Bill Hazelett's achievements be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

COLCHESTER MAN NAMED SBA'S NATIONAL EXPORTER OF THE YEAR

R. William Hazelett of Colchester on Tuesday received the U.S. Small Business Administration's National Exporter of the Year award from President George W. Bush in a White House ceremony. Hazelett, 82, president of Hazelett Strip-Casting Corp., was honored for building a manufacturing firm for which foreign business accounts for 70 percent of its $23 million in annual sales.

Hazelett had a simple reason for the recognition. "We have a technology that is superior to any other technology in fabricating sheet metal," he said. "My business was selected (for the award) as being very, very good at creating exporting business for the United States." The company designs and makes continuous metal casting machines, behemoths designed to produce long sheets of metal and wire that can weigh as much as 120 tons and cost $15 million. The machines produce sheet metal for everything from pennies to aluminum siding to auto bodies, Hazelett said.

Clients are scattered all over the world, including much of Europe, Canada, Indonesia, Japan, China, Saudi Arabia, Brazil and Chile, he said. Earlier this year, a Hazelett representative was part of the trade mission that traveled to Argentina with Gov. Howard Dean. Though no sale was made on the trip, it started a process that will lead to a sale, Hazelett said. "You don't sell one of these machines overnight because a machine might cost $15 million," he said. "You've got a whole plant that might cost $150 million that they go into. It's a very long-term consideration." Hazelett was confident a deal would be signed. "We will get the business because we are the best in the world," he said.

Hazelett, which does all of its engineering and manufacturing in Vermont, employs 145 people. The company moved here in 1957 from Connecticut because, Hazelett said, "I wanted to ski."

In naming Hazelett for the honor, the SBA noted his company's "stellar success in export marketing." "Bill Hazelett's contribution to Vermont's stature as a world-class exporter center is absolutely outstanding," said Kenneth Silver, director of the SBA's Vermont district office.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

S. 924. A bill to provide reliable officers, technology, education, community prosecutors, and training in our neighborhoods; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, authority for the community policing program has expired, and I rise today to introduce legislation to extend that hugely successful program for another six years.

We created this program in 1994 as part of that year's crime bill. The COPS program has worked better than any of us could have hoped. Crime has gone down every year since the program has been in existence. We have invested over $7.5 billion to make our streets safer. 115,000 officers will be funded by the end of this fiscal year. 73,600 of those officers are on the beat today, over 200 of them in my own state of Delaware. Grants have been issued to more than 12,400 law enforcement agencies. Big cities and small towns have benefitted, and more than 82 percent of all COPS grants have gone to departments serving populations of 50,000 or less.

Community policing methods are taking hold across the country. A recent Justice Department study revealed that the number of community police officers nationwide increased by 400 percent between 1997 and 1999. Schools are benefitting: by the end of this fiscal year COPS will have funded almost 5,000 school resource officers. These are specially trained officers who work in schools to prevent crimes before they occur, mentor students, and assist school administrators in creating a safe learning environment. Since COPS started funding school resource officers, their numbers across the country have shot up more than 40 percent.

When we passed the crime bill in 1994, we set a goal of funding 100,000 officers by 2000. That goal has been met. But the need for more officers, for technology to help those officers do their job more efficiently, and for more prosecutors so the cases investigated by the police can effectively be brought, continues unabated. The Justice Department reports that in the last two fiscal years, demand for new police hiring grants has outstripped available funds by a factor of almost three to one. To meet this need, the legislation I introduce today authorizes $600 million per year over the next 6 years, enough to hire up to 50,000 more officer. We have made this portion of the program more flexible: up to half of these hiring dollars can be used to help police departments retain those community police officers currently on payroll. In another change from current law, portion of these funds can be used for officer training and education.

The legislation also provides funding for new technologies, so law enforcement can have access to the latest high-tech crime fighting equipment to keep pace with today's sophisticated criminals. Also included are funds to help local district attorneys hire more community prosecutors. These prosecutors will expand the community justice concept and engage the entire community in preventing and fighting crime. The statistics we have on community prosecutions are quite promising, and we should increase the funds available to local prosecutors, a piece of our criminal justice puzzle that has too often gone overlooked.

We need to pass this bill. Already the administration has announced its intention to end the police hiring program, to dramatically scale back the community prosecution program, and to cut other critical state and local law enforcement programs. That is not the right approach. Crime is down, but it will not stay down. Preliminary FBI crime reports for 2000 indicate that we may be reaching the end of our eight straight years of decreasing crime. Last December, the FBI reported that crime was down in most big cities, but up in cities of less than 50,000 people. It was up 1.2 percent in the South, the nation's most populous region. Several of our largest cities have reported increases in their murder rates. Crime will not stay down, unless we dedicate the resources necessary for state and local law enforcement to do their job effectively.

This bill has the support of every major law enforcement organization in the country. Fifty senators are original cosponsors of the legislation, including five Republicans. I want to pay a special tribute to my friends on the other side of the aisle and thank them for listening to their mayors, police chiefs, and officers who told them this is the right thing to do. We should not play politics with public safety, and I hope we can pursue common-sense crime-fighting proposals without regard to party.

I would like to thank the men and women of law enforcement for their service and heroism in bringing about the longest lasting decrease in crime in this nation's history. Let's build on that success, and let's continue to give them the support they deserve, by reauthorizing the COPS program.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, as well as several letters supporting its introduction, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 924

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Providing Reliable Officers, Technology, Education, Community Prosecutors, and Training In Our Neighborhoods Act of 2001" or "PROTECTION Act".

(C) by inserting "representatives of police labor and management organizations, community residents," after "supervisors,".

(e) TECHNOLOGY AND PROSECUTION PROGRAMS.—Section 1701 of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796dd) is amended by—

(1) striking subsection (k);

(2) redesignating subsections (f) through (j) as subsections (g) through (k); and

(3) striking subsection (e) and inserting the following:

"(e) LAW ENFORCEMENT TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM.—Grants made under subsection (a) may be used to assist police departments, in employing professional, scientific, and technological advancements that will help them—

"(1) improve police communications through the use of wireless communications, computers, software, videocams, databases and other hardware and software that allow law enforcement agencies to communicate more effectively across jurisdictional boundaries and effectuate interoperability;

"(2) develop and improve access to crime solving technologies, including DNA analysis, photo enhancement, voice recognition, and other forensic capabilities; and

"(3) promote comprehensive crime analysis by utilizing new techniques and technologies, such as crime mapping, that allow law enforcement agencies to use real-time crime and arrest data and other related information—including non-criminal justice data—to improve their ability to analyze, predict, and respond pro-actively to local crime and disorder problems, as well as to engage in regional crime analysis.

"(f) COMMUNITY-BASED PROSECUTION PROGRAM.—Grants made under subsection (a) may be used to assist State, local or tribal prosecutors' offices in the implementation of community-based prosecution programs that build on local community policing efforts. Funds made available under this subsection may be used to—

"(1) hire additional prosecutors who will be assigned to community prosecution programs, including programs that assign prosecutors to handle cases from specific geographic areas, to address specific violent crime and other local crime problems (including intensive illegal gang, gun and drug enforcement projects and quality of life initiatives), and to address localized violent and other crime problems based on needs identified by local law enforcement agencies, community organizations, and others;

"(2) redeploy existing prosecutors to community prosecution programs as described in paragraph (1) of this section by hiring victim and witness coordinators, paralegals, community outreach, and other such personnel; and

"(3) establish programs to assist local prosecutors' offices in the implementation of programs that help them identify and respond to priority crime problems in a community with specifically tailored solutions.

At least 75 percent of the funds made available under this subsection shall be reserved for grants under paragraphs (1) and (2) and of those amounts no more than 10 percent may be used for grants under paragraph (2) and at least 25 percent of the funds shall be reserved for grants under paragraphs (1) and (2) to units of local government with a population of less than 50,000."

(f) RETENTION GRANTS.—Section 1703 of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796dd-2) is amended by inserting at the end the following:

"(d) RETENTION GRANTS.—The Attorney General may use no more than 50 percent of the funds under subsection (a) to award grants targeted specifically for retention of police officers to grantees in good standing, with preference to those that demonstrate financial hardship or severe budget constraint that impacts the entire local budget and may result in the termination of employment for police officers funded under subsection (b)(1)."

(g) DEFINITIONS.—

(1) CAREER LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER.—Section 1709(1) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796dd-8) is amended by inserting after "criminal laws" the following: "including sheriffs deputies charged with supervising offenders who are released into the community but also engaged in local community policing efforts."

(2) SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICER.—Section 1709(4) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796dd-8) is amended—

(A) by striking subparagraph (A) and inserting the following:

"(A) to serve as a law enforcement liaison with other Federal, State, and local law enforcement and regulatory agencies, to address and document crime and disorder problems including gangs and drug activities, firearms and explosives-related incidents, and the illegal use and possession of alcohol affecting or occurring in or around an elementary or secondary school;

(B) by striking subparagraph (E) and inserting the following:

"(E) to train students in conflict resolution, restorative justice, and crime awareness, and to provide assistance to and coordinate with other officers, mental health professionals, and youth counselors who are responsible for the implementation of prevention/intervention programs within the schools"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(H) to work with school administrators, members of the local parent teacher associations, community organizers, law enforcement, fire departments, and emergency medical personnel in the creation, review, and implementation of a school violence prevention plan;

"(I) to assist in documenting the full description of all firearms found or taken into custody on school property and to initiate a firearms trace and ballistics examination for each firearm with the local office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms;

"(J) to document the full description of all explosives or explosive devices found or taken into custody on school property and report to the local office of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms; and

"(K) to assist school administrators with the preparation of the Department of Education, Annual Report on State Implementation of the Gun-Free Schools Act which tracks the number of students expelled per year for bringing a weapon, firearm, or explosive to school."

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 1001(a)(11) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3793(a)(11)) is amended—

(1) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out part Q, to remain available until expended—

"(i) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2002;

"(ii) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;

"(iii) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2004;

"(iv) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2005;

"(v) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2006; and

"(vi) $1,150,000,000 for fiscal year 2007.";

(2) in subparagraph (B)—

(A) by striking "3 percent" and inserting "5 percent";

(B) by striking "1701(f)" and inserting "1701(g)";

(C) by striking the second sentence and inserting "Of the remaining funds, if there is a demand for 50 percent of appropriated hiring funds, as determined by eligible hiring applications from law enforcement agencies having jurisdiction over areas with populations exceeding 150,000, no less than 50 percent shall be allocated for grants pursuant to applications submitted by units of local government or law enforcement agencies having jurisdiction over areas with populations exceeding 150,000 or by public and private entities that serve areas with populations exceeding 150,000, and no less than 50 percent shall be allocated for grants pursuant to applications submitted by units of local government or law enforcement agencies having jurisdiction over areas with populations less than 150,000 or by public and private entities that serve areas with populations less than 150,000.";

(D) by striking "85 percent" and inserting "$600,000,000"; and

(E) by striking "1701(b)," and all that follows through "of part Q" and inserting the following: "1701 (b) and (c), $350,000,000 to grants for the purposes specified in section 1701(e), and $200,000,000 to grants for the purposes specified in section 1701(f)."

POLICE EXECUTIVE RESEARCH FORUM,

Washington, DC, May 17, 2001.

Hon. JOSEPH BIDEN, JR.,

U.S. Senate,

Washington, DC.

DEAR JOE: On behalf of the members of the Police Executive Research Forum (PERF), a national organization of police professionals who serve more than 50 percent of our nation's population, I wish to express our continued support of your plans to adequately fund and reauthorize the COPS Office and its many critical programs.

The COPS program has been a highly successful crime-fighting initiative. The vast majority of COPS grant recipients have put those funds to unprecedented good use. With COPS funding, PERF members have hired more officers, purchased critical technology, implemented innovative problem-solving programs, and received valuable training and technical assistance, all of which have played an important role in advancing community policing across the country. But the COPS Office's work is far from over.

Providing the citizens in our jurisdictions with safe communities requires resources beyond local reach. The COPS program's sole mission is to respond to the needs of local law enforcement and it has delivered much-needed resources in the fight against crime. Through this partnership with the federal government, we have made tremendous advances in community policing. We have always called for multi-year reauthorization and full funding for this critical program.

PERF would welcome the opportunity to work with you to increase the flexibility of COPS hiring funds and otherwise ensure the COPS programs' long-term success. We thank you for your tireless support of law enforcement.

Sincerely,

CHUCK WEXLER,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF POLICE
ORGANIZATIONS, INC.,
Washington, DC, May 3, 2001.

Hon. JOSEPH R. BIDEN, JR.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR JOE: Please be advised that the National Association of Police Organizations (NAPO) will be strongly supporting your re-introduction of S. 1760, the "PROTECTION Act." NAPO, representing 4,000 unions and associations and 230,000 sworn law enforcement officers, truly appreciates your effort to reauthorize and continue the success of the COPS program.

As you know, NAPO strongly supported the passage of the 1994 Crime bill creating the COPS program. Since its inception the COPS program has funded grants for over 110,000 community police officers. Most law enforcement officials and the public recognize the benefits of putting more cops on the street. The steady decline of violent crime over the last few years is evidence of the success of this program.

We support your legislation that will extend the COPS program for another six years and put up to 50,000 more police officers on our streets and in our neighborhoods to continue the success of community policing. We also strongly support the funding of educational scholarships for active law enforcement officers and new technology to help fight crime.

NAPO is cognizant of the fact that we must not become complacent with our past success. There is still a lot of work to be done and we will continue to fight with you for the resources needed to serve our communities adequately. NAPO's position is that the declining crime rate is not an excuse to disband the COPS program, but an opportunity to hire more officers to further fight and decrease violent crime that still permeates many of America's communities.

If I can be of assistance on this or any other matter, please have your staff contact me at (202) 842-4420.

Sincerely,

ROBERT T. SCULLY,
Executive Director.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF POLICE OFFICERS,
Alexandria, VA, May 4, 2001.

Hon. JOE BIDEN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BIDEN: On behalf of the entire membership of the International Brotherhood of Police Officers (IBPO), I want to thank you for introducing legislation to reauthorize the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program.

As the author of the 1994 Crime Bill you understand the significance of the COPS program. Every crime statistic available shows that America is a safer place to live since we implemented the COPS program. The COPS program enables communities to combat crime in the most effective way possible—by putting more officers on the street.

I understand that they are opponents to the COPS program. I urge them to talk to police officers in their states. The IBPO believes that public safety is far too important to be caught up in political debate. It would be a tragedy to cut back on any efforts to fight crime at this critical juncture.

As the largest police union in the AFL-CIO, we have first hand knowledge of what a success the COPS program is. We look forward to working with you on this most important piece of legislation.

Sincerely,

KENNETH T. LYONS,
National President.

NATIONAL SHERIFFS' ASSOCIATION,
Alexandria, VA, May 21, 2001.

Hon. JOSEPH BIDEN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BIDEN: I am writing to you regarding the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program and your bill, the Protection Act. We at the National Sheriffs' Association (NSA) support COPS and we appreciate the commitment made to law enforcement by Congress.

As you may know, sheriffs around the nation depend on the COPS program to supplement their law enforcement capabilities. Sheriffs need the additional funding provided so that they can better protect and serve their communities. The COPS program has been an overwhelming success and has had a tangible and positive impact on crime reduction. Nearly two-thirds of the sheriffs offices in the Nation have benefited from grant funding from this program and the added funding has made a significant difference in how we enforce the law. A sheriff with a COPS grant can fight and control crime while a sheriff without a grant is at the mercy of the criminal. With the added capability that a COPS grant provides, we have reduced crime, streets are safer and honest law-abiding people feel secure in their communities.

NSA supports a flexible COPS program that allows sheriffs to determine their own needs and apply for funds accordingly. Sheriffs have overwhelming technology needs that can be addressed through the COPS technology grant programs. These programs have helped sheriffs purchase state-of-the-art computer technology and communications equipment. In this information age, it is more important than ever that we strive to achieve telecommunications and systems compatibility among criminal justice agencies, improve our forensic sciences capability at the state and local level and encourage the use of technologies to predict and prevent crime. All of these will give law enforcement the advantage over criminals. The total package of law enforcement support that COPS provides is an integral part of crime control in America.

In our view, COPS is a program that is vital to effective law enforcement and to sheriffs in both rural and urban jurisdictions. Without COPS, I firmly believe our communities would be a little less safe and a little more dangerous. Thank you again for your commitment to reducing crime. Know that NSA will do our part in the fight against crime and given the proper resources, we can truly make a difference.

Sincerely,

JERRY "PEANUTS" GAINES,
President.

By Mr. WELLSTONE:

S. 925. A bill to amend the title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide a prescription benefit program for all medicare beneficiaries; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce long overdue legislation that will bring affordable prescription drugs to all Medicare beneficiaries. This legislation is the Medicare Extension of Drugs to Seniors, MEDS, Act of 2001.

For a good period of the time that I have been a Senator, the Federal Government has operated with budget deficits. The goal during that period was deficit reduction, while protecting the programs that are important for people. I had hoped that when the economy began to do better, and we began to see surpluses, that finally, as a Senator from Minnesota, I would be able to do really well for people. It would not just be stopping the worst, it would be doing the better.

Unfortunately, what we have this year in Washington instead is a choice. Either you are in favor of Robin-Hood-in-reverse tax cuts, with as much as 40 percent of the benefits going to the top 1 percent of earners. Or you are in favor of making an investment above and beyond reducing the debt and protecting Social Security and Medicare. I am one who favors making investments in people, for making sure that there is opportunity for all, quality education for all our children and young people, quality and affordable housing, that we honor our commitments to our veterans, that we reform mental health and achieve parity for mental health and addiction treatment services, that we help women out of domestic violence. And that we make sure that the senior citizens who built this country are able to afford prescription drugs.

Everyone in Congress knows there is a need for more affordable prescription drugs. Everyone in Congress knows that the surplus is large enough to afford both a fair tax cut and better prescription drug coverage for seniors. The surplus is largely thanks to sound budget decisions made in the early 1990s, which promoted economic growth and greatly expanded tax revenues. Those surpluses now make it not only possible, but imperative that we address the prescription drug cost crisis. We must remember that Congress also made mistakes during the 1990s. The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 brought cuts in Medicare spending, cuts that I opposed and that will total over $600 billion. It is only fair, now that there is a surplus, to return those cuts in health care spending back into the health care system where there is need. And I don't have to tell colleagues about the need. We all know it from our own families and our constituents.

When Medicare was first enacted in 1965 the program "mimicked" typical private insurance which often did not include outpatient prescription drugs. Times have changed, but in that regard Medicare has not. Virtually all employment based insurance now includes outpatient prescription drug coverage. Fully 99 percent of state and local government employees have this coverage. The federal employees program requires all plans to cover out patient prescription drugs, and Medicaid in every state does the same. Its time to bring Medicare up to date with a prescription drug plan available to all beneficiaries.

You don't have to tell people that prescription drugs are the largest out-of-pocket health care cost for seniors. They know. Over 85 percent of Medicare beneficiaries take at least one prescription medicine, and the average senior citizen fills eighteen prescriptions per year. Nationally, more than half of the cost of these drugs comes directly out of seniors' pockets. In Minnesota the number is even higher. Seniors who cannot afford drug coverage often do not take the drugs their doctors prescribe. One of every eight senior citizens at some time is forced to choose between buying food and buying medicine. That's not right.

Charles Van Guilder, a Minnesota senior, was faced with the devastating option of having to divorce his wife in order to protect their assets which might be stripped away by high-rising Medicare HMO costs. Struggling with Parkinson's Disease, she was faced with an $850 monthly charge for prescription drugs and home health premiums.

Rose Grigsby was faced with a choice of living in Arizona where because of disparities in Medicare + Choice reimbursements she paid $17.50 a month for her healthcare including prescription drugs and even a health club membership and moving back home to Minnesota where she would have to pay $270 a month for 80 percent drug coverage. Despite wanting to be with family, she couldn't afford to move. Where's the fairness in that? It is time we add prescription drug coverage to Medicare so it is available on an equal basis to every senior in every state.

The drug industry America's most profitable has never wanted a prescription drug benefit included in Medicare. The industry is interested in protecting its very large profits. The most recent annual Fortune 500 report on American business showed once again as it has in each of the last 19 years that the pharmaceutical industry ranks first in profits. In the words of the editors of Fortune Magazine, "Whether you gauge profitability by median return on revenues, assets or equity, pharmaceuticals had a Viagra kind of year."

Where the average Fortune 500 industry in the United States returned 5 percent profits as a percentage of revenue, the pharmaceutical industry returned 18.6 percent. Where the average Fortune 500 industry returned 3.8 percent profits as a percentage of their assets, the pharmaceutical industry returned 16.5 percent. Where the average Fortune 500 industry returned 15 percent profits as a percentage of shareholders equity, the pharmaceutical industry returned 36 percent.

The richest pharmaceutical company, Merck, pulled in nearly $6 billion in profits, more than the entire Fortune 500 airline industry and registered twice the profits of the engineering construction industry. The 12 major companies of the pharmaceutical industry made $10 Billion more in total profits than the 24 companies of the motor vehicle and parts industry, including Ford, GM and others.

Those record profits are no surprise to America's senior citizens. Medicare beneficiaries without prescription drug coverage are being gouged every day of the week by a pharmaceutical industry that charges higher prices in the United States than in any other country of the world. So, America's seniors know where those record profits come from—they come from their own pocketbooks.

Year after year, the pharmaceutical industry rakes in record profits, much at the expense of America's most vulnerable citizens: the elderly, frail and ill. The high price of drugs forces seniors to choose between food and life preserving medications. Last year, when a Medicare prescription drug benefit available to all Senior Citizens seemed within reach, the pharmaceutical industry dipped into its coffers and forked over millions of dollars to fund a stealth campaign to defeat any such proposal.

Nowhere in its campaign against a Medicare prescription drug benefit did the pharmaceutical industry tell people that it was the prescription-drug companies that were paying for the campaign. The industry's front organization is called Citizens for Better Medicare. That is like Foxes for Better Chickens. A more accurate description would be Pharmaceutical Companies for Higher Profits. But drug companies would rather hide behind a false shield, count their profits and count the ways they can continue to extract high profits from the American public, especially from the elderly.

Indeed, according to a report from the Boston University School of Public Health, the pharmaceutical industry has encouraged the spread of seven interlocking myths that have "permeated, paralyzed and poisoned" public discourse of prescription drug policy. Let me just share 2 of those myths:

Myth #1: High prices and profits are bestowed on the drug industry by a legitimate and bountiful free market. In reality, little of a free market is present in the world of patented prescription drugs. Today's prices and profits are therefore not justified by a legitimate free market.

Myth #2: If government interferes with today's high price and profits, "The lights go out in the labs, and there is no R&D," according to PhRMA, the drug industry's lobbying arm. As the Boston University researchers noted, that is like saying "give us all of your money or we'll let you die." The researchers call that PhRMA's Fog of Fear. But the reality is the drug makers' profit-maximization is not to increase research. The facts are: Analysis of 1999 data shows that the six major drug makers spent 11 percent of their revenue on research and development, while 16 percent went to profits and 31 percent went to marketing and administration. These data closely parallel those collected in earlier years. Looking at the main task of drug company employees, as of June 1998: Fully 35 percent of drug makers' employees were engaged in marketing, with an additional 13 percent in administration. Producing and developing drugs each occupied only about one-quarter of employees. Looking at changes in employment of PhRMA members, from 1995 to 1999: The number of production workers fell, research workers rose slightly, while marketing employment rose by one-third.

The fact is there is plenty of room for the pharmaceutical industry to make a good profit without gouging the American consumer.

The fact also is that with each passing year, the need for Medicare prescription drug coverage has become more acute. The reasons are well known.

First, the cost of prescription drugs has skyrocketed in recent years. Direct to consumer advertising has increased demand, and drug companies have responded by raising prices and putting life saving drugs even further out of reach of the average senior citizen. Last year alone drug prices increased an estimated 17 percent. And there is no relief in sight. This year drug costs will increase another 18 percent.

Second, these increases hit seniors disproportionately: A 1998 study by the minority staff of the House Government Reform Committee found that older Americans without prescription drug insurance pay on average twice as much as the discounted prices drug companies offer large scale purchasers like HMOs and government agencies. The PRIME Institute, headed by Steve Schondelmeyer, at the University of Minnesota found what Minnesota seniors already know, that pharmaceutical prices overseas are far less than we pay in the United States. Statistics say that for every dollar we spend in the United States, Canadians spend on average just 64 cents; Italians spend just 51 cents; the English 65 cents and Swedes 68 cents. They say statistics often lie. Well, from what I have seen and heard, the drugs seniors need most are even more expensive in the United States than those statistics tell us. Even more astounding than the average figures are some specific comparisons: Synthroid for thyroid disease costs seniors 14 times the discounted price to favored customers; and Micronase for diabetes costs over 3½ times as much. So not only are seniors forced the pay out of pocket for these drugs, but the price they are charged is a national disgrace.

Furthermore, prescription drug spending accounts for 19 percent of the out of pocket costs for senior citizens and is the largest spending category after premium payments. Beneficiaries were projected to spend an average of $480 out-of-pocket on prescription drugs in 2000. Average out-of-pocket prescription drug spending is even higher for beneficiaries in poor health, $685, those without drug coverage, $715, and those who are severely limited in their activities of daily living, $725.

The high cost of drugs puts Americans in all income groups at risk. Of those seniors with incomes below 250 percent of poverty about 38 percent, 7.6 million, lack Rx drug coverage. Of those with higher incomes 28 percent, 5.4 million, have no drug coverage.

The increase in drugs cost and utilization is far outpacing the overall increase in the cost of living. A national study by Brandeis University and PCS Health Systems published in May 2000 found that prescription drug expenditure trends were even higher than previously estimated. They found that: Prescription drug costs grew at an annual rate of 24.8 percent per year from 1996 to 1999. Prescriptions per enrollee grew 14 percent per year. And not surprisingly, the number of prescriptions per person is rising fastest in the 65+ age group, from an average of 16 prescriptions in 1996 to an average of 23 by 1999.

Rural Americans are hardest hit of all. In June 2000 the National Economic Council published a report on prescription drug coverage for rural Medicare beneficiaries. Among its findings: Rural beneficiaries are over 60 percent more likely to fail to get needed prescription drugs due to cost. A greater proportion of rural elderly spend a greater percent of their income on prescription drugs. Rural beneficiaries use nearly 10 percent more prescriptions. Rural beneficiaries pay over 25 percent more out-of-pocket for prescription drugs than urban beneficiaries but they are 50 percent less likely to have any prescription drug coverage.

For Minnesotans, the lack of a Medicare prescription drug benefit hits especially hard because there are few alternatives. Only 19 percent of Minnesota firms offer retiree health insurance and the number has been dropping. Medicare's HMO reimbursement in Minnesota is so low that no basic Medicare Managed Care Plans can include Rx Drug coverage. Even with the increased Medicare + Choice capitation payment floor we voted in last year, it is not enough for these plans to offer prescription drug coverage. When a comprehensive benefit without a cap is available, the costs become prohibitive—up to $130 per month, just for the pharmacy benefit. The cost of prescription drug coverage under the average Medigap policy in Minnesota is $90 per month, and that is only for limited benefits. Because of this, in Minnesota, 65 percent of seniors have no prescription drug coverage. That's twice the national average. But the fact is over half of the Seniors in the United States have either no prescription drug coverage or totally inadequate coverage.

Both the high cost of drugs and lack of coverage have severe consequences. People discontinue their medications against medical advice, thereby placing themselves at risk for problems like heart attacks, cancer recurrence, depression and complications of diabetes. People lower the dose they take to make their prescriptions last longer. When I was in Duluth, Minnesota, meeting with seniors to discuss this very issue, one of my constituents told me about a neighbor who cut his pills in quarters because he couldn't afford to refill the prescription and wound up with an unnecessary hospitalization. People take their medicines as prescribed but then skimp on food and other necessities. Ray Erlandson, a retired steel worker from West Duluth was at that meeting in Duluth. Ray was spending about $300 a month for prescription drugs for he and his wife. He had nearly run out of savings. What does Ray say? "People have to choose between food and buying their drugs. That shouldn't happen in this country. It's a dirty rotten shame. I'd like to ask the VIPs of the drug companies, Do you go to church? Do you know what you are doing to the elderly people?"

How can the richest country on earth force its senior citizens to choose between the medicines they need to survive and the foods they need to stay healthy? We shouldn't allow it. The answer is to provide a prescription drug benefit for all seniors that includes a pricing policy that keeps costs affordable.

In the 1960s when barely half the nation's senior citizens could afford health insurance, and far more were at risk for the loss of their life savings, we as a country responded and created Medicare.

Today, at the beginning of a new century, when only half the nation's seniors—at best—have close to adequate prescription drug coverage, we are again called upon as a nation to respond. The beauty of it all is that we have a surplus that allows us to respond with a prescription drug program that we can all be proud of. The tragedy of it all is that we are not doing it. We have an administration that is more concerned with giving huge tax cuts to the wealthiest 1 percent of Americans than it is with providing the life sustaining medications our seniors need. We have a pharmaceutical industry that is more concerned with maximizing profits and making campaign contributions than it is with maximizing access to life saving medications and making prescription drugs affordable.

The administration's prescription drug proposal is a clear demonstration of just where their priorities are. Republicans want to give $550 billion in tax cuts just to the wealthiest 1 percent of American families, leaving a pittance for Medicare prescription drugs. And the effect of those priorities will be seen in their as yet undisclosed plan: high premiums for beneficiaries; high deductibles, up to $2000; high co-pay; or a benefit available to only a fraction of the seniors who need it. In short, a benefit that isn't worth much. Millions of seniors will be left still holding the bag. You can't provide the kind of Medicare Rx Drug benefit that everyone on Medicare deserves with a tin-cup budget.

Any meaningful prescription drug benefit passed by this Congress should reflect key principles: universality; low cost to beneficiaries; and serious efforts to reduce the price of prescription drugs. To remedy the high cost of prescription drugs and to provide comprehensive coverage, I am proud to introduce the Medicare Extension of Drugs to Seniors, MEDS, Act of 2001.

Specifically, under this proposal, seniors and the disabled would have a 20-percent co-pay on all prescription drugs and a small, $24 monthly premium. Every person would receive the same voluntary benefit, regardless of income or geographical location. Under the MEDS plan, no beneficiary would ever have to spend more than $2,000 out-of-pocket on their medications. Low-income beneficiaries would have no out-of-pocket expense. By contrast, other plans that have been proposed would have seniors paying up to $6,000 a year. Still, they would not necessarily cover everyone currently eligible for Medicare.

How can the MEDS plan provide such a strong benefit without busting the budget? By including provisions which seriously address the outrageously high prices that Americans are forced to pay for prescription drugs.

First, the MEDS plan includes strong, loophole-free language to allow American pharmacists, wholesalers and distributors to purchase FDA-approved prescription drugs at the lower prices charged abroad. Last year, a version of this legislation passed both Houses of Congress with solid bipartisan majorities. Unfortunately, at the last minute, the pharmaceutical industry was successful in adding loopholes to the bill that essentially make it unworkable. With strong reimportation language like that included in the MEDS plan, Americans would save 30-50 percent on the price of prescription drugs without any government subsidy.

Second, the MEDS plan includes a provision, originally proposed by Representative TOM ALLEN, that would permit Medicare beneficiaries to purchase their prescription drugs at the same price other government agencies such as the VA does. MEDS also creates a so-called "global budget" which would allow Medicare to negotiate on behalf of all Medicare beneficiaries and work to restrain costs in the long term.

Finally, the MEDS plan would ensure that when taxpayers foot the bill for research and development of a prescription drug, the pharmaceutical industry must offer that drug at a fair and reasonable price. Today, the federal government spends billions of dollars a year on research and development of medicines. Most often, this R&D is then given over to the pharmaceutical industry, which charges Americans any price they want for the final product. If we change this absurd system, we would ensure that new medicines would be affordable in the years ahead.

You can expect the pharmaceutical industry to protest loudly. And you can expect the industry to increase its campaign contributions, which totaled $19 million last year alone, its lobbying spending, which reached $91 million in 1999, and its advertising budget.

It is interesting. One pharmaceutical company executive recently said that no senior citizen should be forced to choose between his or her prescription and other vital needs. But the high prices his company charges and the high-priced lobbyists who do its bidding on Capitol Hill are forcing that very choice on many senior citizens. While paying lip service to seniors, according to a published news story, that same executive was earning over $6 million in salary, plus stock options worth more than $10 million.

The drug companies will say that reductions in price will dry up research. I believe that is nonsense. Drug companies put billions more dollars into profits, marketing and administration than they do into research, based on information in their own annual reports. Just how hard would this most profitable of American industries be hit if we enacted a universal Medicare prescription drug benefit that required the drug companies to offer seniors the best price they now offer other Federal government programs? According to Merrill Lynch, only by about 3 percent.

In a June 23, 1999 report entitled A Medicare Drug Benefit: May Not Be So Bad, Merrill Lynch debunked the notion that a Medicare prescription drug benefit would seriously damage the pharmaceutical industry's profitability. Merrill Lynch's analysis concludes that the toughest proposal on the table in Washington, the Prescription Drug Fairness for Seniors Act, (The Allen Bill), the provisions of which are included in this bill, and which provides a 40 percent discount on drug costs for all 39 million Medicare beneficiaries, would cut just 3.3 percent from total pharmaceutical industry revenues because volume increases would offset much of the lost revenue due to the lower prices. According to Merrill Lynch: Volume is more important than price in driving pharmaceutical company sales growth. Between 1994 and 1998, the impact of volume on sales growth outpaced price by better than a 4-to-1 ratio. Medicare beneficiaries who either lack or have inadequate drug coverage underutilize prescription drugs because they cannot afford them. With a 40-percent price discount, the one-third of beneficiaries who lack any drug coverage would increase their consumption by 45 percent, and the two-thirds with some coverage would see a 10-percent increase in drug purchases. This increased utilization reduces the lost revenue that would otherwise result from a 40-percent price discount for Medicare beneficiaries by almost one-half. Without adjusting for volume increases, a 40-percent price discount for Medicare beneficiaries would reduce total pharmaceutical industry revenues by 5.9 percent. But after adjusting for increased utilization, the net drop in sales is just 3.3 percent. And that is from just a reduction in price, not an increase in coverage. If you factor in the coverage provided by the MEDS Act which all Seniors will have, drug company revenues will increase.

It is time to get our priorities straight. Millions of hard-working Americans go to work every day and pay their taxes so that when they hit 65, they can retire in a country they can be proud of, a country that offers basic security for all an even better life for their children. Each day they read in the paper about scientific breakthroughs: the genome project and new advances in the treatment of cancer, heart disease, and diabetes, all being carried out at the National Institutes of Health, one of our nation's jewels. They turn on the television and see drug company advertisements that extol new and expensive medications. But what good is that medical research and those expensive drugs if they are unaffordable and out of reach of millions of Americans. That is the situation we have today. And it is unacceptable!

The time has come to support a comprehensive, affordable, 20-percent copay, $2000-cap, prescription drug benefit for all seniors, a plan that does not favor the health insurance or pharmaceutical industries over our own parents and grandparents. The MEDS Act provides such a benefit, and I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 925

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Extension of Drugs to Seniors (MEDS) Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Prescription medicine coverage was not a standard part of health insurance when the medicare program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act was enacted in 1965. Since 1965, however, medicine coverage has become a key component of most private and public health insurance coverage, except for the medicare program.

(2) At least ⅓ of medicare beneficiaries have unreliable, inadequate, or no medicine coverage at all.

(3) Seniors who do not have medicine coverage typically pay, at a minimum, 15 percent more than people with coverage.

(4) Medicare beneficiaries at all income levels lack prescription medicine coverage, with more than 1/2 of such beneficiaries having incomes greater than 150 percent of the poverty line.

(5) The number of private firms offering retiree health coverage is declining.

(6) Medigap premiums for medicines are too expensive for most beneficiaries and are highest for older senior citizens, who need prescription medicine coverage the most and typically have the lowest incomes.

(7) All medicare beneficiaries should have access to a voluntary, reliable, affordable, and defined outpatient medicine benefit as part of the medicare program that assists with the high cost of prescription medicines and protects them against excessive out-of-pocket costs.

SEC. 3. PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE BENEFIT PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XVIII of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating part D as part E; and
(2) by inserting after part C the following new part:

“PART D—PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE BENEFIT FOR THE AGED AND DISABLED “ESTABLISHMENT OF PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE BENEFIT PROGRAM FOR THE AGED AND DISABLED

“SEC. 1860. There is established a voluntary insurance program to provide prescription medicine benefits, including pharmacy services, in accordance with the provisions of this part for individuals who are aged or disabled or have end-stage renal disease and who elect to enroll under such program, to be financed from premium payments by enrollees together with contributions from funds appropriated by the Federal Government.

“SCOPE OF BENEFITS

“SEC. 1860A. (a) IN GENERAL.—The benefits provided to an individual enrolled in the insurance program under this part shall consist of—

“(1) payments made, in accordance with the provisions of this part, for covered prescription medicines (as specified in subsection (b)) dispensed by any pharmacy participating in the program under this part (and, in circumstances designated by the Secretary, by a nonparticipating pharmacy), including any specifically named medicine prescribed for the individual by a qualified health care professional regardless of whether the medicine is included in any formulary established under this part if such medicine is certified as medically necessary by such health care professional (except that the Secretary shall encourage to the maximum extent possible the substitution and use of lower-cost generics), up to the benefit limits specified in section 1860B; and

“(2) charging by pharmacies of the negotiated price—

“(A) for all covered prescription medicines, without regard to such benefit limit; and “(B) established with respect to any drugs or classes of drugs described in subparagraphs (A), (B), (D), (E), or (F) of section 1927(d)(2) that are available to individuals receiving benefits under this title.

“(b) COVERED PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Covered prescription medicines, for purposes of this part, include all prescription medicines (as defined in section 1860K(1)), including smoking cessation agents, except as otherwise provided in this subsection.

“(2) EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE.—Covered prescription medicines shall not include drugs or classes of drugs described in subparagraphs (A) through (D) and (F) through (H) of section 1927(d)(2) unless—

“(A) specifically provided otherwise by the Secretary with respect to a drug in any of such classes; or “(B) a drug in any of such classes is certified to be medically necessary by a health care professional.

“(3) EXCLUSION OF PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES TO THE EXTENT COVERED UNDER PART A OR B.—A medicine prescribed for an individual that would otherwise be a covered prescription medicine under this part shall not be so considered to the extent that payment for such medicine is available under part A or B, including all injectable drugs and biologicals for which payment was made or should have been made by a carrier under section 1861(s)(2) (A) or (B) as of the date of enactment of the Medicare Extension of Drugs to Seniors (MEDS) Act of 2001. Medicines otherwise covered under part A or B shall be covered under this part to the extent that benefits under part A or B are exhausted.

“(4) STUDY ON INCLUSION OF HOME INFUSION THERAPY SERVICES.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the Medicare Extension of Drugs to Seniors (MEDS) Act of 2001, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a legislative proposal for the delivery of home infusion therapy services under this title and for a system of payment for such a benefit that coordinates items and services furnished under part B and under this part.

“PAYMENT OF BENEFITS; BENEFIT LIMITS

“SEC. 1860B. (a) PAYMENT OF BENEFITS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be paid from the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account within the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund, in the case of each individual who is enrolled in the insurance program under this part and who purchases covered prescription medicines in a calendar year—

“(A) with respect to costs incurred for covered prescription medicine furnished during a year, before the individual has incurred out-of-pocket expenses under this subsection equal to the catastrophic out-of-pocket limit specified in subsection (b), an amount equal to the applicable percentage (specified in paragraph (2)) of the negotiated price for each such covered prescription medicine or such higher percentage as is proposed under section 1860G(b)(7); and

“(B) with respect to costs incurred for covered prescription medicine furnished during a year, after the individual has incurred out-of-pocket expenses under this subsection equal to the catastrophic out-of-pocket limit specified in subsection (b), an amount equal to 100 percent of the negotiated price for each such covered prescription medicine.

“(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—The applicable percentage specified in this paragraph is 80 percent or such higher percentage as is proposed under section 1860G(b)(7), if the Secretary finds that such higher percentage will not increase aggregate costs to the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account.

“(b) CATASTROPHIC LIMIT ON OUT-OF-POCKET EXPENSES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The catastrophic limit on out-of-pocket expenses specified in this subsection for—

“(A) for each of calendar years 2003 and 2004, $2,000; and

“(B) subject to paragraph (2), for calendar year 2005 and each subsequent calendar year is equal to the limit for the preceding year under this paragraph adjusted by the sustainable growth rate percentage (determined under section 1861I(b)) for the year involved.

“(2) ROUNDING.—Any amount determined under paragraph (1)(E) that is not a multiple of $10 shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $10.

“ELIGIBILITY AND ENROLLMENT

“SEC. 1860C. (a) ELIGIBILITY.—Every individual who, in or after 2003, is entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A or enrolled in the medical insurance program under part B is eligible to enroll, in accordance with the provisions of this section, in the insurance program under this part, during an enrollment period prescribed in or under this section, in such manner and form as may be prescribed by regulations.

“(b) ENROLLMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each individual who satisfies subsection (a) shall be enrolled (or eligible to enroll) in the program under this part in accordance with the provisions of section 1837, as if that section applied to this part, except as otherwise explicitly provided in this part.

“(2) SINGLE ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—Except as provided in section 1837(i) (as such section applies to this part), 1860E, or 1860H(e), or as otherwise explicitly provided, no individual shall be entitled to enroll in the program under this part at any time after the initial enrollment period without penalty, and in the case of all other late enrollments, the Secretary shall develop a late enrollment penalty for the individual that fully recovers the additional actuarial risk involved providing coverage for the individual.

“(3) SPECIAL ENROLLMENT PERIOD FOR 2003.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—An individual who first satisfies subsection (a) in 2003 may, at any time on or before December 31, 2003—

“(i) enroll in the program under this part; and “(ii) enroll or reenroll in such program after having previously declined or terminated enrollment in such program.

“(B) EFFECTIVE DATE OF COVERAGE.—An individual who enrolls under the program under this part pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be entitled to benefits under this part beginning on the first day of the month following the month in which such enrollment occurs.

“(c) PERIOD OF COVERAGE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this part, an individual's coverage under the program under this part shall be effective for the period provided in section 1838, as if that section applied to the program under this part.

“(2) PART D COVERAGE TERMINATED BY TERMINATION OF COVERAGE UNDER PARTS A AND B.—In addition to the causes of termination specified in section 1838, an individual's coverage under this part shall be terminated when the individual retains coverage under neither the program under part A nor the program under part B, effective on the effective date of termination of coverage under part A or (if later) under part B.

“PREMIUMS

“SEC. 1860D. (a) ANNUAL ESTABLISHMENT OF MONTHLY PREMIUM RATES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, during September of 2002 and of each succeeding year, determine and promulgate a monthly premium rate for the succeeding year in accordance with the provisions of this subsection.

“(2) INITIAL PREMIUMS.—For months in 2003, the monthly premium rate under this subsection shall be—

“(A) $24, in the case of premiums paid by an individual enrolled in the program under this part; and “(B) $32, in the case of premiums paid for such an individual by a former employer (as defined in section 1860H(f)(2)).

“(3) SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For months in a year after 2003, the monthly premium under this subsection shall be (subject to subparagraph (B)) the monthly premium (computed under this subsection without regard to subparagraph (B)) for the previous year increased by the annual percentage increase in average per capita aggregate expenditures for covered outpatient medicines in the United States for medicare beneficiaries, as estimated and published by the Secretary in September before the year and for the year involved.

“(B) ROUNDING.—The monthly premium determined under subparagraph (A) shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of 10 cents if it is not a multiple of 10 cents.

“(b) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—

“(1) PAYMENTS BY DEDUCTION FROM SOCIAL SECURITY, RAILROAD RETIREMENT BENEFITS, OR BENEFITS ADMINISTERED BY OPM.—

“(A) DEDUCTION FROM BENEFITS.—In the case of an individual who is entitled to or receiving benefits as described in subsection (a), (b), or (d) of section 1840, premiums payable under this part shall be collected by deduction from such benefits at the same time and in the same manner as premiums payable under part B are collected pursuant to section 1840.

“(B) TRANSFERS TO PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE INSURANCE ACCOUNT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, but not less often than quarterly, transfer premiums collected pursuant to subparagraph (A) to the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account from the appropriate funds and accounts described in subsections (a)(2), (b)(2), and (d)(2) of section 1840, on the basis of the certifications described in such subsections. The amounts of such transfers shall be appropriately adjusted to the extent that prior transfers were too great or too small.

“(2) DIRECT PAYMENTS TO SECRETARY.—

“(A) ADDITIONAL PAYMENT BY ENROLLEE.—An individual to whom paragraph (1) applies (other than an individual receiving benefits as described in section 1840(d)) and who estimates that the amount that will be available for deduction under such paragraph for any premium payment period will be less than the amount of the monthly premiums for such period may (under regulations) pay to the Secretary the estimated balance, or such greater portion of the monthly premium as the individual chooses.

“(B) PAYMENTS BY OTHER ENROLLEES.—An individual enrolled in the insurance program under this part with respect to whom none of the preceding provisions of this subsection applies (or to whom section 1840(c) applies) shall pay premiums to the Secretary at such times and in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe.

“(C) DEPOSIT OF PREMIUMS.—Amounts paid to the Secretary under this paragraph shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account in the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund.

“(c) CERTAIN LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS.—For rules concerning premiums for certain low-income individuals, see section 1860E.

“SPECIAL ELIGIBILITY, ENROLLMENT, AND CO-PAYMENT RULES FOR LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS

“SEC. 1860E. (a) STATE AGREEMENTS FOR COVERAGE.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, at the request of a State, enter into an agreement with the State under which all individuals described in paragraph (2) are enrolled in the program under this part, without regard to whether any such individual has previously declined the opportunity to enroll in such program.

“(2) ELIGIBILITY GROUPS.—The individuals described in this paragraph, for purposes of paragraph (1), are individuals who satisfy section 1860C(a) and who are—

“(A)(i) eligible individuals within the meaning of section 1843; and “(ii) in a coverage group or groups permitted under section 1843 (as selected by the State and specified in the agreement); or “(B) qualified medicare medicine beneficiaries (as defined in subsection (e)(1)).

“(3) COVERAGE PERIOD.—The period of coverage under this part of an individual enrolled under an agreement under this subsection shall be as follows:

“(A) INDIVIDUALS ELIGIBLE (AT STATE OPTION) FOR PART B BUY-IN.—In the case of an individual described in subsection (a)(2)(A), the coverage period shall be the same period that applies (or would apply) pursuant to section 1843(d).

“(B) QUALIFIED MEDICARE MEDICINE BENEFICIARIES.—In the case of an individual described in subsection (a)(2)(B)—

“(i) the coverage period shall begin on the latest of—

“(I) January 1, 2003;

“(II) the first day of the third month following the month in which the State agreement is entered into; or

“(III) the first day of the first month following the month in which the individual satisfies section 1860C(a); and “(ii) the coverage period shall end on the last day of the month in which the individual is determined by the State to have become ineligible for medicare medicine cost-sharing.

“(4) ALTERNATIVE ENROLLMENT METHODS.—In the process of enrolling low-income individuals under this part, the Secretary shall use the system provided under section 154 of the Social Security Act Amendments of 1994 for newly eligible medicare beneficiaries and shall apply a similar system for other medicare beneficiaries. Such system shall use existing Federal Government databases to identify eligibility. Such system shall not require that beneficiaries apply for, or enroll through, State medicaid systems in order to obtain low-income assistance described in this section.

“(b) SPECIAL PART D ENROLLMENT OPPORTUNITY FOR INDIVIDUALS LOSING MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY.—In the case of an individual who—

“(1) satisfies section 1860C(a); and

“(2) loses eligibility for benefits under the State plan under title XIX after having been enrolled under such plan or having been determined eligible for such benefits; the Secretary shall provide an opportunity for enrollment under the program under this part during the period that begins on the date that such individual loses such eligibility and ends on the date specified by the Secretary.

“(c) STATE OPTION TO BUY-IN DUALY ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—

“(1) COVERAGE OF PREMIUMS AS MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—For purposes of applying the second sentence of section 1905(a), any reference to premiums under part B shall be considered to include a reference to premiums under this part.

“(2) STATE COMMITMENT TO CONTINUE PARTICIPATION IN PART D AFTER BENEFIT LIMIT REACHED.—As a condition of additional funding to a State under subsection (d), the State, in its State plan under title XIX, shall provide that in the case of any individual whose eligibility for medical assistance under title XIX is not limited to medicare cost-sharing and for whom the State elects to pay premiums under this part pursuant to this section, the State will purchase all prescription medicines for such individual in accordance with the provisions of this part without regard to whether the benefit limit for such individual under section 1860B(b) has been reached.

“(3) MEDICARE COST-SHARING REQUIRED FOR QUALIFIED MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.—In applying title XIX, the term ‘medicare cost-sharing’ (as defined in section 1905(p)(3)) is deemed to include—

“(A) premiums under section 1860D; and

“(B) the difference between the amount that is paid under section 1860B and the amount that would be paid under such section if any reference to ‘80 percent’ in subsection (a)(2) of such section were deemed a reference to ‘100 percent’ (or, if the Secretary approves a higher percentage under such section, if such percentage were deemed to be 100 percent).

“(d) PAYMENT TO STATES FOR COVERAGE OF CERTAIN MEDICARE COST-SHARING.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide for payment under this subsection to each State that provides for—

“(A) medicare cost-sharing described in section 1905(p)(3)(A)(ii) for individuals who would be qualified medicare beneficiaries described in section 1905(p)(1) but for the fact that their income exceeds the income level established by the State under section 1905(p)(2) and is at least 120 percent, but less than 135 percent, of the official poverty line (referred to in such section) for a family of the size involved and who are not otherwise eligible for medical assistance under the State plan; and

“(B) medicare medicine cost-sharing (as defined in subsection (e)(2)) for qualified medicare medicine beneficiaries described in subsection (e)(1).

“(2) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—The amount of payment under paragraph (1) shall equal 100 percent of the cost-sharing described in such paragraph, except that, in the case of an individual whose eligibility for medical assistance under title XIX is not limited to medicare cost-sharing or medicare medicine cost-sharing, the amount of payment under paragraph (1)(B) shall be equal to the Federal medical assistance percentage described in section 1905(b)) of amounts as expended for such cost-sharing.

“(3) METHOD OF PAYMENT; RELATION TO OTHER PAYMENTS.—Amounts shall be paid to States under this subsection in a manner similar to that provided under section 1903(d). Payments under this subsection shall be made in lieu of any payments that otherwise may be made for medical assistance provided under section 1902(a)(10)(E)(iv).

“(4) TREATMENT OF TERRITORIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), this subsection shall not apply to States other than the 50 States and the District of Columbia.

“(B) PAYMENTS.—In the case of a State (other than the 50 States and the District of Columbia) that develops and implements a plan of assistance for pharmaceuticals provided to low-income medicare beneficiaries, the Secretary shall provide for payment to the State in an amount that is reasonable in relation to the payment levels provided to other States under paragraph (2).

“(e) DEFINITIONS; SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) QUALIFIED MEDICARE MEDICINE BENEFICIARY.—The term ‘qualified medicare medicine beneficiary’ means an individual—

“(A) who is entitled to hospital insurance benefits under part A (including an individual entitled to such benefits pursuant to an enrollment under section 1818, but not including an individual entitled to such benefits only pursuant to an enrollment under section 1818A);

“(B) whose income (as determined under section 1612 for purposes of the supplemental security income program, except as provided in section 1905(p)(2)(D)) is above 100 percent but below 150 percent of the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved; and

“(C) whose resources (as determined under section 1613 for purposes of the supplemental security income program) do not exceed twice the maximum amount of resources that an individual may have and obtain benefits under that program.

“(2) MEDICARE MEDICINE COST-SHARING.—The term ‘medicare medicine cost-sharing’ means the following costs incurred with respect to a qualified medicare medicine beneficiary, without regard to whether the costs incurred were for items and services for which medical assistance is otherwise available under a State plan under title XIX:

“(A) In the case of a qualified medicare medicine beneficiary whose income (as determined under paragraph (1)) is less than 135 percent of the official poverty line—

“(i) premiums under section 1860D; and

“(ii) the difference between the amount that is paid under section 1860B and the amount that would be paid under such section if any reference to ‘50 percent’ therein were deemed a reference to ‘100 percent’ (or, if the Secretary approves a higher percentage under such section, if such percentage were deemed to be 100 percent).

“(B) In the case of a qualified medicare medicine beneficiary whose income (as determined under paragraph (1)) is at least 135 percent but less than 150 percent of the official poverty line, a percentage of premiums under section 1860D, determined on a linear sliding scale ranging from 100 percent for individuals with incomes at 135 percent of such line to 0 percent for individuals with incomes at 150 percent of such line.

“(3) STATE.—The term ‘State’ has the meaning given such term under section 1101(a) for purposes of title XIX.

“(4) TREATMENT OF DRUGS PURCHASED.—The provisions of section 1927 shall not apply to prescription drugs purchased under this part pursuant to an agreement with the Secretary under this section (including any drugs so purchased after the limit under section 1860B(b) has been exceeded).

“PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE INSURANCE ACCOUNT

“SEC. 1860F. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is created within the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund established by section 1841 an account to be known as the ‘Prescription Medicine Insurance Account’ (in this section referred to as the ‘Account’).

“(b) AMOUNTS IN ACCOUNT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Account shall consist of—“(A) such amounts as may be deposited in, or appropriated to, such fund as provided in this part; and “(B) such gifts and bequests as may be made as provided in section 201(i)(1).

“(2) SEPARATION OF FUNDS.—Funds provided under this part to the Account shall be kept separate from all other funds within the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund.

“(c) PAYMENTS FROM ACCOUNT.—The Managing Trustee shall pay from time to time from the Account such amounts as the Secretary certifies are necessary to make the payments provided for by this part, and the payments with respect to administrative expenses in accordance with section 201(g).

“ADMINISTRATION OF BENEFITS

“SEC. 1860G. (a) THROUGH HCFA.—The Secretary shall provide for administration of the benefits under this part through the Health Care Financing Administration in accordance with the provisions of this section. The Administrator of such Administration may enter into contracts with carriers to administer this part in the same manner as the Administrator enters into such contracts to administer part B. Any such contract shall be separate from any contract under section 1842.

“(b) ADMINISTRATION FUNCTIONS.—In carrying out this part, the Administrator (or a carrier under a contract with the Administrator) shall (or in the case of the function described in paragraph (9), may) perform the following functions:

“(1) PARTICIPATION AGREEMENTS, PRICES, AND FEES.—

“(A) NEGOTIATED PRICES.—Establish, through negotiations with medicine manufacturers and wholesalers and pharmacies, a schedule of prices for covered prescription medicines.

“(B) AGREEMENTS WITH PHARMACIES.—Enter into participation agreements under subsection (c) with pharmacies, that include terms that—“(i) secure the participation of sufficient numbers of pharmacies to ensure convenient access (including adequate emergency access);

“(ii) permit the participation of any pharmacy in the service area that meets the participation requirements described in subsection (c); and “(iii) allow for reasonable dispensing and consultation fees for pharmacies.

“(C) LISTS OF PRICES AND PARTICIPATING PHARMACIES.—Ensure that the negotiated prices established under subparagraph (A) and the list of pharmacies with agreements under subsection (c) are regularly updated and readily available to health care professionals authorized to prescribe medicines, participating pharmacies, and enrolled individuals.

“(2) TRACKING OF COVERED ENROLLED INDIVIDUALS.—Maintain accurate, updated records of all enrolled individuals (other than individuals enrolled in a plan under part C).

“(3) PAYMENT AND COORDINATION OF BENEFITS.—

“(A) PAYMENT.—

“(i) Administer claims for payment of benefits under this part and encourage, to the maximum extent possible, use of electronic means for the submissions of claims.

“(ii) Determine amounts of benefit payments to be made.

“(iii) Receive, disburse, and account for funds used in making such payments, including through the activities specified in the provisions of this paragraph.

“(B) COORDINATION.—Coordinate with other private benefit providers, pharmacies, and other relevant entities as necessary to ensure appropriate coordination of benefits with respect to enrolled individuals, including coordination of access to and payment for covered prescription medicines according to an individual’s in-service area plan provisions, when such individual is traveling outside the home service area, and under such other circumstances as the Secretary may specify.

“(C) EXPLANATION OF BENEFITS.—Furnish to enrolled individuals an explanation of benefits in accordance with section 1806(a), and a notice of the balance of benefits remaining for the current year, whenever prescription medicine benefits are provided under this part (except that such notice need not be provided more often than monthly).

“(4) RULES RELATING TO PROVISION OF BENEFITS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In providing benefits under this part, the Secretary (directly or through contracts) shall employ mechanisms to provide benefits economically, including the use of—

“(i) formularies (consistent with subparagraph (B));

“(ii) automatic generic medicine substitution (unless the physician specifies otherwise, in which case a 30-day prescription may be dispensed pending a consultation with the physician on whether a generic substitute can be dispensed in the future);

“(iii) tiered copayments (which may include copayments at a rate lower than 20 percent) to encourage the use of the lowest cost, on-formulary product in cases where there is no restrictive prescription (described in subparagraph (D)(i)); and “(iv) therapeutic interchange.

“(B) REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO FORMULARIES.—If a formulary is used to contain costs under this part—

“(i) use an advisory committee (or a therapeutics committee) comprised of licensed practicing physicians, pharmacists, and other health care practitioners to develop and manage the formulary;

“(ii) include in the formulary at least 1 medicine from each therapeutic class and, if available, a generic equivalent thereof; and

“(iii) disclose to current and prospective enrollees and to participating providers and pharmacies, the nature of the formulary restrictions, including information regarding the medicines included in the formulary and any difference in cost-sharing amounts.

“(C) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent the Secretary (directly or through contracts) from using incentives (including a lower beneficiary coinsurance) to encourage enrollees to select generic or other cost-effective medicines, so long as—“(i) such incentives are designed not to result in any increase in the aggregate expenditures under the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund;

“(ii) the average coinsurance charged to all beneficiaries by the Secretary (directly or through contractors) shall seek to approximate (but in no case exceed) 20 percent for on-formulary medicines;

“(iii) a beneficiary’s coinsurance shall be no greater than 20 percent if the prescription is a restrictive prescription; and

“(iv) the reimbursement for a prescribed nonformulary medicine without a restrictive prescription in no case shall be more than the lowest reimbursement for a formulary medicine in the therapeutic class of the prescribed medicine.

“(D) RESTRICTIVE PRESCRIPTION.—For purposes of this section:

“(i) WRITTEN PRESCRIPTIONS.—In the case of a written prescription for a medicine, it is a restrictive prescription only if the prescription indicates, in the writing of the physician or other qualified person prescribing the medicine and with an appropriate phrase (such as ‘brand medically necessary’) recognized by the Secretary, that a particular medicine product must be dispensed based upon a belief by the physician or person prescribing the medicine that the particular medicine will provide even marginally superior therapeutic benefits to the individual for whom the medicine is prescribed or would have marginally fewer adverse reactions with respect to such individual.

“(ii) TELEPHONE PRESCRIPTIONS.—In the case of a prescription issued by telephone for a medicine, it is a restrictive prescription only if the prescription cannot be longer than 30 days and the physician or other qualified person prescribing the medicine (through use of such an appropriate phrase) states that a particular medicine product must be dispensed, and the physician or other qualified person submits to the pharmacy involved, within 30 days after the date of the telephone prescription, a written confirmation from the physician or other qualified person prescribing the medicine and which indicates with such appropriate phrase that the particular medicine product was required to have been dispensed based upon a belief by the physician or person prescribing the medicine that the particular medicine will provide even marginally superior therapeutic benefits to the individual for whom the medicine is prescribed or would have marginally fewer adverse reactions with respect to such individual. Such written confirmation is required to refill the prescription.

“(iii) REVIEW OF RESTRICTIVE PRESCRIPTIONS.—The advisory committee (established under subparagraph (B)(i)) may decide to review a restrictive prescription and, if so, it may approve or disapprove such restrictive prescription. It may not disapprove such restrictive prescription unless it finds that there is no clinical evidence or peer reviewed medical literature that supports a determination that the particular medicine provides even marginally superior therapeutic benefits to the individual for whom the medicine is prescribed or would have marginally fewer adverse reactions with respect to such individual. If it disapproves, upon request of the prescribing physician or the enrollee, the committee must provide for a review by an independent contractor of such decision within 48 hours of the time of submission of the prescription, to determine whether the prescription is an eligible benefit under this part. The Secretary shall ensure that independent contractors so used are completely independent of the contractor or its advisory committee.

“(5) COST AND UTILIZATION MANAGEMENT; QUALITY ASSURANCE.—Have in place effective cost and utilization management, drug utilization review, quality assurance measures, and systems to reduce medical errors, including at least the following, together with such additional measures as the Administrator may specify:

“(A) DRUG UTILIZATION REVIEW.—A drug utilization review program conforming to the standards provided in section 1927(g)(2) (with such modifications as the Administrator finds appropriate).

“(B) FRAUD AND ABUSE CONTROL.—Activities to control fraud, abuse, and waste, including prevention of diversion of pharmaceuticals to the illegal market.

“(C) MEDICATION THERAPY MANAGEMENT.—“(i) IN GENERAL.—A program of medicine therapy management and medication administration that is designed to assure that covered outpatient medicines are appropriately used to achieve therapeutic goals and reduce the risk of adverse events, including adverse drug interactions.

“(ii) ELEMENTS.—Such program may include—

“(I) enhanced beneficiary understanding of such appropriate use through beneficiary education, counseling, and other appropriate means; and “(II) increased beneficiary adherence with prescription medication regimens through medication refill reminders, special packaging, and other appropriate means.

“(iii) DEVELOPMENT OF PROGRAM IN COOPERATION WITH LICENSED PHARMACISTS.—The program shall be developed in cooperation with licensed pharmacists and physicians.

“(iv) CONSIDERATIONS IN PHARMACY FEES.—There shall be taken into account, in establishing fees for pharmacists and others providing services under the medication therapy management program, the resources and time used in implementing the program.

“(6) EDUCATION AND INFORMATION ACTIVITIES.—Have in place mechanisms for disseminating educational and informational materials to enrolled individuals and health care providers designed to encourage effective and cost-effective use of prescription medicine benefits and to ensure that enrolled individuals understand their rights and obligations under the program.

“(7) BENEFICIARY PROTECTIONS.—

“(A) CONFIDENTIALITY OF HEALTH INFORMATION.—Have in effect systems to safeguard the confidentiality of health care information on enrolled individuals, which comply with section 1106 and with section 552a of title 5, United States Code, and meet such additional standards as the Administrator may prescribe.

“(B) GRIEVANCE AND APPEAL PROCEDURES.—Have in place such procedures as the Administrator may specify for hearing and resolving grievances and appeals, including expedited appeals, brought by enrolled individuals against the Administrator or a pharmacy concerning benefits under this part, which shall include procedures equivalent to those specified in subsections (f) and (g) of section 1852.

“(8) RECORDS, REPORTS, AND AUDITS.—

“(A) RECORDS AND AUDITS.—Maintain adequate records, and afford the Administrator access to such records (including for audit purposes).

“(B) REPORTS.—Make such reports and submissions of financial and utilization data as the Administrator may require taking into account standard commercial practices.

“(9) PROPOSAL FOR ALTERNATIVE COINSURANCE AMOUNT.—

“(A) SUBMISSION.—The Administrator may provide for increased Government cost-sharing for generic prescription medicines, prescription medicines on a formulary, or prescription medicines obtained through mail order pharmacies.

“(B) CONTENTS.—The proposal submitted under subparagraph (A) shall contain evidence that such increased cost-sharing would not result in an increase in aggregate costs to the Account, including an analysis of differences in projected drug utilization patterns by beneficiaries whose cost-sharing would be reduced under the proposal and those making the cost-sharing payments that would otherwise apply.

“(10) OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Meet such other requirements as the Secretary may specify.

The Administrator shall negotiate a schedule of prices under paragraph (1)(A), except that nothing in this sentence shall prevent a carrier under a contract with the Administrator from negotiating a lower schedule of prices for covered prescription medicines.

“(c) PHARMACY PARTICIPATION AGREEMENTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—A pharmacy that meets the requirements of this subsection shall be eligible to enter an agreement with the Administrator to furnish covered prescription medicines and pharmacists' services to enrolled individuals.

“(2) TERMS OF AGREEMENT.—An agreement under this subsection shall include the following terms and requirements:

“(A) LICENSING.—The pharmacy and pharmacists shall meet (and throughout the contract period will continue to meet) all applicable State and local licensing requirements.

“(B) LIMITATION ON CHARGES.—Pharmacies participating under this part shall not charge an enrolled individual more than the negotiated price for an individual medicine as established under subsection (b)(1), regardless of whether such individual has attained the benefit limit under section 1860B(b), and shall not charge an enrolled individual more than the individual's share of the negotiated price as determined under the provisions of this part.

“(C) PERFORMANCE STANDARDS.—The pharmacy and the pharmacist shall comply with performance standards relating to—

“(i) measures for quality assurance, reduction of medical errors, and participation in the drug utilization review program described in subsection (b)(3)(A);

“(ii) systems to ensure compliance with the confidentiality standards applicable under subsection (b)(5)(A); and “(iii) other requirements as the Secretary may impose to ensure integrity, efficiency, and the quality of the program.

“(D) DISCLOSURE OF PRICE OF GENERIC MEDICINE.—A pharmacy participating under this part shall inform an enrollee of the difference in price between generic and non-generic equivalents.

“(d) SPECIAL ATTENTION TO RURAL AND HARD-TO-SERVE AREAS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall ensure that all beneficiaries have access to the full range of pharmaceuticals under this part, and shall give special attention to access, pharmacist counseling, and delivery in rural and hard-to-serve areas (as the Secretary may define by regulation).

“(2) SPECIAL ATTENTION DEFINED.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘special attention’ may include bonus payments to retail pharmacists in rural areas and any other actions the Secretary determines are necessary to ensure full access to rural and hard-to-serve beneficiaries.

“(3) GAO REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the implementation of this part the Comptroller General of the United States shall submit to Congress a report on the access of Medicare beneficiaries to pharmaceuticals and pharmacists' services in rural and hard-to-serve areas under this part together with any recommendations of the Comptroller General regarding any additional steps the Secretary may need to take to ensure the access of medicare beneficiaries to pharmaceuticals and pharmacists' services in such areas under this part.

"(e) INCENTIVES FOR COST AND UTILIZATION MANAGEMENT AND QUALITY IMPROVEMENT.—The Secretary is authorized to include in a contract awarded under subsection (b) with a carrier such incentives for cost and utilization management and quality improvement as the Secretary may deem appropriate, including—

"(1) bonus and penalty incentives to encourage administrative efficiency;

"(2) incentives under which carriers share in any benefit savings achieved;

"(3) risk-sharing arrangements related to initiatives to encourage savings in benefit payments;

"(4) financial incentives under which savings derived from the substitution of generic medicines in lieu of nongeneric medicines are made available to carriers, pharmacies, and the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account; and

"(5) any other incentive that the Secretary deems appropriate and likely to be effective in managing costs or utilization.

"EMPLOYER INCENTIVE PROGRAM FOR EMPLOYMENT-BASED RETIREE MEDICINE COVERAGE

"SEC. 1860H. (a) PROGRAM AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall develop and implement a program under this section called the 'Employer Incentive Program' that encourages employers and other sponsors of employment-based health care coverage to provide adequate prescription medicine benefits to retired individuals and to maintain such existing benefit programs, by subsidizing, in part, the sponsor's cost of providing coverage under qualifying plans.

"(b) SPONSOR REQUIREMENTS.—In order to be eligible to receive an incentive payment under this section with respect to coverage of an individual under a qualified retiree prescription medicine plan (as defined in subsection (f)(3)), a sponsor shall meet the following requirements:

"(1) ASSURANCES.—The sponsor shall—

"(A) annually attest, and provide such assurances as the Secretary may require, that the coverage offered by the sponsor is a qualified retiree prescription medicine plan, and will remain such a plan for the duration of the sponsor's participation in the program under this section; and

"(B) guarantee that it will give notice to the Secretary and covered retirees—

"(i) at least 120 days before terminating its plan; and

"(ii) immediately upon determining that the actuarial value of the prescription medicine benefit under the plan falls below the actuarial value of the insurance benefit under this part.

"(2) OTHER REQUIREMENTS.—The sponsor shall provide such information, and comply with such requirements, including information requirements to ensure the integrity of the program, as the Secretary may find necessary to administer the program under this section.

"(c) INCENTIVE PAYMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A sponsor that meets the requirements of subsection (b) with respect to a quarter in a calendar year shall have payment made by the Secretary on a quarterly basis (to the sponsor or, at the sponsor's direction, to the appropriate employment-based health plan) of an incentive payment, in the amount determined as described in paragraph (2), for each retired individual (or spouse) who—

"(A) was covered under the sponsor's qualified retiree prescription medicine plan during such quarter; and

"(B) was eligible for but was not enrolled in the insurance program under this part.

"(2) AMOUNT OF INCENTIVE.—The payment under this section with respect to each individual described in paragraph (1) for a month shall be equal to 2 percent of the monthly premium amount payable from the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account for an enrolled individual, as set for the calendar year pursuant to section 1860D(a)(2).

"(3) PAYMENT DATE.—The incentive under this section with respect to a calendar quarter shall be payable as of the end of the next succeeding calendar quarter.

"(d) CIVIL MONEY PENALTIES.—A sponsor, health plan, or other entity that the Secretary determines has, directly or through its agent, provided information in connection with a request for an incentive payment under this section that the entity knew or should have known to be false shall be subject to a civil monetary penalty in an amount equal to $2,000 for each false representation plus an amount not to exceed 3 times the total incentive amounts under subsection (c) that were paid (or would have been payable) on the basis of such information.

"(e) PART D ENROLLMENT FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS COVERED BY EMPLOYMENT-BASED RETIREE HEALTH COVERAGE PLANS.—

"(1) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUALS.—An individual shall be given the opportunity to enroll in the program under this part during the period specified in paragraph (2) if—

"(A) the individual declined enrollment in the program under this part at the time the individual first satisfied section 1860C(a);

"(B) at that time, the individual was covered under a qualified retiree prescription medicine plan for which an incentive payment was paid under this section; and

"(C)(i) the sponsor subsequently ceased to offer such plan; or

"(ii) the value of prescription medicine coverage under such plan is reduced below the value of the coverage provided at the time the individual first became eligible to participate in the program under this part.

"(2) SPECIAL ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—An individual described in paragraph (1) shall be eligible to enroll in the program under this part during the 6-month period beginning on the first day of the month in which—

"(A) the individual receives a notice that coverage under such plan has terminated (in the circumstance described in paragraph (1)(C)(i)) or notice that a claim has been denied because of such a termination; or

"(B) the individual received notice of the change in benefits (in the circumstance described in paragraph (1)(C)(ii)).

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) EMPLOYMENT-BASED RETIREE HEALTH COVERAGE.—The term 'employment-based retiree health coverage' means health insurance or other coverage of health care costs for retired individuals (or for such individuals and their spouses and dependents) based on their status as former employees or labor union members.

"(2) EMPLOYER.—The term 'employer' has the meaning given to such term by section 3(5) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (except that such term shall include only employers of 2 or more employees).

"(3) QUALIFIED RETIREE PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE PLAN.—The term 'qualified retiree prescription medicine plan' means health insurance coverage included in employment-based retiree health coverage that—

"(A) provides coverage of the cost of prescription medicines whose actuarial value to each retired beneficiary equals or exceeds the actuarial value of the benefits provided to an individual enrolled in the program under this part; and

"(B) does not deny, limit, or condition the coverage or provision of prescription medicine benefits for retired individuals based on age or any health status-related factor described in section 2702(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act.

"(4) SPONSOR.—The term 'sponsor' has the meaning given the term 'plan sponsor' by section 3(16)(B) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

"PROMOTION OF PHARMACEUTICAL RESEARCH ON BREAK-THROUGH MEDICINES WHILE PROVIDING PROGRAM COST CONTAINMENT

"SEC. 1860I. (a) MONITORING EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary shall monitor expenditures under this part. On October 1, 2003, the Secretary shall estimate total expenditures under this part for 2003.

"(b) ESTABLISHMENT OF SUSTAINABLE GROWTH RATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a sustainable growth rate prescription medicine target system for expenditures under this part for each year after 2003.

"(2) INITIAL COMPUTATION.—Such target shall equal the amount of total expenditures estimated for 2003 adjusted by the Secretary's estimate of a sustainable growth rate (in this section referred to as an 'SGR') percentage between 2003 and 2004. Such SGR shall be estimated based on the following:

"(A) Reasonable changes in the cost of production or price of covered pharmaceuticals, but in no event more than the rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index for all urban consumers for the period involved.

"(B) Population enrolled in this part, both in numbers and in average age and severity of chronic and acute illnesses.

"(C) Appropriate changes in utilization of pharmaceuticals, as determined by the Drug Review Board (established under subsection (c)(3)) and based on best estimates of utilization change if there were no direct-to-consumer advertising or promotions to providers.

"(D) Productivity index of manufacturers and distributors.

"(E) Percentage of products with patent and market exclusivity protection versus products without patent protection and changes in the availability of generic substitutes.

"(F) Such other factors as the Secretary may determine are appropriate.

In no event may the sustainable growth rate exceed 120 percent of the estimated per capita growth in total spending under this title.

"(3) COMPUTATION FOR SUBSEQUENT YEARS.—In October of 2004 and each year thereafter, for purposes of setting the SGRs for the succeeding year, the Secretary shall adjust each current year's estimated expenditures by the estimated SGR for the succeeding year, further adjusted for corrections in earlier estimates and the receipt of additional data on previous years spending as follows:

"(A) ERROR ESTIMATES.—An adjustment (up or down) for errors in the estimate of total expenditures under this part for the previous year.

"(B) COSTS.—An adjustment (up or down) for corrections in the cost of production of prescriptions covered under this part between the current calendar year and the previous year.

“(C) TARGET.—An adjustment for any amount (over or under) that expenditures in the current year under this part are estimated to differ from the target amount set for the year. If expenditures in the current year are estimated to be—

“(i) less than the target amount, future target amounts will be adjusted downward; or

“(ii) more than the target amount, the Secretary shall notify all pharmaceutical manufacturers with sales of pharmaceutical prescription medicine products to Medicare beneficiaries under this part, of a rebate requirement (except as provided in this subparagraph) to be deposited in the Federal Medicare Prescription Medicine Trust Fund.

“(D) REBATE DETERMINATION.—The amount of the rebate described in subparagraph (C)(ii) may vary among manufacturers and shall be based on the manufacturer's estimated contribution to the expenditure above the target amount, taking into consideration such factors as—“(i) above average increases in the cost of the manufacturer's product;

“(ii) increases in utilization due to promotion activities of the manufacturer, wholesaler, or retailer;

“(iii) launch prices of new drugs at the same or higher prices as similar drugs already in the marketplace (so-called ‘me too’ or ‘copy-cat’ drugs);

“(iv) the role of the manufacturer in delaying the entry of generic products into the market; and “(v) such other actions by the manufacturer that the Secretary may determine has contributed to the failure to meet the SGR target.

The rebates shall be established under such subparagraph so that the total amount of the rebates is estimated to ensure that the amount the target for the current year is estimated to be exceeded is recovered in lower spending in the subsequent year; except that, no rebate shall be made in any manufacturer's product which the Food and Drug Administration has determined is a breakthrough medicine (as determined under subsection (c)) or an orphan medicine.

“(c) BREAKTHROUGH MEDICINES.—

“(1) DETERMINATION.—For purposes of this section, a medicine is a ‘breakthrough medicine’ if the Drug Review Board (established under paragraph (3)) determines—

“(A) it is a new product that will make a significant and major improvement by reducing physical or mental illness, reducing mortality, or reducing disability; and

“(B) that no other product is available to beneficiaries that achieves similar results for the same condition at a lower cost.

“(2) CONDITION.—An exemption from rebates under subsection (b)(3) for a breakthrough medicine shall continue as long as the medicine is certified as a breakthrough medicine but shall be limited to 7 calendar years from 2003 or 7 calendar years from the date of the initial determination under paragraph (1), whichever is later.

“(3) DRUG REVIEW BOARD.—The Drug Review Board under this paragraph shall consist of the Commissioner of Food and Drugs, the Directors of the National Institutes of Health, the Director of the National Science Foundation, and 10 experts in pharmaceuticals, medical research, and clinical care, selected by the Commissioner of Food and Drugs from the faculty of academic medical centers, except that no person who has (or who has an immediate family member that has) any conflict of interest with any pharmaceutical manufacturer shall serve on the Board.

“(d) NO REVIEW.—The Secretary's determination of the rebate amounts under this section, and the Drug Review Board's determination of what is a breakthrough drug, are not subject to administrative or judicial review.

“APPROPRIATIONS TO COVER GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTIONS

“SEC. 1860J. (a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated from time to time, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account, a Government contribution equal to—

“(1) the aggregate premiums payable for a month pursuant to section 1860D(a)(2) by individuals enrolled in the program under this part; plus

“(2) one-half the aggregate premiums payable for a month pursuant to such section for such individuals by former employers; plus

“(3) the benefits payable by reason of the application of paragraph (2) of section 1860B(a) (relating to catastrophic benefits).

“(b) APPROPRIATIONS TO COVER INCENTIVES FOR EMPLOYMENT-BASED RETIREE MEDICINE COVERAGE.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account from time to time, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for payment of incentive payments under section 1860H(c).

“PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE DEFINED

“SEC. 1860K. As used in this part, the term ‘prescription medicine’ means—

“(1) a drug that may be dispensed only upon a prescription, and that is described in subparagraph (A)(i), (A)(ii), or (B) of section 1927(k)(2); and

“(2) insulin certified under section 506 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, and needles, syringes, and disposable pumps for the administration of such insulin.”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) AMENDMENTS TO FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTARY HEALTH INSURANCE TRUST FUND.—Section 1841 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t) is amended—

(A) in the last sentence of subsection (a)—

(i) by striking “and” after “section 201(i)(1)”;

(ii) by inserting before the period the following: “, and such amounts as may be deposited in, or appropriated to, the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account established by section 1860F”;

(B) in subsection (g), by inserting after “by this part,” the following: “the payments provided for under part D (in which case the payments shall come from the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account in the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund)”;

(C) in the first sentence of subsection (h), by inserting before the period the following: “and section 1860D(b)(4) (in which case the payments shall come from the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account in the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund)”;

(D) in the first sentence of subsection (i)—

(i) by striking “and” after “section 1840(b)(1)”;

(ii) by inserting before the period the following: “, section 1860D(b)(2) (in which case the payments shall come from the Prescription Medicine Insurance Account in the Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund)”.

(2) PRESCRIPTION MEDICINE OPTION UNDER MEDICARE+CHOICE PLANS.—

(A) ELIGIBILITY, ELECTION, AND ENROLLMENT.—Section 1851 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w–21) is amended—

(i) in subsection (a)(1)(A), by striking “parts A and B” and inserting “parts A, B, and D”;

(ii) in subsection (i)(1), by striking “parts A and B” and inserting “parts A, B, and D”.

(B) VOLUNTARY BENEFICIARY ENROLLMENT FOR MEDICINE COVERAGE.—Section 1852(a)(1)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w–22(a)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting “(and under part D to individuals also enrolled under that part)” after “parts A and B”.

(C) ACCESS TO SERVICES.—Section 1852(d)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w–22(d)(1)) is amended—

(i) in subparagraph (D), by striking “and” at the end;

(ii) in subparagraph (E), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”;

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(F) the plan for prescription medicine benefits under part D guarantees coverage of any specifically named covered prescription medicine for an enrollee, when prescribed by a physician in accordance with the provisions of such part, regardless of whether such medicine would otherwise be covered under an applicable formulary or discount arrangement.”.

(D) PAYMENTS TO ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 1853(a)(1)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w–23(a)(1)(A)) is amended—

(i) by inserting “determined separately for benefits under parts A and B and under part D (for individuals enrolled under that part)” after “as calculated under subsection (c)”;

(ii) by striking “that area, adjusted for such risk factors” and inserting “that area. In the case of payment for benefits under parts A and B, such payment shall be adjusted for such risk factors as”;

(iii) by inserting before the last sentence the following: “In the case of the payments for benefits under part D, such payment shall initially be adjusted for the risk factors of each enrollee as the Secretary determines to be feasible and appropriate. By 2006, the adjustments would be for the same risk factors applicable for benefits under parts A and B.”.

(E) CALCULATION OF ANNUAL MEDICARE+CHOICE CAPITATION RATES.—Section 1853(c) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w–23(c)) is amended—

(i) in paragraph (1), in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by inserting “for benefits under parts A and B” after “capitation rate”;

(ii) in paragraph (6)(A), by striking “rate of growth in expenditures under this title” and inserting “rate of growth in expenditures for benefits available under parts A and B”;

(iii) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(8) PAYMENT FOR PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES.—The Secretary shall determine a capitation rate for prescription medicines—

“(A) dispensed in 2003, which is based on the projected national per capita costs for prescription medicine benefits under part D and associated claims processing costs for beneficiaries under the original Medicare fee-for-service program; and

“(B) dispensed in each subsequent year, which shall be equal to the rate for the previous year updated by the Secretary's estimate of the projected per capita rate of growth in expenditures under this title for an individual enrolled under part D.”.

(F) LIMITATION ON ENROLLEE LIABILITY.—Section 1854(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w– 24(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(5) SPECIAL RULE FOR PROVISION OF PART D BENEFITS.—In no event may a Medicare+Choice organization include as part of a plan for prescription medicine benefits under part D a requirement that an enrollee pay a deductible, or a coinsurance percentage that exceeds 20 percent.”.

(G) REQUIREMENT FOR ADDITIONAL BENEFITS.—Section 1854(f)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-24(f)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: “Such determination shall be made separately for benefits under parts A and B and for prescription medicine benefits under part D.”.

(3) EXCLUSIONS FROM COVERAGE.—

(A) APPLICATION TO PART D.—Section 1862(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)) is amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking “part A or part B” and inserting “part A, B, or D”.

(B) PRESCRIPTION MEDICINES NOT EXCLUDED FROM COVERAGE IF APPROPRIATELY PRESCRIBED.—Section 1862(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395y(a)(1)) is amended—

(i) in subparagraph (H), by striking “and” at the end;

(ii) in subparagraph (I), by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting “, and”; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(J) in the case of prescription medicines covered under part D, which are not prescribed in accordance with such part;”.

SEC. 4. SUBSTANTIAL REDUCTIONS IN THE PRICE OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.

(a) PARTICIPATING MANUFACTURERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each participating manufacturer of a covered outpatient drug shall make available for purchase by each pharmacy such covered outpatient drug in the amount described in paragraph (2) at the price described in paragraph (3).

(2) DESCRIPTION OF AMOUNT OF DRUGS.—The amount of a covered outpatient drug that a participating manufacturer shall make available for purchase by a pharmacy is an amount equal to the aggregate amount of the covered outpatient drug sold or distributed by the pharmacy to medicare beneficiaries.

(3) DESCRIPTION OF PRICE.—The price at which a participating manufacturer shall make a covered outpatient drug available for purchase by a pharmacy is the price equal to the lowest of the following:

(A) The lowest price paid for the covered outpatient drug by any agency or department of the United States.

(B) The manufacturer's best price for the covered outpatient drug, as defined in section 1927(c)(1)(C) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-8(c)(1)(C)).

(C) The lowest price at which the drug is available (as determined by the Secretary) through importation consistent with the provisions of section 804 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(b) SPECIAL PROVISION WITH RESPECT TO HOSPICE PROGRAMS.—For purposes of determining the amount of a covered outpatient drug that a participating manufacturer shall make available for purchase by a pharmacy under subsection (a), there shall be included in the calculation of such amount the amount of the covered outpatient drug sold or distributed by a pharmacy to a hospice program. In calculating such amount, only amounts of the covered outpatient drug furnished to a medicare beneficiary enrolled in the hospice program shall be included.

(c) ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to implement this section.

(d) REPORTS TO CONGRESS REGARDING EFFECTIVENESS OF SECTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Secretary shall report to Congress regarding the effectiveness of this section in—

(A) protecting medicare beneficiaries from discriminatory pricing by drug manufacturers; and

(B) making prescription drugs available to medicare beneficiaries at substantially reduced prices.

(2) CONSULTATION.—In preparing such reports, the Secretary shall consult with public health experts, affected industries, organizations representing consumers and older Americans, and other interested persons.

(3) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Secretary shall include in such reports any recommendations they consider appropriate for changes in this section to further reduce the cost of covered outpatient drugs to medicare beneficiaries.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) PARTICIPATING MANUFACTURER.—The term “participating manufacturer” means any manufacturer of drugs or biologicals that, on or after the date of enactment of this Act, enters into a contract or agreement with the United States for the sale or distribution of covered outpatient drugs to the United States.

(2) COVERED OUTPATIENT DRUG.—The term “covered outpatient drug” has the meaning given that term in section 1927(k)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-8(k)(2)).

(3) MEDICARE BENEFICIARY.—The term “medicare beneficiary” means an individual entitled to benefits under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act or enrolled under part B of such title, or both.

(4) HOSPICE PROGRAM.—The term “hospice program” has the meaning given that term under section 1861(dd)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(dd)(2)).

(5) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The Secretary shall implement this section as expeditiously as practicable and in a manner consistent with the obligations of the United States.

SEC. 5. AMENDMENTS TO PROGRAM FOR IMPORTATION OF CERTAIN PRESCRIPTION DRUGS BY PHARMACISTS AND WHOLESALEERS.

Section 804 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (as added by section 745(c)(2) of Public Law 106-387) is amended—

(1) by striking subsections (e) and (f) and inserting the following subsections:

“(e) TESTING; APPROVED LABELING.—

“(1) TESTING.—Regulations under subsection (a)—

“(A) shall require that testing referred to in paragraphs (6) through (8) of subsection (d) be conducted by the importer of the covered product pursuant to subsection (a), or the manufacturer of the product;

“(B) shall require that, if such tests are conducted by the importer, information needed to authenticate the product being tested be supplied by the manufacturer of such product to the importer; and

“(C) shall provide for the protection of any information supplied by the manufacturer under subparagraph (B) that is a trade secret or commercial or financial information that is privileged or confidential.

“(2) APPROVED LABELING.—For purposes of importing a covered product pursuant to subsection (a), the importer involved may use the labeling approved for the product under section 505, notwithstanding any other provision of law.

“(f) DISCRETION OF SECRETARY REGARDING TESTING.—The Secretary may waive or modify testing requirements described in subsection (d) if, with respect to specific countries or specific distribution chains, the Secretary has entered into agreements or otherwise approved arrangements that the Secretary determines ensure that the covered products involved are not adulterated or in violation of section 505.”;

(2) by striking subsections (h) and (i) and inserting the following subsections:

“(h) PROHIBITED AGREEMENTS; NON-DISCRIMINATION.—

“(1) PROHIBITED AGREEMENTS.—No manufacturer of a covered product may enter into a contract or agreement that includes a provision to prevent the sale or distribution of covered products imported pursuant to subsection (a).

“(2) NONDISCRIMINATION.—No manufacturer of a covered product may take actions that discriminate against, or cause other persons to discriminate against, United States pharmacists, wholesalers, or consumers regarding the sale or distribution of covered products.

“(i) STUDY AND REPORT.—

“(1) STUDY.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a study on the imports permitted under this section, taking into consideration the information received under subsection (a). In conducting such study, the Comptroller General shall—

“(A) evaluate importers' compliance with regulations, determine the number of shipments, if any, permitted under this section that have been determined to be counterfeit, misbranded, or adulterated; and

“(B) consult with the United States Trade Representative and United States Patent and Trademark Office to evaluate the effect of importations permitted under this section on trade and patent rights under Federal law.

“(2) REPORT.—Not later than 5 years after the effective date of final regulations issued pursuant to this section, the Comptroller General of the United States shall prepare and submit to Congress a report containing the study described in paragraph (1).”;

(3) in subsection (k)(2)—

(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (E) as subparagraphs (B) through (F), respectively; and

(B) by inserting before subparagraph (B) (as so redesignated) the following subparagraph:

“(A) The term ‘discrimination’ includes a contract provision, a limitation on supply, or other measure which has the effect of providing United States pharmacists, wholesalers, or consumers access to covered products on terms or conditions that are less favorable than the terms or conditions provided to any foreign purchaser of such products.”;

(4) by striking subsection (m); and

(5) by inserting after subsection (l) the following subsection:

“(m) FUNDING.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2002 and each subsequent fiscal year.”.

SEC. 6. REASONABLE PRICE AGREEMENT FOR FEDERALLY FUNDED RESEARCH.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If any Federal agency or any non-profit entity undertakes federally funded health care research and development and is to convey or provide a patent or other exclusive right to use such research and development for a drug or other health care technology, such agency or entity shall not make such conveyance or provide such patent or other right until the person who will receive such conveyance or patent or other right first agrees to a reasonable pricing agreement with the Secretary of Health and Human Services or the Secretary makes a determination that the public interest is served by a waiver of the reasonable pricing agreement provided in accordance with subsection (c).

(b) CONSIDERATION OF COMPETITIVE BIDDING.—In cases where the Federal Government conveys or licenses exclusive rights to federally funded research under subsection (a), consideration shall be given to mechanisms for determining reasonable prices which are based upon a competitive bidding process. When appropriate, the mechanisms should be considered where—

(1) qualified bidders compete on the basis of the lowest prices that will be charged to consumers;

(2) qualified bidders compete on the basis of the least sales revenues before prices are adjusted in accordance with a cost-based reasonable pricing formula;

(3) qualified bidders compete on the basis of the least period of time before prices are adjusted in accordance with a cost-based reasonable pricing formula;

(4) qualified bidders compete on the basis of the shortest period of exclusivity; or

(5) qualified bidders compete under other competitive bidding systems.

Such competitive bidding process may incorporate requirements for minimum levels of expenditures on research, marketing, maximum price, or other factors.

(c) WAIVER.—No waiver shall take effect under subsection (a) before the public is given notice of the proposed waiver and provided a reasonable opportunity to comment on the proposed waiver. A decision to grant a waiver shall set out the Secretary's finding that such a waiver is in the public interest.

SEC. 7. GAO ONGOING STUDIES AND REPORTS ON PROGRAM; MISCELLANEOUS REPORTS.

(a) ONGOING STUDY.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct an ongoing study and analysis of the prescription medicine benefit program under part D of the Medicare program under title XVIII of the Social Security Act (as added by section 3 of this Act), including an analysis of each of the following:

(1) The extent to which the administering entities have achieved volume-based discounts similar to the favored price paid by other large purchasers.

(2) Whether access to the benefits under such program are in fact available to all beneficiaries, with special attention given to access for beneficiaries living in rural and hard-to-serve areas.

(3) The success of such program in reducing medication error and adverse medicine reactions and improving quality of care, and whether it is probable that the program has resulted in savings through reduced hospitalizations and morbidity due to medication errors and adverse medicine reactions.

(4) Whether patient medical record confidentiality is being maintained and safeguarded.

(5) Such other issues as the Comptroller General may consider.

(b) REPORTS.—The Comptroller General shall issue such reports on the results of the ongoing study described in subsection (a) as the Comptroller General shall deem appropriate and shall notify Congress on a timely basis of significant problems in the operation of the part D prescription medicine program and the need for legislative adjustments and improvements.

(c) MISCELLANEOUS STUDIES AND REPORTS.

(1) STUDY ON METHODS TO ENCOURAGE ADDITIONAL RESEARCH ON BREAKTHROUGH PHARMACEUTICALS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall seek the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury on possible tax and trade law changes to encourage increased original research on new pharmaceutical breakthrough products designed to address disease and illness.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on such study. The report shall include recommended methods to encourage the pharmaceutical industry to devote more resources to research and development of new covered products than it devotes to overhead expenses.

(2) STUDY ON PHARMACEUTICAL SALES PRACTICES AND IMPACT ON COSTS AND QUALITY OF CARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct a study on the methods used by the pharmaceutical industry to advertise and sell to consumers and educate and sell to providers.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on such study. The report shall include the estimated direct and indirect costs of the sales methods used, the quality of the information conveyed, and whether such sales efforts leads (or could lead) to inappropriate prescribing. Such report may include legislative and regulatory recommendations to encourage more appropriate education and prescribing practices.

(3) STUDY ON COST OF PHARMACEUTICAL RESEARCH.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct a study on the costs of, and needs for, the pharmaceutical research and the role that the taxpayer provides in encouraging such research.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on such study. The report shall include a description of the full-range of taxpayer-assisted programs impacting pharmaceutical research, including tax, trade, government research, and regulatory assistance. The report may also include legislative and regulatory recommendations that are designed to ensure that the taxpayer's investment in pharmaceutical research results in the availability of pharmaceuticals at reasonable prices.

(4) REPORT ON PHARMACEUTICAL PRICES IN MAJOR FOREIGN NATIONS.—Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to Congress a report on the retail price of major pharmaceutical products in various developed nations, compared to prices for the same or similar products in the United States. The report shall include a description of the principal reasons for any price differences that may exist.

SEC. 8. MEDIGAP TRANSITION PROVISIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no new Medicare supplemental policy that provides coverage of expenses for prescription drugs may be issued under section 1882 of the Social Security Act on or after January 1, 2003, to an individual unless it replaces a Medicare supplemental policy that was issued to that individual and that provided some coverage of expenses for prescription drugs.

(b) ISSUANCE OF SUBSTITUTE POLICIES IF PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE IS OBTAINED THROUGH MEDICARE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The issuer of a Medicare supplemental policy—

(A) may not deny or condition the issuance or effectiveness of a Medicare supplemental policy that has a benefit package classified as "A", "B", "C", "D", "E", "F", or "G" (under the standards established under subsection (p)(2) of section 1882 of the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. 1395ss) and that is offered and is available for issuance to new enrollees by such issuer;

(B) may not discriminate in the pricing of such policy, because of health status, claims experience, receipt of health care, or medical condition; and in the case of an individual described in paragraph (2) who seeks to enroll under the policy not later than 63 days after the date of the termination of enrollment described in such paragraph and who submits evidence of the date of termination or disenrollment along with the application for such Medicare supplemental policy.

(C) may not impose an exclusion of benefits based on a preexisting condition under such policy,

(2) INDIVIDUAL COVERED.—An individual described in this paragraph is an individual who—

(A) enrolls in a prescription drug plan under part D of title XVIII of the Social Security Act; and

(B) at the time of such enrollment was enrolled and terminates enrollment in a Medicare supplemental policy which has a benefit package classified as "H", "I", or "J" under the standards referred to in paragraph (1)(A) or terminates enrollment in a policy to which such standards do not apply but which provides benefits for prescription drugs.

(3) ENFORCEMENT.—The provisions of paragraph (1) shall be enforced as though they were included in section 1882(s) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss(s)).

(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection, the term "Medicare supplemental policy" has the meaning given such term in section 1882(g) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss(g)).

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. HOLINGS, and Mrs. FEINSTEIN):

S. 926. A bill to prohibit the importation of any article that is produced, manufactured, or grown in Burma; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, the people of Burma continue to suffer at the hands of the world's most brutal military dictatorship which cynically calls itself the State Peace and Development Council, (SPDC). Now more than ever, as a nation committed to internationally-recognized human rights and worker rights, democracy, and freedom, America must heed the call of the International Labor Organization, (ILO), and support stronger, coordinated multilateral actions against Burma's repressive regime. In the face of overwhelming evidence of continued, systematic use of forced labor, including forced child labor in Burma, we must do all we can to deny any material support to the military dictators who rule that country with an iron fist.

Furthermore, there is no clear and tangible evidence that the latest informal, closed-door dialogue between the Burmese generals on one side and Aung San Suu Kyi and the other duly-elected leaders of the pro-democracy movement on the other side is bearing fruit. Therefore, we must demonstrate anew to the Burmese people our recognition of their nightmarish plight as well as our support for their noble struggle to achieve democratic governance.

In 1997, a strong, bipartisan majority of the Congress enacted some sanctions and former President Clinton issued an Executive Order in response to a prolonged pattern of egregious human rights violations in Burma. At the heart of those measures is the existing prohibition on U.S. private companies making new investments in Burma's infrastructure. Many other national governments, as well as scores of city and State governments in the U.S. followed suit and adopted their own sanctions.

Nevertheless, the ruling military junta in Burma has clung to power and continues to blatantly violate internationally-recognized human and worker rights. The 1999 State Department Human Rights Country Report on Burma cited "credible reports that Burmese Army soldiers have committed rape, forced portage, and extrajudicial killing." It referred to arbitrary arrests and the detention of at least 1300 political prisoners.

The following excerpts from the most recent 2000 State Department Human Rights Country Report paint an even more disturbing reality:

The Burmese Government's extremely poor human rights record and longstanding severe repression of its citizens continued during the year. Citizens continued to live subject at any time and without appeal to the arbitrary and sometimes brutal dictates of the military regime. Citizens did not have the right to change their government. There continued to be credible reports, particularly in ethnic minority areas, that security forces committed serious human rights abuses, including extrajudicial killings and rape. Disappearances continued, and members of the security forces tortured, beat, and otherwise abused prisoners and detainees.

The judiciary is not independent and there is no effective rule of law.

The Government continued to restrict worker rights, ban unions, and use forced labor for public works and for the support of military garrisons. Forced labor, including forced child labor, remains a serious problem. The use of forced labor as porters by the army—with attendant mistreatment, illness, and sometimes death—remain a common practice. In November, 2000 the International Labor Organization ILO Governing Body judged that the Government had not taken effective action to deal with 'widespread and systematic' use of forced labor in the country and, for the first time in its history, called on all ILO members to apply sanctions to Burma. Child labor is also a problem and varies in severity depending on the country's region. Trafficking in persons, particularly in women and girls to Thailand and China, mostly for the purposes of prostitution, remain widespread.

As of September, 2000, the International Committee of the Red Cross had visited more than 35,000 prisoners in at least 30 prisons, including more than 1,800 political prisoners. The ICRC also has begun tackling the problem of the roughly 36,000 persons in forced labor camps.

The Government continued to infringe on citizens' privacy rights, and security forces continued to monitor citizens' movements and communications systematically, to search homes without warrants, and to relocate persons forcibly without just compensation or due process.

The SPDC continued to restrict severely freedom of speech, press assembly, and association. It has pressured many thousands of members to resign from the National League for Democracy, NLD, and closed party offices nationwide. Since 1990 the junta frequently prevented the NLD and other pro-democracy parties from conducting normal political activities. The junta recognizes the NLD as a legal entity; however, it refuses to accept the legal political status of key NLD party leaders, particularly the party's general secretary and 1991 Nobel Laureate, Aung San Suu Kyi, and restrict her activities severely through security measures and threats.

Furthermore, Human Rights Watch/Asia reports that children from ethnic minorities are forced to work under inhumane conditions for the Burmese Army, lacking adequate medical care and sometimes dying from beatings.

Last year, the UN Special Rapporteur on Burma, in a chilling and alarming account, puts the number of child soldiers at 50,000, the highest in the world. Sadly, the children most vulnerable to recruitment into the military are orphans, street children, and the children of ethnic minorities.

The same UN report also discusses the dire state of minorities in Burma who continue to be the targets of violence. Specifically, it details that the most frequently observed human rights violations aimed at minorities include extortion, rape, torture and other forms of physical abuse, forced labor, "portering", arbitrary arrests, long-term imprisonment, forcible relocation, and in some cases, extrajudicial executions. It also cites reports of massacres in the Shan state in the months of January, February, and May of 2000.

A 1998 International Labor Organization Commission of Inquiry determined that forced labor in Burma is practiced in a "widespread and systematic manner, with total disregard for the human dignity, safety, health and basic needs of the people."

Last August, California District Court Judge Ronald Lew found in one high-profile court case "ample evidence in the record linking the Burmese Government's use of forced labor to human rights abuses."

In sum, the Burmese military junta continues to commit such horrific and appalling human rights and worker rights violations that we have no choice but to unite with other nations around the world and take stronger action.

Even though the Burmese military junta has been terrorizing the 48 million people of Burma since it came to power in 1988 and has vowed to destroy the National League for Democracy, NLD, Aung San Suu Kyi, a remarkably courageous leader and very brave woman, manages to stand steadfast, like a living Statue of Liberty, in her undaunted quest and that of the Burmese people for democracy. We must never forget that she and her NLD colleagues won 392 of 485 seats in a democratic election held in 1990. But they have never been allowed to take office.

Aung San Suu Kyi, the 1991 Nobel Peace Prize winner, and countless others are denied freedom of association, speech and movement on a daily basis. Last summer, she came under renewed threats and intimidation. For example, her vehicle was forced off the road last August by Burmese security forces when she tried to travel outside Rangoon to meet with her NLD colleagues. She sat in her car on the roadside for a week until a midnight raid of 200 riot police forced her back to her home and placed her under house arrest until September 14, 2000. Nevertheless, she tried again on September 21st, but she was prevented from boarding a train. The pathetic excuse from the authorities for abridging her freedom to travel within Burma, on that occasion, was that all tickets had been sold out.

This Congress must answer anew the cry of the Burmese people and their courageous freedom-fighters. That is why I am introducing bipartisan legislation today, along with Senator JESSEE HELMS and several of our colleagues, to ban soaring imports from Burma, most of which are apparel and textiles sold by many brand-name American retailers. I am equally pleased that U.S. Congressman TOM LANTOS from California is introducing the companion bill in the U.S. House of Representatives this week.

Most Americans think that a trade ban with Burma already exists. Nothing could be further from the truth. When I began investigating U.S. trade with Burma last summer in concern with the National Labor Committee, I was chocked and alarmed to discover skyrocketing U.S. apparel and textile imports for example.

Last November I requested cable traffic between the U.S. Embassy in Burma and the U.S. State Department at Foggy Bottom to see exactly what officials in Washington, D.C. knew about soaring imports from Burma. It took nearly four months for me to get this unclassified cable traffic. But now I know why. Its contents are very troubling. It constitutes irrefutable evidence that current U.S. sanctions with Burma are far more apparent than real. They are far more bluster than bite.

Consider the fact that the U.S. Government currently provides the Burmese military junta with very easy access to the U.S. apparel market because 95 percent of their exports are under no practical import restrictions at all.

Due to rising imports of apparel and textiles from Burma alone, more than $400 million dollars are now flowing into the coffers of the Burmese military dictatorship. These ruthless military dictators and their drug-trafficking cohorts are spending this hard currency to purchase more guns from China and to buy loyalty among their troops to continue their policy of extreme repression and human cruelty.

In other words, American consumers are unwittingly helping to sustain the repressive military junta's grip on power when buying travel and sports bags, women's underwear, jumpers, shorts, tank tops and towels made in the Burmese gulag. It is outrageous that many brand-name U.S. apparel companies such as FILA, Jordache, and Arrow Golf are making more and more of their clothes in the Burmese gulag where many workers earn as little as 7 cent/hour or $3.23/week and where production is non-stop—24 hours/day and 7 days/week.

Make no mistake about it. U.S. apparel imports from Burma are providing the SPDC with a growing source of critically-needed hard currency because the military dictators directly own or have taken de facto control of production in many apparel and textile factories. They are further enriched by a 5 percent export tax. As I said earlier, this hard currency is used to finance the purchase of new weapons and ammunition from China and elsewhere, thus helping to underwrite the perpetuation of modern-day slavery, forced labor and forced child labor in Burma.

But you don't have to take my word for it. U Maung Maung, the General Secretary of the Federation of Trade Unions in Burma, decried at a recent news conference in Washington, D.C., that "the practice of purchasing garments made in Burma extends the continued exploitation of my people, including the use of slave labor by the regime, by further delaying the return of democratic government in Burma." At grave personal risk, he and other NLD leaders have disclosed the growing importance of exports to America and other foreign markets in helping sustain the Burmese military junta in power.

Some may question whether a ban on Burmese trade, including apparel and textile imports, might not harm American companies and consumers? Nothing could be further from the truth. Currently, U.S. apparel and textile imports from Burma account for less than one-half of one percent of total U.S. apparel and textile imports.

Others may assert that enactment of this legislation would violate WTO rules. Yes, Burma does belong to the WTO. Accordingly, the SPDC would have the standing technically to bring a formal complaint when this legislation is enacted. But our response to such a development should be bring it on. Let the Burmese generals argue before the WTO that they have the right to export products made by forced labor and child slaves and in flagrant violation of other internationally-recognized worker rights. This would clearly bring into focus the folly of writing rules for global trade that don't include enforceable worker rights, thus compelling workers in civilized trading nations to have to compete for their jobs de facto with forced labor in Burma.

America must answer the clarion call of the ILO and take a stronger stand in solidarity with the Burmese people and in defense of universal human rights and worker rights in that besieged nation. A trade ban with Burma will reaffirm the belief of the American people that increased trade with foreign countries must promote respect for human rights and worker rights as well as property rights. It will also signal American readiness to join in a new and stronger course of coordinated, multilateral action that is designed to force the Burmese generals from power once and for all and to satisfy the yearning of the Burmese people for democratic, self-government.

In closing, I also ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD and that four recent editorials from the Washington Post, the New York Times, and the Boston Globe calling attention to the profound and prolonged suffering of the Burmese people and the need for stronger action in the U.S. and around the world also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 926

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The International Labor Organization (ILO), invoking an extraordinary constitutional procedure for the first time in its 82-year history, adopted in 2000 a resolution calling on the State Peace and Development Council to take concrete actions to end forced labor in Burma.

(2) In this resolution, the ILO recommended that governments, employers, and workers organizations take appropriate measures to ensure that their relations with the State Peace and Development Council do not abet the system of forced or compulsory labor in that country, and that other international bodies reconsider any cooperation they may be engaged in with Burma and, if appropriate, cease as soon as possible any activity that could abet the practice of forced or compulsory labor.

SEC. 2. UNITED STATES SUPPORT FOR MULTILATERAL ACTION TO END FORCED LABOR AND THE WORST FORMS OF CHILD LABOR IN BURMA.

(a) TRADE BAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, until such time as the President determines and certifies to Congress that Burma has met the conditions described in paragraph (2), no article that is produced, manufactured, or grown in Burma may be imported into the United States.

(2) CONDITIONS DESCRIBED.—The conditions described in this paragraph are the following:

(A) The State Peace and Development Council in Burma has made measurable and substantial progress in reversing the persistent pattern of gross violations of internationally-recognized human rights and worker rights, including the elimination of forced labor and the worst forms of child labor.

(B) The State Peace and Development Council in Burma has made measurable and substantial progress toward implementing a democratic government including—

(i) releasing all political prisoners; and

(ii) deepening, accelerating, and bringing to a mutually-acceptable conclusion the dialogue between the State Peace and Development Council (SPDC) and democratic leadership within Burma (including Aung San Suu Kyi and the National League for Democracy (NLD) and leaders of Burma's ethnic peoples).

(C) The State Peace and Development Council in Burma has made measurable and substantial progress toward full cooperation with United States counter-narcotics efforts pursuant to the terms of section 570(a)(1)(B) of Public Law 104-208, the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 1997.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall apply to any article entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day after the date of enactment of this Act.

MYANMAR'S INCORRIGIBLE LEADERS

A few months ago it looked as if the military junta in Myanmar might ease its repressive rule slightly. The regime was talking with the country's courageous pro-democracy leader, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi, and there even seemed to be a possibility that she would be liberated from the prolonged house arrest the government has enforced. But those hopes have all but vanished. If the Bush administration means to speak out against human rights abuses abroad and pressure governments to treat their citizens humanely, Myanmar would be a fine place to start.

The military leaders of Myanmar, formerly called Burma, are among the world's cruelest violators of human rights. The junta has tortured and executed political opponents, exploited forced labor and condoned a burgeoning traffic in heroin and amphetamines. In the clearest indication that the regime has little intention of reforming, the United Nations special envoy who acted as a catalyst for the talks between the government and Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi has been denied permission to visit the country since January. Also, an anticipated release of political prisoners has failed to materialize, as has a pledge by the junta that Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi's party, the National League for Democracy, would be allowed to resume activity.

Earlier this year the junta released 120 mostly youthful members of the party who had been imprisoned the previous year, but it is still believed to be holding as many as 1,700 political prisoners, including 35 people who were elected to Parliament in 1990. Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi's party won more than three-quarters of the seats in that election, but the junta annulled the results.

The United States and the European Union have cooperated to isolate Myanmar, and in 1997 the Clinton administration banned new American investments there. But some Asian countries have been reluctant to join in sanctions. China, in particular, has helped sustain the junta with military aid. Regrettably, last month Japan broke ranks with a Western-led 12-year ban on non-humanitarian assistance to Myanmar by approving a $29 million grant for a hydroelectric dam.

Last year the International Labor Organization, responding to concerns about forced labor, voted to urge governments and international donors to impose further sanctions on Myanmar. Washington should consider a ban on imports from that nation, including textiles. Myanmar is rapidly increasing apparel exports to the United States. Mrs. Aung San Suu Kyi's allies have argued that the hard-currency earnings primarily benefit the military, not the laborers who make the garments. Washington should certainly be using its influence with Japan and other Asian countries to deter any further non-humanitarian assistance.

[From the Boston Globe, May 7, 2001]

BURMA SANCTIONS' VALUE

When it comes to the military dictatorship ruling Burma, President Bush has an opportunity he should welcome to demonstrate the realism his advisers commend and, simultaneously, a firm commitment to America's democratic ideals.

The Burmese junta stands condemned by much of the world for its horrendous abuse of human rights, its complicity in the trafficking of heroin and methamphetamines, and its thwarting of the democratic government that was elected with 80 percent of the seats in Parliament in Burma's last free election, in 1990.

Currently, there are varying sanctions on the junta. The International Labor Organization, for the first time in its 81-year history, asked its members to sanction the regime for the continuing, brutal imposition of forced labor on Burmese and minority ethnic groups.

There are also European Union sanctions and restrictions imposed by the Clinton administration that prohibit new U.S. investment in Burma and ban senior officials in the regime from obtaining visas to enter the United States.

Although it is far from clear that the junta intends to permit a revival of democracy, there is little doubt that it has engaged in talks with Nobel Peace Prize winner Aung San Suu Kyi—who is held under virtual house arrest in Rangoon—in large part because of the unrelenting pressure of sanctions.

As a result of sanctions, the officers in power cannot disguise their bankrupting of what had been one of Asia's most literate and resource-rich countries. Even the junta's principal sponsor for membership in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, Prime Minister Mahathir Mohammad of Malaysia, has counseled Burma's ruling officers to ease the embarrassment of their fellow ASEAN members by opening a dialogue with Suu Kyi.

In a letter last month to Bush, 35 senators including Edward Kennedy and John Kerry made a strong case for maintaining sanctions, noting that "the sanctions have been partially responsible for prompting the regime to engage in political dialogue with Aung San Suu Kyi and her supporters." The letter also said there is "strong evidence directly linking members of the regime to" the trafficking of "the heroin which plagues our communities."

Bush should insist that the junta take measurable steps toward the retrieval of democracy in Burma, and not merely for altruistic reasons. Next to the regime in North Korea, the Burmese junta has been Beijing's chummiest ally, permitting China to project its burgeoning power into the Bay of Bengal, to the dismay of India.

Were a democratic government to replace the junta, neighboring Thailand, which is now suffering from an influx of drugs from Burma, would join India and the rest of the region in breathing a sigh of relief.

[From the Washington Post, Nov. 26, 2000]

A REBUKE TO FORCED LABOR

Not in 81 years had the International Labor Organization imposed such sanctions; but Burma is a special case. The ILO, a United Nations arm in which unions, businesses and governments participate, found that the Asian nation also known as Myanmar has so flagrantly violated international norms that sanctions had to be imposed. In particular, its ruling generals were found guilty of encouraging forced and slave labor in "a culture of fear."

Burma is a special case in part because its dictators cannot even pretend to reflect the will of their people. In 1990, they permitted a national election. A pro-democracy party headed by Aung San Suu Kyi, daughter of Burma's hero of independence, won four out of five parliamentary seats. But parliament never met; the generals refused to accept the results. Aung San Suu Kyi, who won the Nobel peace prize in 1991, is under house arrest; most of her party colleagues are in prison. The generals grow more corrupt while Burma grows ever poorer.

The ILO sanctions approved last week are, as AFL-CIO president John Sweeney said, "only a starting point." Nations are "urged to halt any aid, trade or relationship that helps Burmese leaders remain in power," he said. The United States already has imposed restrictions on investment, but that hasn't stopped companies such as Unocal from mounting major efforts in the country. Nor has it prevented trade, much of which enriches only the generals.

Companies that do business in Burma now more than ever will have to explain themselves. So will nations that sought to water down the ILO action, including fellow autocracies like Malaysia and China and, more surprisingly, democracies like India and Japan. Those nations, though, found themselves very much in the minority, just as Burma finds itself more isolated than ever.

[From the New York Times, Nov. 19, 2000]

THE RUIN OF MYANMAR

The Southeast Asian nation of Myanmar is a case study in repression and misgovernment. For 12 years a secretive military junta has ground down the liberties and living standards of 50 million people. By banning most contact with the outside world and buying off the leadership of restive ethnic minorities, the junta has deflected serious challenges to its rule, despite the dismal failure of its economic policies and spreading social ills.

The military has ruled Myanmar since 1962, when it was known as Burma. After the violent suppression of democracy movement in 1988, an even more ruthless set of generals took charge. They permitted elections in 1990, then ignored the results when democratic forces led by Daw Aung Sang Suu Kyi won an overwhelming victory. She has spent 6 of the past 11 years under house arrest. Other leaders of her party have been relentlessly persecuted, university students have been relocated from the cities, and unions and civic associations have been prohibited. The junta has banned computer modems, e-mail and the Internet and made it a crime for people to invite foreigners into their homes.

The Times's Blaine Harden recently reported that Myanmar, which a half-century ago had one of Asia's best health care systems and highest literacy rates, is now near the bottom in these and many other measures of development as government spending has been diverted from schools and health care to the military. Most people now live on less than a dollar a day. Drug smuggling and AIDS have grown explosively and threaten to spill over to neighboring countries like China and Thailand.

The United States has led international efforts to isolate Myanmar through economic sanctions, including a ban on new investment. But other Asian countries have been reluctant to apply pressure. China, in particular, has helped sustain the junta through military aid. But an increasing number of countries are losing patience. Last week the 175-member International Labor Organization took the unusual step of condemning the junta's use of forced labor and invited member countries to impose sanctions. A good start would be restricting trade and investment in areas of the economy that profit from forced labor. Washington too should consider additional steps like encouraging disinvestment by American companies. Myanmar's people deserve international support in their struggle against a destructive tyranny.

By Mr. CORZINE:

S. 927. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to provide for a prohibition on use of mobile telephones while operating a motor vehicle; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill, the Mobile Telephone Driving Safety Act of 2001, to enhance highway safety by encouraging States to restrict the use of cell phones while operating a motor vehicle.

The cell phone is an important and valuable type of technology that has grown increasingly popular throughout our nation. But as cell phone use has grown, so has a related problem, the increasing number of traffic accidents caused by drivers who are distracted by cell phone use.

The risks of driving while talking on the phone were made very clear to many Americans when on April 29, 2001 a car containing model Nikki Taylor crashed into a utility pole. The driver of the car admitted that he had been distracted from operating the car when he tried to answer his cellular telephone. That few second distraction was all that was necessary to cause the crash. As a result, Ms. Taylor suffered severe and life-threatening injuries.

Unfortunately, Ms. Taylor's case is just the most visible recent example of a much broader problem. Several studies have established that using a cell phone while driving substantially increases the risk of an accident. One, published in the New England Journal of Medicine, concluded that "use of cellular telephones in motor vehicles is associated with a quadrupling of the risks of a collision during the brief period of a call". The study goes on to say "this relative risk is similar to the hazard associated with driving with a blood alcohol level at the legal limit".

In response to the growing problem of cell phone use while driving, counties and municipalities around the country, including two municipalities in my own State of New Jersey, have banned the use of cell phones while driving on their roads. Just recently, Governor Pataki of New York endorsed similar statewide legislation. Yet, at this point, no State has actually enacted such a law. Many cite strong industry resistance to explain the failure of state legislatures to act.

While some wireless industry representatives may resist cell phone driving safety legislation, the American people strongly support the idea. A recent poll by Quinnipiac University showed that 87 percent of New York voters support such a ban. This survey echoes the results from other surveys taken nationwide.

In addition to preventing accidents and saving lives, a ban on cell phone use while driving also would help lower the cost of auto insurance. That is especially important to me because I represent a state in which insurance premiums are among the highest in the nation.

The Mobile Telephone Driving Safety Act of 2001 is structured in a manner similar to other Federal laws designed to promote highway safety, such as laws that encourage states to enact tough drunk driving standards. Under the legislation, a portion of Federal highway funds would be withheld from States that do not enact a ban on cell phone use while driving. Initially, this funding could be restored if states act to move into compliance. Later, the highway funding forfeited by one state would be distributed to other states that are in compliance. Experience has shown that the threat of losing highway funding is very effective in ensuring that states comply.

To meet the bill's requirements, States would have to ban cell phone use while driving. However, such a ban need not be absolute. It could include an exception where there are exceptional circumstances, such as the use of a phone to report a disabled vehicle or medical emergency. In addition, if a state makes a determination that the use of "hands free" cell phones does not pose a threat to public safety, such use could be exempted from the ban, as well.

This is a necessary bill to keep our streets and highways safe. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. FEINGOLD):

S. 928. A bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to require, as a condition of receipt or use of Federal financial assistance, that States waive immunity to suit for certain violations of that Act, and to affirm the availability of certain suits for injunctive relief to ensure compliance with that Act; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am pleased to be here today to introduce legislation that will restore to state employees the ability to bring claims of age discrimination against their employers under the Age Discrimination and Employment Act of 1967. The Older Workers Rights Restoration Act of 2001 seeks to provide state employees who allege age discrimination the same procedures and remedies as those afforded to other employees with respect to ADEA.

This legislation is needed to protect older workers like Professor Dan Kimel, who has taught physics Florida State University for nearly 35 years. Professor Kimel testified at a recent hearing before the Senate Health, Education, Labor and Pensions Committee that, despite his years of faithful service, in 1992 he was earning less in real dollars than his starting salary. To add insult to injury, his employer was hiring younger faculty out of graduate schools at salaries that were higher than he and other long-service faculty members were earning. In 1995, Professor Kimel and 34 colleagues brought a claim of age discrimination against the Florida Board of Regents.

Dan Kimel and his colleagues brought their cases under the Age Discrimination and Employment Act of 1967, ADEA. In 1974, Congress amended the ADEA to ensure that state employees, such as Dan Kimel had full protection against age discrimination. I stand before you today because this past year the Supreme Court ruled that Dan Kimel and other affected faculty do not have the right to bring their ADEA claims against their employer. The Court in Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, held that Congress did not have the power to abrogate state sovereign immunity to individuals under the ADEA. As a result of the decision, state employees, who are victims of age discrimination, no longer have the remedies that are available to individuals who work in the private sector, for local governments or for the federal government. Indeed, unless a state chooses to waive its sovereign immunity or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission decides to bring a suit, state workers no longer have a federal remedy for their claims of age discrimination. In effect, this decision has transformed older state employees into second class citizens.

For a right without a remedy is no right at all. Employees should not have to lose their right to redress simply because they happen to work for a state government. And a considerable portion of our workforce has been impacted. In Vermont, for example, the State is one of our largest employers. We cannot and should not permit these state workers to lose the right to redress age discrimination.

This legislation will resolve this problem. The Older Workers Rights Restoration Act of 2001 will restore the full protections of the ADEA to Dan Kimel and countless other state employees in federally assisted programs. The legislation will do this by requiring the states to waive their sovereign immunity as a condition of receiving federal funds for their programs or activities. The Older Workers Rights Restoration Act of 2001 follows the framework of many other civil rights laws, including the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1987. Under this framework, immunity is only waived with regard to the program or activity actually receiving federal funds. States are not obligated to accept such funds; and if they do not they are immune from private ADEA suits. The legislation also confirms that these employees may bring actions for equitable relief under the ADEA.

I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 928

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Older Workers' Rights Restoration Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Since 1974, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. 621 et seq.) has prohibited States from discriminating in employment on the basis of age. In EEOC v. Wyoming, 460 U.S. 226 (1983), the Supreme Court upheld Congress' constitutional authority to prohibit States from discriminating in employment on the basis of age. The prohibitions of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 remain in effect and continue to apply to the States, as the prohibitions have for more than 25 years.

(2) Age discrimination in employment remains a serious problem both nationally and among State agencies, and has invidious effects on its victims, the labor force, and the economy as a whole. For example, age discrimination in employment—

(A) increases the risk of unemployment among older workers, who will as a result be more likely to be dependent on government resources;

(B) prevents the best use of available labor resources;

(C) adversely affects the morale and productivity of older workers; and

(D) perpetuates unwarranted stereotypes about the abilities of older workers.

(3) Private civil suits by the victims of employment discrimination have been a crucial tool for enforcement of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 since the enactment of that Act. In Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, 120 S. Ct. 631 (2000), however, the Supreme Court held that Congress lacks the power under the 14th amendment to the Constitution to abrogate State sovereign immunity to suits by individuals under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967. The Federal Government has an important interest in ensuring that Federal financial assistance is not used to subsidize or facilitate violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967. Private civil suits are a critical tool for advancing that interest.

(4) As a result of the Kimel decision, although age-based discrimination by State employers remains unlawful, the victims of such discrimination lack important remedies for vindication of their rights that are available to all other employees covered under that Act, including employees in the private sector, local government, and the Federal Government. Unless a State chooses to waive sovereign immunity, or the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission brings an action on their behalf, State employees victimized by violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 have no adequate Federal remedy for violations of that Act. In the absence of the deterrent effect that such remedies provide, there is a greater likelihood that entities carrying out programs and activities receiving Federal financial assistance will use that assistance to violate that Act, or that the assistance will otherwise subsidize or facilitate violations of that Act.

(5) Federal law has long treated nondiscrimination obligations as a core component of programs or activities that, in whole or part, receive Federal financial assistance. That assistance should not be used, directly or indirectly, to subsidize invidious discrimination. Assuring nondiscrimination in employment is a crucial aspect of assuring nondiscrimination in those programs and activities.

(6) Discrimination on the basis of age in programs or activities receiving Federal financial assistance is, in contexts other than employment, forbidden by the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.). Congress determined that it was not necessary for the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 to apply to employment discrimination because the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 already forbade discrimination in employment by, and authorized suits against, State agencies and other entities that receive Federal financial assistance. In section 1003 of the Rehabilitation Act Amendments of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 2000d-7), Congress required all State recipients of Federal financial assistance to waive any immunity from suit for discrimination claims arising under the Age Discrimination Act of 1975. The earlier limitation in the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, originally intended only to avoid duplicative coverage and remedies, has in the wake of the Kimel decision become a serious loophole leaving millions of State employees without an important Federal remedy for age discrimination, resulting in the use of Federal financial assistance to subsidize or facilitate violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967.

(7) The Supreme Court has upheld Congress' authority to condition receipt of Federal financial assistance on acceptance by the States or other recipients of conditions regarding or related to the use of that assistance, as in Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677 (1979). The Court has further recognized that Congress may require a State, as a condition of receipt of Federal financial assistance, to waive the State's sovereign immunity to suits for a violation of Federal law, as in College Savings Bank v. Florida Prepaid Postsecondary Education Expense Board, 527 U.S. 666 (1999). In the wake of the Kimel decision, in order to assure compliance with, and to provide effective remedies for violations of, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 in State programs or activities receiving or using Federal financial assistance, and in order to ensure that Federal financial assistance does not subsidize or facilitate violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967, it is necessary to require such a waiver as a condition of receipt or use of that assistance.

(8) A State's receipt or use of Federal financial assistance in any program or activity of a State will constitute a limited waiver of sovereign immunity under section 7(g) of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (as added by section 4 of this Act). The waiver will not eliminate a State's immunity with respect to programs or activities that do not receive or use Federal financial assistance. The State will waive sovereign immunity only with respect to suits under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 brought by employees within the programs or activities that receive or use that assistance. With regard to those programs and activities that are covered by the waiver, the State employees will be accorded only the same remedies that are accorded to other covered employees under the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967.

(9) The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that State sovereign immunity does not bar suits for prospective injunctive relief brought against State officials, as in Ex parte Young, 209 U.S. 123 (1908). Clarification of the language of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 will confirm that that Act authorizes such suits. The injunctive relief available in such suits will continue to be no broader than the injunctive relief that was available under that Act before the Kimel decision, and that is available to all other employees under that Act.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to provide to State employees in programs or activities that receive or use Federal financial assistance the same rights and remedies for practices violating the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 as are available to other employees under that Act, and that were available to State employees prior to the Supreme Court's decision in Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, 120 S. Ct. 631 (2000);

(2) to provide that the receipt or use of Federal financial assistance for a program or activity constitutes a State waiver of sovereign immunity from suits by employees within that program or activity for violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967; and

(3) to affirm that suits for injunctive relief are available against State officials in their official capacities for violations of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967.

SEC. 4. REMEDIES FOR STATE EMPLOYEES.

Section 7 of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. 626) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(g)(1)(A) A State's receipt or use of Federal financial assistance for any program or activity of a State shall constitute a waiver of sovereign immunity, under the 11th amendment to the Constitution or otherwise, to a suit brought by an employee of that program or activity under this Act for equitable, legal, or other relief authorized under this Act.

“(B) In this paragraph, the term ‘program or activity’ has the meaning given the term in section 309 of the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (42 U.S.C. 6107).

“(2) An official of a State may be sued in the official capacity of the official by any employee who has complied with the procedures of subsections (d) and (e), for injunctive relief that is authorized under this Act. In such a suit the court may award to the prevailing party those costs authorized by section 722 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1988).”

SEC. 5. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of this Act, an amendment made by this Act, or the application of such provision or amendment to any person or circumstance is held to be invalid, the remainder of this Act, the amendments made by this Act, and the application of such provision or amendment to another person or circumstance shall not be affected.

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY.—With respect to a particular program or activity, section 7(g)(1) of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. 626(g)(1)) applies to conduct occurring on or after the day, after the date of enactment of this Act, on which a State first receives or uses Federal financial assistance for that program or activity.

(b) SUITS AGAINST OFFICIALS.—Section 7(g)(2) of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (29 U.S.C. 626(g)(2)) applies to any suit pending on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am honored today to join Chairman JEFFORDS and Senator FEINGOLD to introduce the Older Workers' Rights Restoration Act of 2001. Our goal is to restore to older state government workers the right to seek remedies for age discrimination. A recent decision by the Supreme Court took that right away. State workers now have fewer federal protections against age discrimination than other employees in the country. This bill will remedy that injustice.

In 1967, Congress outlawed age discrimination in employment in the private sector by passing the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. In 1974, recognizing that employees of state government agencies were also often subject to pervasive and arbitrary age discrimination, Congress extended the Act to cover state governments. For more than 25 years, state employees were protected from age discrimination, and had the same remedies as all other employees covered by this law.

But in Kimel v. Florida Board of Regents, decided last year, the Supreme Court held that Congress lacked the power to subject states to suits under the federal age discrimination laws. As a result, unless a state agrees to allow suits against its agencies in such cases, state employees cannot seek relief on their own behalf to remedy age discrimination.

In a recent hearing before the Labor Committee, I was privileged to hear the eloquent testimony of Dr. J. Daniel Kimel, the plaintiff in the Supreme Court case. Dr. Kimel has been a professor of physics at Florida State University for 35 years and is paid less than younger faculty. Because of the Supreme Court's ruling, Dr. Kimel has been unable to seek any remedy at all for this age-based salary discrimination.

Large numbers of State employees, those who work for State colleges and universities, State police forces, State departments of transportation, State environmental protection agencies and many other State agencies, lack effective Federal remedies for age discrimination. That result is unfair. These State workers are vulnerable to age discrimination, which wastes valuable talent and adversely affects morale.

No worker should be subject to discriminatory hiring, firing, or other job action based on age or any other characteristic that has nothing to do with job performance. We must act to see that workers are adequately protected against this threat.

The bill that Chairman JEFFORDS, Senator FEINGOLD and I are introducing today is in the best tradition of the nation's civil rights laws. It provides that when a State program receives Federal tax dollars, the program must permit its employees to seek remedies under the Federal age discrimination law. The courts have long recognized that Congress can act to see that Federal funds are not used to subsidize discrimination, and this is what our bill will do. In fact, all of the scholars who testified in our Committee hearing agree that this is an appropriate and constitutional use of Congress' power.

This important bill will help to ensure that all Americans are protected from age discrimination in employment. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this needed legislation.

By Mr. HUTCHINSON:

S. 929. A bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act to preserve charitable giving; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Preserve Charitable Giving Act. I am proud of this legislation but am profoundly saddened that it has become necessary.

Aggressive union organizing tactics have made this legislation necessary because those tactics have forced many of our nation's largest retailers who allow charities to solicit donations on their premises to also give unions access to their premises for the express purpose of organizing or face a flurry of unfair labor practice charges. When faced with this situation, these retailers are thus forced to deny access to everyone, resulting in a loss of charitable donations. The magnitude of this loss cannot be overstated, as charitable donations raised through Wal-Mart alone are over $127 million annually. This means that there are now fewer hot meals for the hungry, fewer toys for poor children, and less clothing and shelter for the homeless.

This is unacceptable. Companies should not be forced to choose between furthering charity or increasing union membership. The Preserve Charitable Giving Act will clarify the National Labor Relations Act so that retailers who choose to allow access to their premises for charitable solicitations will not also be forced to give access for union organizing purposes. Thus, I ask my colleagues to preserve charitable giving by helping to enact this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 929

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Preserve Charitable Giving Act".

SEC. 2. PROPERTY ACCESS.

Section 8(a)(1) of the National Labor Relations Act is amended by adding after "section 7" the following: "Provided, That in the case of a published, written, or posted no solicitation or no access rule, an exception for charitable, eleemosynary, or other beneficent purposes shall not be grounds for finding an unfair labor practice".

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 930. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to set aside up to $2 per person from park entrance fees or assess up to $2 per person visiting the Grand Canyon National Park to secure bonds for capital improvements, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will authorize the Secretary of Interior to develop and implement a bonding program to help finance capital improvement projects at the Grand Canyon National Park in Arizona.

For the past few years, I have worked on legislation to implement a national parks bonding program to benefit the National Parks system by proposing a unique public-private partnership mechanism to finance capital improvements through bond revenues. This legislation has received substantial support by many of the organizations working with the National Parks system. The legislation I am introducing today is similar to the National Parks Capital Improvements Act of 2001, but it specifically authorizes a park-specific bonding program for the Grand Canyon National Park in my home state of Arizona.

This park-specific proposal is similar to actions taken back in the late 1980's to legislate a solution to the air traffic and noise pollution problems affecting the Grand Canyon National Park caused by overflights over the canyon. Congress enacted legislation to require specific measures to mitigate air traffic through the National Parks Overflights Act. Once a framework for the Grand Canyon National Park was established, it became clear that broader legislation was necessary to address similar overflights issues to promote safety and quiet in the entire national parks system.

Much in the same way, I am proposing to allow the Secretary of Interior to utilize the bonding mechanism at the Grand Canyon National Park, in partnership with a supporting organization. Bonding has worked well in other governmental sectors to leverage additional financing for local projects where federal or state resources are not otherwise sufficient or available.

This bonding legislation, as well as the broader national parks bonding bill, would allow the Grand Canyon National Park to utilize up to $2 of its existing fee structure to dedicate to securing bonds to finance capital improvement projects. For example, based on current visitation rates at the Grand Canyon, a $2 surcharge would enable us to raise $100 million from a bond issue amortized over 20 years. That is a significant amount of money which could be used to accomplish many critical park projects. With approximately 1.2 million acres to protect, this type of financial tool would go far to help redress the backlog of needed repairs, maintenance and other approved projects at the Grand Canyon National Park.

I remain committed to broader legislation to implement a park-wide bonding program. However, I am proposing that we should also consider testing this innovative approach by authorizing its use to help protect one of the nation's largest and most magnificent parks, the Grand Canyon.

I ask unanimous consent to print the text of this bill in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 930

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the “Grand Canyon Capital Improvements Act of 2001”.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

- Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
- Sec. 2. Definitions.
- Sec. 3. Fundraising organization.
- Sec. 4. Memorandum of agreement.
- Sec. 5. Park surcharge or set-aside.
- Sec. 6. Use of bond proceeds.
- Sec. 7. Report.
- Sec. 8. Regulations.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) FUNDRAISING ORGANIZATION.—The term “fundraising organization” means an entity authorized to act as a fundraising organization under section 3(a).

(2) MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT.—The term “memorandum of agreement” means a memorandum of agreement entered into by the Secretary under section 3(a) that contains the terms specified in section 4.

(3) PARK.—The term “Park” means the Grand Canyon National Park.

(4) SECRETARY.—The term “Secretary” means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. FUNDRAISING ORGANIZATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may enter into a memorandum of agreement under section 4 with an entity to act as an authorized fundraising organization for the benefit of the Park.

(b) BONDS.—The fundraising organization for the Park shall issue taxable bonds in return for the surcharge or set-aside for the Park collected under section 5.

(c) PROFESSIONAL STANDARDS.—The fundraising organization shall abide by all relevant professional standards regarding the issuance of securities and shall comply with all applicable Federal and State law.

(d) AUDIT.—The fundraising organization shall be subject to an audit by the Secretary.

(e) NO LIABILITY FOR BONDS.—The United States shall not be liable for the security of any bonds issued by the fundraising organization.

SEC. 4. MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT.

The fundraising organization shall enter into a memorandum of agreement that specifies—

- (1) the amount of the bond issue;
- (2) the maturity of the bonds, not to exceed 20 years;
- (3) the per capita amount required to amortize the bond issue, provide for the reasonable costs of administration, and maintain a sufficient reserve consistent with industry standards;
- (4) the project or projects at the Park that will be funded with the bond proceeds and the specific responsibilities of the Secretary and the fundraising organization with respect to each project; and
- (5) procedures for modifications of the agreement with the consent of both parties based on changes in circumstances, including modifications relating to project priorities.

SEC. 5. PARK SURCHARGE OR SET-ASIDE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may authorize the Superintendent of the Park—

(1) to charge and collect a surcharge in an amount not to exceed $2 for each individual otherwise subject to an entrance fee for admission to the Park; or

(2) to set aside not more than $2 for each individual charged the entrance fee.

(b) SURCHARGE IN ADDITION TO ENTRANCE FEES.—The Park surcharge under subsection

(a) shall be in addition to any entrance fee collected under—

(1) section 4 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-6a);

(2) the recreational fee demonstration program authorized by section 315 of the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1996 (as contained in Public Law 104-134; 110 Stat. 1321-156; 1321-200; 16 U.S.C. 4601-6a note); or

(3) the national park passport program established under title VI of the National Parks Omnibus Management Act of 1998 (16 U.S.C. 5991 et seq.).

(c) LIMITATION.—The total amount charged or set aside under subsection (a) may not exceed $2 for each individual charged an entrance fee.

(d) USE.—A surcharge or set-aside under subsection (a) shall be used by the fundraising organization to—

- (1) amortize the bond issue;
- (2) provide for the reasonable costs of administration; and
- (3) maintain a sufficient reserve consistent with industry standards, as determined by the bond underwriter.

SEC. 6. USE OF BOND PROCEEDS.

(a) ELIGIBLE PROJECTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), bond proceeds under this Act may be used for a project for the design, construction, operation, maintenance, repair, or replacement of a facility in the Park.

(2) PROJECT LIMITATIONS.—A project referred to in paragraph (1) shall be consistent with—

- (A) the laws governing the National Park System;
- (B) any law governing the Park; and
- (C) the general management plan for the Park.

(3) PROHIBITION ON USE FOR ADMINISTRATION.—Other than interest as provided in subsection (b), no part of the bond proceeds may be used to defray administrative expenses.

(b) INTEREST ON BOND PROCEEDS.—Any interest earned on bond proceeds may be used by the fundraising organization to—

- (1) meet reserve requirements; and
- (2) defray reasonable administrative expenses incurred in connection with the management and sale of the bonds.

SEC. 7. REPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 2 years after the promulgation of regulations under section 8, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the bond program.

(b) REQUIREMENTS.—The report shall include—

- (1) a review of the bond program carried out under this Act at the Park; and
- (2) recommendations to Congress on whether to establish a bond program at all units of the National Park System.

SEC. 8. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Treasury, shall promulgate regulations to carry out this Act.

By Mr. HARKIN (for himself, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DAYTON, Mrs. CLINTON, Ms. STABENOW, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KOHL, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. DURBIN, and Mrs. BOXER):

S. 932. A bill to amend the Food Security Act of 1985 to establish the conservation security program; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Conservation Security Act of 2001, a bill that represents a fresh bipartisan farmer-friendly approach to farm policy and agricultural conservation. I am pleased to be joined by my colleague Senator GORDAN SMITH from Oregon, as well as Senators DASCHLE, LEAHY, DORGAN, JOHNSON, DAYTON, SCHUMER, CLINTON, STABENOW, KOHL, SARBANES, KERRY, KENNEDY, WELLSTONE, DURBIN, and BOXER.

America's farmers and ranches produce a bountiful, safe, and nourishing food supply, and they also protect our natural resources, environment and wildlife habitat. Farmers and ranches have a long history of stewardship of private lands. They are the key to enhancing conservation of resources for future generations.

Private land conservation became a national priority in the days of the Dust Bowl, leading to the creation in the 1930s of the Soil Conservation Service, (now the Natural Resources Conservation Service), at the Department of Agriculture. With the very foundation of our food supply at risk, the federal government stepped forward with billions of dollars in assistance to help farmers conserve their precious soils.

Since that time, total federal spending on conservation has steadily declined in inflation-adjusted dollars. Funds for lands in production have been especially hard hit. Yet today, agriculture faces a wide range of environmental challenges, from overgrazing and manure management to cropland runoff and air quality impairment. Urban and rural citizens alike are increasingly interested in supporting conservation on agricultural lands.

Farmers and ranchers pride themselves on being good stewards of the land, but they are limited by financial constraints. Every dollar spent on constructing a filter strip or developing a nutrient management plan is a dollar unavailable for other purposes. And even in better times, there is a lot of competition for each dollar in a farm's budget.

Who benefits from conservation on agricultural lands? As much or more than farmers, all of us, depend on the careful stewardship of our air, water, soil and other natural resources. Farmers and ranchers tend not only to their crops and animals, but also to our nation's natural resources.

Since all Americans share in these benefits, it is only right that we contribute to conserving private lands. It is time to enter into a true conservation partnership with farmers and ranchers to help ensure that conservation is an integral and permanent part of our agricultural policy nationwide.

In the 1985 farm bill, we required farmers who wanted to participate in USDA farm programs to develop soil conservation plans for their highly erodible land. This provision helped put new conservation plans in place for our most fragile farmlands. In the most recent farm bill, we streamlined conservation programs and established new cost-share and incentive payments for certain practices. These measures have helped enhance the environment and natural resources, but we still have more to do.

The Conservation Security Act of 2001 builds on our past successes and takes a bold step forward in farm and conservation policy.

The Conservation Security Act would establish a universal and voluntary incentive payment program, the Conservation Security Program, to support and encourage conservation activities by farmers and ranchers. Under this program, farmers and ranchers could receive as much as $50,000 a year in conservation payments by entering into 5- to 10-year agreements with USDA and carrying out eligible conservation practices. Moreover, the program is designed to encourage implementation of practices that address local conservation priorities. Payments are based on the number and types of practices and level of conservation carried out on their lands in agricultural production. Farmers and ranchers may choose to implement practices from one or more of the following three tiers of practices.

In Tier I, participating farmers would adopt or maintain basic individual practices, including nutrient management, soil conservation, and wildlife habitat management on part or all of their operation. Tier I plans are for 5-year periods. Based on enrolled acreage, practices and the level of conservation, farmers or ranchers in Tier I would receive annual payments that could reach as much as $20,000. A one-time advance payment could be made of the greater of $1,000 or 20 percent of the annual payment.

Farmers or ranchers in Tier II would implement more extensive conservation practices on their working lands. They could choose from Tier I practices and II practices, including controlled rotational grazing, partial field practices like buffers, strips and windbreaks, wetland restoration and wildlife habitat enhancement, for a period of 5 to 10 years, at the farmer's discretion. The practices adopted in Tier II must address at least one resource of concern (i.e. water quality, air quality, soil quality, wildlife habitat, etc.) for the entire operation. For adopting or maintaining Tier II practices, farmers or ranchers would receive up to $35,000 a year with access to a one-time advance payment of the greater of $2,000 or 20 percent of the annual payment.

To qualify under Tier III, farmers and ranchers would adopt a comprehensive set of conservation practices on the entire operation. The Practices would address all resources of concern on the operation, including air, land, water and wildlife. For carrying out a Tier III plan of practices, farmers and ranchers would receive up to $50,000 a year with access to a one-time advance payment of the greater of $3,000 or 20 percent of the annual payment.

Again, I emphasize, the Conservation Security Program would be totally voluntary. Farmers and ranchers would decide if they want to participate and to what extent they want to participate. The more conservation they do, the greater the payment. Many farmers are already using many of these practices, but they receive little or no financial support. This legislation changes that by rewarding those farmers and ranchers who have already implemented these practices through payments for maintaining them.

In addition, the Conservation Security Act provides a strong incentive to go beyond the farm's current level of conservation. And it does so in a way that is compatible with our international trade obligations. The payments received under the Conservation Security Program would fit into the "Green Box" under the WTO Uruguay Round.

Payments received under the Conservation Security Program are not linked to participation in commodity programs, and farmers don't have to participate in the Conservation Security Program to be eligible for commodity payments. Further, the Conservation Security Act, which focuses on land in production, complements and does not interfere with the existing conservation programs. A farmer or rancher may participate in these programs, including the Conservation Reserve Program, the Wetlands Reserve Program, and the Farmland Protection Program and still participate in the Conservation Security Program. We need to support these and the other conservation programs, but to truly benefit agriculture and address the public's desire to enhance the environment, natural resources and wildlife habitat on agricultural land we must also address conservation needs on land in production.

Farmers and ranchers across our country want to take actions to enhance the environment, but they need financial and technical assistance. The Conservation Security Act provides that needed assistance. Further, the Conservation Security Act was crafted to include opportunities for all producers nationwide, including producers of fruits, vegetables, specialty crops, row crops and livestock to participate in the Conservation Security Program.

Our private lands are a national treasure, and conservation on farm and ranchlands provides environmental benefits that are just as important as the production of abundant and safe food. The Conservation Security Act will help secure the economic future of our farmers and ranchers by providing them the means to increase their income while conserving our natural resources, the environment, and wildlife habitat for today and for future generations.

I thank the Chair.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 932

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Conservation Security Act of 2001".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) in addition to producing food and fiber, agricultural producers can contribute to the public good by providing improved soil productivity, clean air and water, fish and wildlife habitat, landscape and recreational amenities, and other natural resources and environmental benefits;

(2) agricultural producers in the United States have a long history of embracing environmentally friendly conservation practices and desire to continue those practices and engage in new and additional conservation practices;

(3) agricultural producers that engage in conservation practices—

(A) may not receive economic rewards for implementing conservation practices; and

(B) should be encouraged to engage in good stewardship, and should be rewarded for doing so;

(4) despite significant progress in recent years, significant environmental challenges on agricultural land remain;

(5) since the 1930's, when agricultural conservation became a national priority, Federal resources for conservation assistance have declined over 50 percent, when adjusted for inflation;

(6) existing conservation programs do not provide opportunities for all interested agricultural producers to participate;

(7) a voluntary, incentive-based conservation program open to all agricultural producers that qualify and desire to participate would—

(A) encourage greater improvement of natural resources and the environment;

(B) address the economic implications of conservation practices in a manner consistent with international obligations of the United States;

(C) enable United States farmers and ranchers to produce food for a growing world population; and

(D) encourage conservation practices that provide a public benefit while not infringing on the freedom of an agricultural producer to manage agricultural operations as the agricultural producer chooses;

(8) total farm conservation planning can help producers increase profitability, enhance resource protection, and improve quality of life;

(9) on-farm practices may help deter invasive species that jeopardize native species or impair agricultural land of the United States; and

(10) a conservation program described in paragraph (7) would help achieve a better balance between Federal payments supporting conservation on land used for agricultural production and Federal payments for the purpose of retiring agricultural land from production.

SEC. 3. CONSERVATION SECURITY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle D of title XII of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3830 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“CHAPTER 6—CONSERVATION SECURITY PROGRAM

“SEC. 1240P. DEFINITIONS.

“In this chapter:

“(1) CONSERVATION PRACTICE.—The term ‘conservation practice’ means a land-based farming technique that—

“(A) requires planning, implementation, management, and maintenance; and “(B) promotes 1 or more of the purposes described in section 1240Q(a).

“(2) CONSERVATION SECURITY CONTRACT.—The term ‘conservation security contract’ means a contract described in section 1240Q(e).

“(3) CONSERVATION SECURITY PLAN.—The term ‘conservation security plan’ means a plan described in section 1240Q(c).

“(4) CONSERVATION SECURITY PROGRAM.—The term ‘conservation security program’ means the program established under section 1240Q(a).

“(5) NUTRIENT MANAGEMENT.—The term ‘nutrient management’ means management of the quantity, source, placement, form, and timing of the land application of nutrients on land enrolled in the conservation security program and other additions to soil—

“(A) to achieve or maintain adequate soil fertility for agricultural production; and “(B) to minimize the potential for loss of environmental quality, including soil, water, fish and wildlife habitat, and air quality impairment.

“(6) RESOURCE OF CONCERN.—The term ‘resource of concern’ means a conservation priority of the State and locality under section 1240Q(c)(3).

“(7) RESOURCE-CONSERVING CROP.—The term ‘resource-conserving crop’ means—

“(A) a perennial grass;

“(B) a legume grown for use as forage, seed for planting, or green manure;

“(C) a legume-grass mixture;

“(D) a small grain grown in combination with a grass or legume, whether interseeded or planted in succession; and “(E) such other plantings, including trees and annual grasses, as the Secretary considers appropriate for a particular area.

“(8) RESOURCE-CONSERVING CROP ROTATION.—The term ‘resource-conserving crop rotation’ means a crop rotation that—

“(A) includes at least 1 resource-conserving crop;

“(B) reduces erosion;

“(C) improves soil fertility and tilth; and “(D) interrupts pest cycles.

“(9) RESOURCE MANAGEMENT SYSTEM.—The term ‘resource management system’ means a system of conservation practices and management relating to land or water use that is designed to prevent resource degradation and permit sustained use of the land and water, as defined in the Natural Resource Conservation Service technical guidance handbooks.

“SEC. 1240Q. CONSERVATION SECURITY PROGRAM.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a conservation security program to assist owners and operators of agricultural operations to promote, as is applicable for each operation—

“(1) conservation of soil, water, energy, and other related resources;

“(2) soil quality protection and improvement;

“(3) water quality protection and improvement;

“(4) air quality protection and improvement;

“(5) soil, plant, or animal health and well-being;

“(6) diversity of flora and fauna;

“(7) on-farm conservation and regeneration of biological resources, including plant and animal germplasm;

“(8) wetland restoration, conservation, and enhancement;

“(9) wildlife habitat management, with special emphasis on species identified by the Natural Heritage Program of the State;

“(10) reduction of greenhouse gas emissions and enhancement of carbon sequestration;

“(11) systems that protect human health and safety;

“(12) environmentally sound management of invasive species; or “(13) any similar conservation purpose (as determined by the Secretary).

“(b) ELIGIBILITY.—

“(1) ELIGIBLE OWNERS AND OPERATORS.—To be eligible to participate in the conservation security program (other than to receive technical assistance under subsection (h)(6) for the development of conservation security contracts), an owner or operator shall—

“(A) develop and submit to the Secretary, and obtain the approval of the Secretary of, a conservation security plan that meets the requirements of subsection (c)(1); and “(B) enter into a conservation security contract with the Secretary to carry out the conservation security plan.

“(2) ELIGIBLE LAND.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (C)(iii), private agricultural land (including cropland, rangeland, grassland, and pasture land) that is entirely used as part of the agricultural operation of an owner or operator on the date of enactment of this chapter shall be eligible for enrollment in the conservation security program.

“(B) FORESTED LAND.—Private forested land shall be eligible for enrollment in the conservation security program if the forested land is integrated into the agricultural operation, including land that is used for—

“(i) alleycropping;

“(ii) forest farming;

“(iii) forest buffers;

“(iv) windbreaks;

“(v) silvopasture systems; and

“(vi) such other uses as the Secretary may determine appropriate.

“(C) EXCLUSIONS.—

“(i) CONSERVATION RESERVE PROGRAM.—Land enrolled in the conservation reserve program under subchapter B of chapter I shall not be eligible for enrollment in the conservation security program except for land enrolled in partial field conservation practice enrollment options.

“(ii) WETLANDS RESERVE PROGRAM.—Land enrolled in the wetlands preserve program established under subchapter C of chapter I of subtitle D shall not be eligible for enrollment in the conservation security program.

“(iii) TOLERANCE LEVEL.—The Secretary shall promulgate regulations to ensure that land shall not be eligible for enrollment in the conservation security program if the land—

“(I) is initially used for the production of an agricultural commodity after the date of enactment of this chapter; and “(II) cannot be used for the production of an agricultural commodity without resulting in the loss of soil at a level that exceeds the soil loss tolerance level.

“(c) CONSERVATION SECURITY PLANS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—A conservation security plan shall—

“(A) identify the resources and designated land to be conserved under the conservation security plan;

“(B) describe the tier of conservation practices, and the particular conservation practices to be implemented, maintained, or improved, in accordance with subsection (d) on the land covered by the conservation security contract for the specified term;

“(C) contain a schedule for the implementation, maintenance, or improvement of the conservation practices described in the conservation security plan during the term of the conservation security contract;

“(D) meet the requirements of the highly erodible land and wetland conservation requirements of subtitles B and C; and “(E) contain such other terms as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(2) COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING.—The Secretary shall encourage owners and operators that enter into conservation security contracts—

“(A) to undertake a comprehensive examination of the opportunities for conserving natural resources and improving the profitability, environmental health, and quality of life in relation to their entire agricultural operations;

“(B) to develop a long-term strategy for implementing, monitoring, and evaluating conservation practices and environmental results in the entire agricultural operation;

“(C) to participate in other Federal, State, local, or private conservation programs;

“(D) to maintain the agricultural integrity of the land; and “(E) to adopt innovative conservation technologies and management practices.

“(3) STATE AND LOCAL CONSERVATION PRIORITIES.—To the maximum extent practicable and in a manner consistent with the conservation security program, each conservation security plan shall address the conservation priorities of the State and locality in which the agricultural operation is located (as determined by the State conservationist in consultation with the State technical committee established under subtitle G and the local working groups of the State technical committee).

“(d) CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—

“(A) ESTABLISHMENT OF TIERS.—The Secretary shall establish 3 tiers of conservation practices that are eligible for payment under a conservation security contract.

“(B) ELIGIBLE CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make eligible for payment under a conservation security contract land management, vegetative, and structural practices that—“(I) are necessary to achieve the objectives of the conservation security plan; and “(II) primarily provide for and have as the primary purpose resource protection and environmental improvement.

“(ii) DETERMINATION.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—In determining the eligibility of a practice described in clause (i), the Secretary shall require the lowest cost alternatives be used to fulfill the objectives of the conservation security plan.

“(II) LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding subclause (I), the adoption of innovative technologies shall, to the maximum extent practicable, not be limited.

“(2) SUSTAINABLE ECONOMIC USES.—With respect to land enrolled in the conservation security program, including all land use adjustment activities specified under Tier II, the Secretary shall permit economic uses of the land that—

“(A) maintain the agricultural nature of land;

“(B) achieve the natural resource and environmental benefits of the plan; and “(C) are approved as part of the conservation security plan.

“(3) ON-FARM RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION.—With respect to land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using a Tier II or Tier III conservation practice established under paragraph (5), the Secretary may approve a conservation security plan that includes on-farm research and demonstration activities, including innovative approaches to—

“(A) total farm planning;

“(B) total resource management;

“(C) integrated farming systems;

“(D) germplasm conservation and regeneration;

“(E) greenhouse gas reduction and carbon sequestration;

“(F) agro-ecological restoration and wildlife habitat restoration;

“(G) agro-forestry;

“(H) invasive species control;

“(I) energy conservation and management; or

“(J) farm and environmental results monitoring and evaluation.

“(4) USE OF HANDBOOK AND GUIDES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In determining eligible conservation practices under the conservation security program, the Secretary shall use the National Handbook of Conservation Practices and the field office technical guides of the Natural Resources Conservation Service.

“(B) CONSERVATION PRACTICE STANDARDS.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Secretary shall establish guidance standards for implementation of eligible conservation practices that shall include measurable goals for enhancing and preventing degradation of resources.

“(C) ADJUSTMENTS.—After providing notice and an opportunity for public participation, the Secretary shall make such adjustments to the National Handbook of Conservation Practices as are necessary to carry out this chapter.

“(D) PILOT TESTING.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Under any of the 3 tiers of conservation practices established under paragraph (5), the Secretary may approve requests by an owner or operator for pilot testing of new technologies and innovative conservation practices and systems.

“(ii) INCORPORATION INTO STANDARDS.—After evaluation by the Secretary and provision of notice and an opportunity for public participation, the Secretary may incorporate new technologies and innovative conservation practices and systems into the standards for implementation of conservation practices established under paragraph (1)(C).

“(5) TIERS.—To carry out this subsection, the Secretary shall establish the following 3 tiers of conservation practices:

“(A) TIER I.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A conservation security plan for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using Tier I conservation practices shall—

“(I) if applicable, address at least 1 resource of concern to the particular agricultural operation;

“(II) apply to the total agricultural operation or to a particular unit of the agricultural operation;

“(III) cover both—

“(aa) conservation practices that are being implemented as of the date on which the conservation security contract is entered into; and

“(IV) meet applicable standards for implementation of conservation practices established under paragraph (4);

“(ii) CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—Tier I conservation practices shall consist of, as appropriate for the agricultural operation of an owner or operator, 1 or more of the following basic conservation activities:

“(I) Soil conservation, quality, and residue management.

“(II) Nutrient management.

“(III) Pest management.

“(IV) Invasive species management.

“(V) Irrigation water conservation and water quality management.

“(VI) Grazing, pasture, and rangeland management.

“(VII) Fish and wildlife habitat management, with special emphasis on species identified by the Natural Heritage Program of the State or the appropriate State agency.

“(VIII) Fish and wildlife protection and enhancement.

“(X) Energy conservation measures.

“(XI) Biological resource conservation and regeneration.

“(XII) Worker health and safety protection measures.

“(XIII) Animal welfare management.

“(XIV) Plant and animal germplasm conservation, evaluation, and development.

“(XV) Contour farming.

“(XVI) Strip cropping.

“(XVII) Cover cropping.

“(XVIII) Sediment dams.

“(XIX) Recordkeeping.

“(XX) Monitoring and evaluation.

“(XXI) Any other conservation practice that the Secretary determines to be appropriate and comparable to other conservation practices described in this clause.

“(iii) TIER II PRACTICES.—A conservation security plan for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using Tier II conservation practices may include Tier II conservation practices.

“(B) TIER II.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A conservation security plan for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using Tier II conservation practices shall—

“(I) address at least 1 resource of concern as specified in the conservation security plan covering the total agricultural operation;

“(II) cover both—

“(aa) conservation practices that are being implemented as of the date on which the conservation security contract is entered into; and

“(III) meet applicable resource management system criteria for the chosen resource of concern of the agricultural operation;

“(ii) CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—Tier II conservation practices shall consist of, as appropriate for the agricultural operation of an owner or operator, any of the Tier I conservation practices and 1 or more of the following land use adjustment or protection practices:

“(I) Resource-conserving crop rotations.

“(II) Controlled, rotational grazing.

“(III) Conversion of portions of cropland from a soil-depleting use to a soil-conserving use, including production of cover crops.

“(IV) Partial field conservation practices (including windbreaks, grass waterways, shelter belts, filter strips, riparian buffers, wetland buffers, contour buffer strips, living snow fences, crosswind trap strips, field borders, grass terraces, wildlife corridors, and critical area planting appropriate to the agricultural operation).

“(V) Fish and wildlife habitat protection and restoration.

“(VI) Native grassland and prairie protection and restoration.

“(VII) Wetland protection and restoration.

“(VIII) Agroforestry practices and systems.

“(IX) Any other conservation practice involving modification of the use of land that the Secretary determines to be appropriate and comparable to other conservation practices described in this clause.

“(C) TIER III.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A conservation security plan for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using Tier III conservation practices shall—

“(I) address all resources of concern in the total agricultural operation;

“(II) cover both—

“(aa) conservation practices that are being implemented as of the date on which the conservation security contract is entered into; and

“(III) meet applicable resource management system criteria;

“(ii) CONSERVATION PRACTICES.—Tier III conservation practices shall consist of, as appropriate for the agricultural operation of an owner or operator—

“(I) appropriate Tier I and Tier II conservation practices; and “(II) development, implementation, and maintenance of a conservation security plan that, over the term of the conservation security contract—

“(aa) integrates a full complement of conservation practices to foster environmental enhancement and the long-term sustainability of the natural resource base of an agricultural operation; and

“(e) CONSERVATION SECURITY CONTRACTS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—On approval of a conservation security plan of an owner or operator, the Secretary shall enter into a conservation security contract with the owner or operator to enroll the land covered by the conservation security plan in the conservation security program.

“(2) TERM.—Subject to paragraphs (3) and (4)—

“(A) a conservation security contract for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using 1 or more Tier I conservation practices shall have a term of 5 years; and “(B) a conservation security contract for land enrolled in the conservation security program that implements a conservation security plan that meets the requirements of subparagraph (B) or (C) of subsection (d)(5) shall have a term of 5 to 10 years, at the option of the owner or operator.

“(3) MODIFICATIONS.—

“(A) OPTIONAL MODIFICATIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—An owner or operator may apply to the Secretary to modify the conservation security plan in a manner consistent with the purposes of the conservation security program.

“(ii) APPROVAL BY THE SECRETARY.—Any modification under clause (i)—

“(I) shall be approved by the Secretary; and “(II) shall authorize the Secretary to re termine, if necessary, the amount and timing of the payments pursuant to the conservation security contract under subsection (h)(2)(C).

“(B) OTHER MODIFICATIONS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may in writing require an owner or operator to modify a conservation security contract before the expiration of the conservation security contract if the Secretary determines that a change made to the type, size, management, or other aspect of the agricultural operation of the owner or operator would, without the modification, significantly interfere with achieving the purposes of the conservation security program.

“(ii) PAYMENTS.—The Secretary may adjust the amount and timing of the payment schedule under the conservation security contract to reflect any modifications required under this subparagraph.

“(iii) DEADLINE.—The Secretary may terminate a conservation security contract if a modification required under this subparagraph is not submitted to the Secretary in the form of an amended conservation security contract by the date that is 90 days after the date of receipt of the written request for the modification.

“(iv) TERMINATION.—An owner or operator that is required to modify a conservation security contract under this subparagraph may, in lieu of modifying the contract—

“(I) terminate the conservation security contract; and “(II) retain payments received under the conservation security contract, if the owner or operator fully complied with the obligations of the owner or operator under the conservation security contract.

“(4) RENEWAL.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—At the option of an owner or operator, the conservation security contract of the owner or operator may be renewed, for a term described in subparagraph (B), if—

“(i) the owner or operator agrees to any modification of the applicable conservation security contract that the Secretary determines to be necessary to achieve the purposes of the conservation security program;

“(ii) the Secretary determines that the owner or operator has complied with the terms and conditions of the conservation security contract, including the conservation security plan; and

“(iii) in the case of a conservation security contract for land previously enrolled at the tier I level in the conservation security program, the owner or operator shall increase the level of conservation treatment on lands enrolled in the conservation security program by—

“(I) adopting new conservation practices; or

“(II) expanding existing practices to meet the resource management systems criteria.

“(B) TERMS OF RENEWAL.—Under subparagraph (A)—

“(i) a conservation security contract for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using a Tier I conservation practice may be renewed for 5-year terms;

“(ii) a conservation security contract for land enrolled in the conservation security program that will be maintained using a Tier II or Tier III conservation practice may be renewed for 5-year to 10-year terms, at the option of the owner or operator; and “(iii) previous participation in the conservation security program does not bar renewal more than once.

“(f) NO VIOLATION FOR NONCOMPLIANCE DUE TO CIRCUMSTANCES BEYOND THE CONTROL OF THE OWNER OR OPERATOR.—The Secretary shall include in the conservation security contract a provision, and may modify a conservation security contract under subsection (e)(3)(B), to ensure that an owner or operator shall not be considered in violation of a conservation security contract for failure to comply with the conservation security contract due to circumstances beyond the control of the owner or operator, including a disaster or related condition.

“(g) DUTIES OF OWNERS AND OPERATORS.—Under a conservation security contract, an owner or operator shall agree, during the term specified under the conservation security contract—

“(1) to implement the applicable conservation security plan approved by the Secretary;

“(2) to keep appropriate records showing the effective and timely implementation of the conservation security plan;

“(3) not to engage in any activity that would interfere with the purposes of the conservation security plan;

“(4) at the option of the Secretary, to refund all or a portion of the payments to the Secretary if the owner or operator fails to maintain a conservation practice, as specified in the conservation security contract; and

“(5) on the violation of a term or condition of the conservation security contract—

“(A) if the Secretary determines that the violation warrants termination of the conservation security contract—

“(i) to forfeit all rights to receive payments under the conservation security contract; and

“(ii) to refund to the Secretary all or a portion of the payments received by the owner or operator under the conservation security contract, including an advance payment and interest on the payments, as determined by the Secretary; or “(B) if the Secretary determines that the violation does not warrant termination of the conservation security contract, to refund to the Secretary, or accept adjustments to, the payments provided to the owner or operator, as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(h) DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY.—

“(1) ADVANCE PAYMENT.—At the time at which a person enters into a conservation security contract, the Secretary shall make an advance payment to the person in an amount not to exceed—

“(A) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier I conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(A), the greater of—

“(i) $1,000; or

“(ii) 20 percent of the value of the annual payment under the contract, as determined by the Secretary;

“(B) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier II conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(B), the greater of—

“(i) $2,000; or

“(ii) 20 percent of the value of the annual payment under the contract, as determined by the Secretary; or

“(C) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier III conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(C), the greater of—

“(i) $3,000; or

“(ii) 20 percent of the value of the annual payment under the contract, as determined by the Secretary.

“(2) ANNUAL PAYMENTS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraphs (B) through (F), under a conservation security contract, the Secretary shall, in amounts and for a period of years specified in the conservation security contract and taking into account any advance payments, make an annual payment to the person in an amount not to exceed—

“(i) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier I conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(A), $20,000;

“(ii) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier II conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(B), $35,000; or “(iii) in the case of a contract to maintain Tier III conservation practices described in subsection (d)(5)(C), $50,000.

“(B) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—The Secretary may periodically, including at the time at which a conservation security contract is renewed, adjust the payment and payment limitations under subparagraph (A) to reflect changes in the Prices Paid by Farmers Index.

“(C) TIME OF PAYMENT.—The Secretary shall provide payment under a conservation security contract as soon as practicable after October 1 of each calendar year.

“(D) CRITERIA FOR DETERMINING AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS.—Subject to subparagraphs (A) and (F), the Secretary shall establish criteria for determining the amount of an annual payment to a person under this paragraph that—“(i) shall be as objective and transparent as practicable; and

“(ii) shall be based on—

“(I) to the maximum extent practicable, outcome-based factors related to the natural resource and environmental benefits that result from the adoption, maintenance, and improvement in implementation of the conservation practices carried out by the person;

“(II) practice-based factors, including—

“(aa) the number of eligible practices established or maintained;

“(cc) the cost of the adoption, maintenance, and improvement in implementation of conservation practices that are newly implemented under the conservation security contract;

“(dd) the extent to which compensation will ensure maintenance and improvement of conservation practices that are or have been implemented;

“(ee) the extent to which the conservation security plan meets applicable resource management system standards;

“(ff) the extent to which the conservation security plan addresses State and local conservation priorities as provided for under subsection (c)(3); and “(gg) the extent of activities undertaken beyond what is required to comply with any applicable Federal agricultural law;

“(III) additional cost factors, including—

“(aa) the income loss or economic value forgone by the person due to land use adjustments resulting from the adoption, maintenance, and improvement of conservation practices;

“(bb) the costs associated with any on-farm research, demonstration, or pilot testing components of the conservation security plan; and

“(cc) the costs associated with monitoring and evaluating results under the conservation security plan; and “(IV) such other factors as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to encourage participation in the conservation security program and to reward environmental stewardship.

“(E) BONUS PAYMENT.—Subject to subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall offer bonus payments based on—

“(i) participation in a watershed or regional resource conservation plan involving at least 75 percent of landowners in the targeted area; and “(ii) the special considerations associated with an owner or operator that is a qualified beginning farmer or rancher (as defined in section 343(a) of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1991(a))).

“(F) LAND ENROLLED IN OTHER CONSERVATION PROGRAMS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, if an owner or operator has land enrolled in another conservation program administered by the Secretary and has applied to enroll the same land in the conservation security program, the owner or operator may elect to—

“(I) convert the contract under the other conservation program to a conservation security contract, without penalty, except that this subclause shall not apply to a long-term permanent conservation or easement; or

“(II) have each annual payment to the owner or operator under this paragraph reduced to reflect payment for practices the owner or operator receives under the other conservation program, except that the annual payment under this paragraph may include incentives for qualified practices that enhance or extend the conservation benefit achieved under the other conservation program.

“(ii) PAYMENT LIMITATIONS.—If an owner or operator has identical land enrolled in the conservation security program and one or more other conservation programs administered by the Secretary, the Secretary shall include all payments, other than easement or rental payments, from the conservation security program and the other conservation programs in applying the annual payment limitations under subparagraph (A).

“(iii) PAYMENT FROM NON-FEDERAL AGRICULTURAL PROGRAMS.—Payments received from a Federal program administered by the Secretary, or any State, local, or private agricultural program, shall not be considered an annual payment for purposes of the annual payment limitations under subparagraph (A).

“(G) WASTE STORAGE OR TREATMENT FACILITIES.—An annual payment to an owner or operator under this paragraph shall not be provided for the purpose of construction or maintenance of animal waste storage or treatment facilities or associated waste transport or transfer devices for animal feeding operations.

“(3) REGULATIONS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall issue regulations—

“(i) defining the term ‘person’ for the purposes of this chapter—

“(I) which regulations shall conform, to the extent practicable, to the regulations defining the term ‘person’ issued under section 1001; and

“(II) which term shall be defined so that no individual directly or indirectly may receive payments exceeding the applicable amount specified in paragraph (1) or (2);

“(ii) providing adequate safeguards to protect the interests of tenants and sharecroppers, including provision for sharing, on a fair and equitable basis; and “(iii) prescribing such other rules as the Secretary determines to be necessary to ensure a fair and reasonable application of the limitations established under paragraphs (1) and (2).

“(B) PENALTIES FOR SCHEMES OR DEVICES.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary determines that a person has adopted a scheme or device to evade, or that has the purpose of evading, the regulations issued under subparagraph (A), the person shall be ineligible to participate in the conservation security program for the year for which the scheme or device was adopted and each of the following 5 years.

“(ii) FRAUD.—If the Secretary determines that fraud was committed in connection with the scheme or device, the person shall be ineligible to participate in the conservation security program for the year for which the scheme or device was adopted and each of the following 10 years.

“(4) TERMINATION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (g), the Secretary shall allow an owner or operator to terminate the conservation security contract.

“(B) PAYMENTS.—The owner or operator may retain any or all payments received under a terminated conservation security contract if—

“(i) the owner or operator is in full compliance with the terms and conditions, including any maintenance requirements, of the conservation security contract; and “(ii) the Secretary determines that retention of payment will not defeat the goals enumerated in the conservation security plan of the owner or operator.

“(5) TRANSFER OR CHANGE OF INTEREST IN LAND SUBJECT TO CONSERVATION SECURITY CONTRACT.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the transfer, or change in the interest, of an owner or operator in land subject to a conservation security contract shall result in the termination of the conservation security contract.

“(B) TRANSFER OF DUTIES AND RIGHTS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if, not later than 60 days after the date of the transfer or change in the interest in land, the transferee of the land provides written notice to the Secretary that all duties and rights under the conservation security contract have been transferred to the transferee.

“(6) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall use such sums as are necessary from funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide technical assistance to owners and operators for the development and implementation of conservation security contracts.

“(B) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE PROVIDED BY PERSONS NOT EMPLOYED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Under subparagraph (A), subject to clause (ii), technical assistance provided by qualified persons not employed by the Department of Agriculture, including farmers, ranchers, and local conservation district personnel, may include—

“(I) conservation planning;

“(II) design, installation, and certification of conservation practices;

“(III) training for producers; and “(IV) such other activities as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(ii) OUTSIDE ASSISTANCE.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may contract directly with qualified persons not employed by the Department of Agriculture to provide technical assistance.

“(II) PAYMENT BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary may provide a payment or voucher to an owner or operator enrolled in the conservation security program if the owner or operator chooses to contract with qualified persons not employed by the Department of Agriculture.

“(iii) COORDINATION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall provide overall technical coordination and leadership for the conservation security program, including final approval of all conservation security plans.

“(7) EDUCATION, OUTREACH, MONITORING, AND EVALUATION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—

“(i) FUNDING.—In addition to the amounts made available under paragraph (6), for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall use such sums as are necessary from funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation to carry out education, outreach, monitoring, and evaluation activities in support of the conservation security program, of which not less than 50 percent of the sums shall be used for monitoring and evaluation activities.

“(ii) AMOUNT.—For each fiscal year, the amount made available under clause (i) shall be not less than 40 percent of the amount made available for technical assistance under paragraph (6) for the fiscal year.

“(B) USE OF PERSONS NOT AFFILIATED WITH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out activities described in subparagraph (A), the Secretary may use persons not employed by the Department of Agriculture, including networks of agricultural producers operating in a small watershed, local conservation district personnel, or other appropriate local entity.

“(ii) EDUCATION, OUTREACH, AND MONITORING.—The Secretary may contract with private non-profit, community-based organizations, and educational institutions with demonstrated experience in providing education, outreach, monitoring, evaluation, or related services to agricultural producers (including owners and operators of small and medium-size farms, socially disadvantaged agricultural producers, and limited resource agricultural producers).

“(C) INCLUDED ACTIVITIES.—Activities described in subparagraph (A) may include innovative uses of computer technology and remote sensing to monitor and evaluate resource and environmental results on a local, regional, or national level.

“(8) SOCIALLY DISADVANTAGED AND LIMITED RESOURCE OWNERS AND OPERATORS.—The Secretary shall provide outreach, training, and technical assistance specifically to encourage and assist socially disadvantaged owners and operators to participate in the conservation security program.

“(9) PROGRAM EVALUATION.—The Secretary shall maintain data concerning conservation security plans, conservation practices planned or implemented, environmental outcomes, economic costs, and related matters under this section.

“(10) CONFIDENTIALITY.—To maintain confidentiality, the Secretary shall not release or disclose publicly the conservation security plan of an owner or operator under this chapter unless the Secretary—

“(A) obtains the authorization of the owner or operator for the release or disclosure;

“(B) releases the information in an anonymous or aggregated form; or

“(C)(i) is otherwise required by law to release or disclose the plan and;

“(ii) releases the plan in an anonymous or aggregated form.

“(11) MEDIATION AND INFORMAL HEARINGS.—If the Secretary makes a decision under this chapter that is adverse to an owner or operator, at the request of the owner or operator, the Secretary shall provide the owner or operator with mediation services or an informal hearing on the decision.

“(i) REPORTS.—Not later than 18 months after the date of enactment of this chapter and at the end of each 2-year period thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report evaluating the results of the conservation security program, including—

“(1) an evaluation of the scope, quality, and outcomes of the conservation practices carried out under this section; and

“(2) recommendations for achieving specific and quantifiable improvements for each of the purposes specified in subsection (a).

“(j) FUNDING.—Of the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Corporation shall make available to carry out this chapter such sums as are necessary, to remain available until expended.

“(k) EXEMPTION FROM AUTOMATIC SEQUESTER.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no order issued for any fiscal year under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (2 U.S.C. 902) shall affect any payment under this chapter.”.

(b) ADMINISTRATION.—Section 1243(a) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3843(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(C), by striking “and” at the end;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end and inserting “; and”; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(3) the conservation security program established under chapter 6 of subtitle D.”.

(c) STATE TECHNICAL COMMITTEES.—Section 1262(c)(8) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3862(c)(8)) is amended by striking “chapter 4” and inserting “chapters 4 and 6”.

SEC. 4. REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate such regulations as are necessary to carry out this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mrs. CLINTON, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 933. A bill to amend the Federal Power Act to encourage the development and deployment of innovative and efficient energy technologies; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, with Senators CLINTON, LEAHY, LIEBERMAN, and SCHUMER, the Combined Heat and Power Advancement Act of 2001. This legislation ensures that highly efficient sources of electricity, such as combined heat and power systems, are able to interconnect nationwide with the electricity grid by establishing uniform and nondiscriminatory interconnection standards. Enabling these innovative, clean, and efficient technologies to come online will reduce energy costs and help protect public health and the environment.

Last week, President Bush released the National Energy Policy Development Group's comprehensive energy plan. I am pleased this plan includes recommendations related to increasing energy conservation and efficiency. Specially, the plan recommends the development of well-designed combined heat and power, CHP, systems.

I am heartened that President Bush recognizes the positive impact that CHP systems can have on our nation's energy needs. These innovative systems produce both electricity and steam from a single fuel source in a facility located near the consumer. By recovering and utilizing waste heat, these systems save fuel that would otherwise be needed to produce heat or steam in a separate unit. CHP systems can reach energy efficiency levels in excess of 80 percent. This is well above the 33 percent average for conventional electrical generation technologies. In short, the U.S. can obtain more than twice the power from the same amount of energy by widely implementing combined heat and power technologies and applications.

Unfortunately, several regulatory and policy barriers block the widespread use of these innovative technologies. The bill would ensure that CHP systems and other innovative technologies can interconnect with a local distribution utility and that the costs of such interconnections shall be just reasonable, and not unduly discriminatory.

Currently, there are roughly 50 Gigawatts, GW, of energy produced from CHP systems annually. If this barrier is removed, 50 GW of additional CHP electrical generating capacity could be brought to market by 2010. To illustrate the magnitude of potential savings to the entire nation, the result of this additional capacity is equal to all the energy needed to power Massachusetts. Most of these systems are targeted for industry, where thermal and electrical needs are most often located close together. However, there is also tremendous potential for CHP in homes. Fifty GW of CHP could light and heat 50 million homes, or 43 percent of all U.S. homes, for the same energy that the central station plans could only light the homes. With removal of regulatory barriers, these efficient systems may begin to be economical at the small sizes suitable for homes.

We cannot solve today's energy problems with yesterday's solutions. CHP represents an innovative approach to expanding energy supply by maximizing energy efficiency. These systems will encourage technological innovations, reduce energy prices, spur economic development, enhance productivity, increase employment, improve environmental quality, and advance energy security and reliability in the United States.

I invite my colleagues to join me in my efforts to promote combined heat and power by co-sponsoring this important legislation. I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 933

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the “Combined Heat and Power Advancement Act of 2001”.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the removal of barriers to the development and deployment of combined heat and power technologies and systems, an example of an array of innovative energy-supply and energy-efficient technologies and systems, would—

(A) encourage technological innovation;

(B) reduce energy prices;

(C) spur economic development;

(D) enhance productivity;

(E) increase employment; and

(F) improve environmental quality and energy self-sufficiency;

(2) the level of efficiency of the United States electricity-generating system has been stagnant over the past several decades;

(3) technologies and systems available as of the date of enactment of this Act, including a host of innovative onsite, distributed generation technologies, could—

(A) dramatically increase productivity;

(B) double the efficiency of the United States electricity-generating system; and

(C) reduce emissions of regulated pollutants and greenhouse gases;

(4) innovative electric technologies emit a much lower level of pollutants as compared to the average quantity of pollutants generated by United States electric generating plants as of the date of enactment of this Act;

(5) a significant proportion of the United States energy infrastructure will need to be replaced by 2010;

(6) the public interest would best be served if that infrastructure were replaced by innovative technologies that dramatically increase productivity, improve efficiency, and reduce pollution;

(7) financing and regulatory practices in effect as of the date of enactment of this Act do not recognize the environmental and economic benefits to be obtained from the avoidance of transmission and distribution losses, and the reduced load on the electricity-generating system, provided by onsite, combined heat and power production;

(8) many legal, regulatory, informational, and perceptual barriers block the development and dissemination of combined heat and power and other innovative energy technologies; and

(9) because of those barriers, United States taxpayers are not receiving the benefits of the substantial research and development investment in innovative energy technologies made by the Federal Government.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to encourage energy productivity and efficiency increases by removing barriers to the development and deployment of combined heat and power technologies and systems.

SEC. 4. INTERCONNECTION.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—Section 3 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 796) is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (23) and inserting the following:

“(23) TRANSMITTING UTILITY.—The term ‘transmitting utility’ means any entity (notwithstanding section 201(f)) that owns, controls, or operates an electric power transmission facility that is used for the sale of electric energy.”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(26) APPROPRIATE REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—The term ‘appropriate regulatory authority’ means—

“(A) the Commission;

“(B) a State commission;

“(C) a municipality; or

“(D) a cooperative that is self-regulating under State law and is not a public utility.

“(27) GENERATING FACILITY.—The term ‘generating facility’ means a facility that generates electric energy.

“(28) LOCAL DISTRIBUTION UTILITY.—The term ‘local distribution utility’ means an entity that owns, controls, or operates an electric power distribution facility that is used for the sale of electric energy.

“(29) NON-FEDERAL REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—The term ‘non-Federal regulatory authority’ means an appropriate regulatory authority other than the Commission.”.

(b) INTERCONNECTION TO DISTRIBUTION FACILITIES.—Section 210 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824i) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (g); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (d) the following:

“(e) INTERCONNECTION TO DISTRIBUTION FACILITIES.—

“(1) INTERCONNECTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—A local distribution utility shall interconnect a generating facility with the distribution facilities of the local distribution utility if the owner of the generating facility—

“(i) complies with the final rule promulgated under paragraph (2); and “(ii) pays the costs of the interconnection.

“(B) COSTS.—The costs of the interconnection—

“(i) shall be just and reasonable, and not unduly discriminatory, as determined by the appropriate regulatory authority; and “(ii) shall be comparable to the costs charged by the local distribution utility for interconnection by any similarly situated generating facility to the distribution facilities of the local distribution utility.

“(C) APPLICABLE REQUIREMENTS.—The right of a generating facility to interconnect under subparagraph (A) does not—

“(i) relieve the generating facility or the local distribution utility of other Federal, State, or local requirements; or “(ii) provide the generating facility with transmission or distribution service.

“(2) RULE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, the Commission shall promulgate a final rule to establish reasonable and appropriate technical standards for the interconnection of a generating facility with the distribution facilities of a local distribution utility.

“(B) PROCESS.—To the extent feasible, the Commission shall develop the standards through a process involving interested parties.

“(C) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The Commission shall establish an advisory committee composed of qualified experts to make recommendations to the Commission concerning development of the standards.

“(D) ADMINISTRATION.—

“(i) BY A NON-FEDERAL REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—Except where subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission pursuant to provisions other than clause (ii), a non-Federal regulatory authority may administer and enforce the rule promulgated under subparagraph (A).

“(ii) BY THE COMMISSION.—To the extent that a non-Federal regulatory authority does not administer and enforce the rule, the Commission shall administer and enforce the rule with respect to interconnection in that jurisdiction.

“(3) RIGHT TO BACKUP POWER.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with subparagraph (B), a local distribution utility shall offer to sell backup power to a generating facility that has interconnected with the local distribution utility to the extent that the local distribution utility—

“(i) is not subject to an order of a non-Federal regulatory authority to provide open access to the distribution facilities of the local distribution utility;

“(ii) has not offered to provide open access to the distribution facilities of the local distribution utility; or

“(iii) does not allow a generating facility to purchase backup power from another entity using the distribution facilities of the local distribution utility.

“(B) RATES, TERMS, AND CONDITIONS.—A sale of backup power under subparagraph (A) shall be at such a rate, and under such terms and conditions, as are just and reasonable and not unduly discriminatory or preferential, taking into account the actual incremental cost, whenever incurred by the local distribution utility, to supply such backup power service during the period in which the backup power service is provided, as determined by the appropriate regulatory authority.

“(C) NO REQUIREMENT FOR CERTAIN SALES.—A local distribution utility shall not be required to offer backup power for resale to any entity other than the entity for which the backup power is purchased.

“(D) NEW OR EXPANDED LOADS.—To the extent backup power is used to serve a new or expanded load on the distribution system, the generating facility shall pay any reasonable costs associated with any transmission, distribution, or generation upgrade required to provide such service.”.

(c) INTERCONNECTION TO TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.—Section 210 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824i) is amended by inserting after subsection (e) (as added by subsection (b)) the following:

“(f) INTERCONNECTION TO TRANSMISSION FACILITIES.—

“(1) INTERCONNECTION.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsections (a) and (c), a transmitting utility shall interconnect a generating facility with the transmission facilities of the transmitting utility if the owner of the generating facility—

“(i) complies with the final rule promulgated under paragraph (2); and “(ii) pays the costs of the interconnection.

“(B) COSTS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), the costs of the interconnection—

“(I) shall be just and reasonable and not unduly discriminatory; and “(II) shall be comparable to the costs charged by the transmitting utility for interconnection by any similarly situated generating facility to the transmitting facilities of the transmitting utility.

“(ii) EFFECT OF FERC LITE.—A non-Federal regulatory authority that, under any provision of Federal law enacted before, on, or after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, is authorized to determine the rates for transmission service shall be authorized to determine the costs of any interconnection under this subparagraph in accordance with that provision of Federal law.

“(C) APPLICABLE REQUIREMENTS.—The right of a generating facility to interconnect under subparagraph (A) does not—

“(i) relieve the generating facility or the transmitting utility of other Federal, State, or local requirements; or “(ii) provide the generating facility with transmission or distribution service.

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this subparagraph, the Commission shall promulgate a final rule to establish reasonable and appropriate technical standards for the interconnection of a generating facility with the transmission facilities of a transmitting utility.

“(B) PROCESS.—To the extent feasible, the Commission shall develop the standards through a process involving interested parties.

“(C) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The Commission shall establish an advisory committee composed of qualified experts to make recommendations to the Commission concerning development of the standards.

“(3) RIGHT TO BACKUP POWER.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—In accordance with subparagraph (B), a transmitting utility shall offer to sell backup power to a generating facility that has interconnected with the transmitting utility unless—

“(i) Federal or State law (including regulations) allows a generating facility to purchase backup power from an entity other than the transmitting utility; or

“(ii) a transmitting utility allows a generating facility to purchase backup power from an entity other than the transmitting utility using—

“(I) the transmission facilities of the transmitting utility; and “(II) the transmission facilities of any other transmitting utility.

“(B) RATES, TERMS, AND CONDITIONS.—A sale of backup power under subparagraph (A) shall be at such a rate, and under such terms and conditions, as are just and reasonable and not unduly discriminatory or preferential, taking into account the actual incremental cost, whenever incurred by the local distribution utility, to supply such backup power service during the period in which the backup power service is provided, as determined by the appropriate regulatory authority.

“(C) NO REQUIREMENT FOR CERTAIN SALES.—A transmitting utility shall not be required to offer backup power for resale to any entity other than the entity for which the backup power is purchased.

“(D) NEW OR EXPANDED LOADS.—To the extent backup power is used to serve a new or expanded load on the transmission system, the generating facility shall pay any reasonable costs associated with any transmission, distribution, or generation upgrade required to provide such service.”.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 210 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 824i) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1)—

(A) by inserting “transmitting utility, local distribution utility,” after “electric utility,”; and

(B) in subparagraph (A), by inserting “any transmitting utility,” after “small power production facility,”;

(2) in subsection (b)(2), by striking "an evidentiary hearing" and inserting "a hearing";

(3) in subsection (c)(2)—

(A) in subparagraph (B), by striking "or" at the end;

(B) in subparagraph (C), by striking "and" at the end and inserting "or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(D) promote competition in electricity markets, and"; and

(4) in subsection (d), by striking the last sentence.

By Mr. BURNS (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 934. A bill to require the Secretary of the Interior to construct the Rocky Boy's North Central Montana Regional Water System in the State of Montana, to offer to enter into an agreement with the Chippewa Cree Tribe to plan, design, construct, operate, maintain and replace the rocky Boy's Rural Water System, and to provide assistance to the North Central Montana Regional Water Authority for the planning, design, and construction of the noncore system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I am pleased today to join my colleague from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, in introducing the Rocky Boy's/North Central Montana Regional Water System Act of 2001. The purpose of this bill is to authorize a regional water delivery system which will serve both the Rocky Boy's Reservation and the surrounding region in north central Montana. For the last few years I have been working on this bill with the members of the Chippewa Cree Tribe, the citizens of the six towns affected, and the users of the eight water districts who have joined together to bring clean, safe drinking water to their families. More than 30,000 people would be serviced by this rural water system.

This bill is needed now for a number of reasons. First, it will provide a means to import water to the Rocky Boy's Reservation for drinking and for other everyday needs. Over the last decade, the population of the Rocky Boy's Reservation has grown by 40 percent, leaving existing water infrastructure insufficient. Secondly, there are three small water systems in the region which are currently operating out of compliance with the EPA's Surface Water Treatment Rule. Others are nearing non-compliance, and one has been issued an administrative rule by the Montana Department of Environmental Quality to begin water treatment as soon as possible.

This bill helps us to realize that simply maintaining a small town or district's water system can be so expensive and filled with red tape that its users can hardly afford it. Under current law even if small systems are able to be developed, they must be continually monitored and the results reported. That may not be a problem in a larger community with a sizeable tax base and a labor pool, but in a rural setting those expenses and responsibilities are spread between so few people that it can quickly become a major problem. I know rural Montana. I can tell you our very smallest towns are hurting. They are deeply affected by a lagging agricultural economy, and the inability to provide water for any number of reasons could be enough to shut a small town down. Is that what we want? I don't think so. One of the ways we can address that problem is with the development of regional water systems, which are more efficient, and easier to manage.

I truly believe it is time to stand up and face our commitments to Indian Country and rural America head on. This bill is the perfect opportunity for that, because it uses the teamwork of committed citizens and builds on the system they have developed. This is a very good example of cooperation between tribal and non-tribal entities, and of what happens when people come to the table ready to find a solution.

This project has been a long time coming. The State of Montana committed to it in 1997 with a promise of $10 million for construction, and by providing technical assistance through the Montana Department of Environmental Quality. Initial federal assistance followed in the form of an appropriation of $300,000 for engineering and planning for fiscal year 2000. The report was completed and the preliminary engineering is complete. With the passage of the water compact settling the water rights between the Chippewa Cree Tribe and Montana, P.L. 106-163 signed by President Clinton in 1999, the stage was set for this project to be built.

All the bases have been covered and it is time to authorize this project. There is a real need for a less burdensome way to manage the water needs of the area. The Rocky Boy's Reservation is in need of an expanded water source and system, and smaller water districts and municipalities are also struggling to stay in operation. The best way to solve both these problems at once is to build an efficient regional water system. I propose we do just that and show our commitment to rural America.

Subtitle B—Long-Term Care and Retirement Security

SEC. ____ . TREATMENT OF PREMIUMS ON QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 (relating to additional itemized deductions), as amended by this Act, is amended by redesignating section 223 as section 224 and by inserting after section 222 the following new section:

‘‘SEC. 223. PREMIUMS ON QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.’’

‘‘(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a deduction an amount equal to the applicable percentage of the amount of eligible long-term care premiums (as defined in section 213(d)(10)) paid during the taxable year for coverage for the taxpayer, his spouse, and dependents under a qualified long-term care insurance contract (as defined in section 7702B(b)).

‘‘(b) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

‘‘(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection, the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table based on the number of years of continuous coverage (as of the close of the taxable year) of the individual under any qualified long-term care insurance contracts (as defined in section 7702B(b)):

If the number of years of continuous coverage is—	The applicable long-term care percentage is—
Less than 1	60
At least 1 but less than 2	70
At least 2 but less than 3	80
At least 3 but less than 4	90
At least 4	100.

‘‘(2) SPECIAL RULES FOR INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE ATTAINED AGE 55.—In the case of an individual who has attained age 55 as of the close of the taxable year, the following table shall be substituted for the table in paragraph (1).

If the number of years of continuous coverage is—	The applicable long-term care percentage is—
Less than 1	70
At least 1 but less than 2	85
At least 2	100.

‘‘(3) ONLY COVERAGE AFTER 2000 TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—Only coverage for periods after December 31, 2000, shall be taken into account under this subsection.

‘‘(4) CONTINUOUS COVERAGE.—An individual shall not fail to be treated as having continuous coverage if the aggregate breaks in coverage during any 1-year period are less than 60 days.

‘‘(c) COORDINATION WITH OTHER DEDUCTIONS.—Any amount paid by a taxpayer for any qualified long-term care insurance contract to which subsection (a) applies shall not be taken into account in computing the amount allowable to the taxpayer as a deduction under section 162(l) or 213(a).’’

(b) LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE PERMITTED TO BE OFFERED UNDER CAFETERIA PLANS AND FLEXIBLE SPENDING ARRANGEMENTS.—

(1) CAFETERIA PLANS.—Section 125(f) (defining qualified benefits) is amended by inserting before the period at the end ‘‘; except that such term shall include the payment of premiums for any qualified long-term care insurance contract (as defined in section 7702B) to the extent the amount of such payment does not exceed the eligible long-term care premiums (as defined in section 213(d)(10)) for such contract’’.

(2) FLEXIBLE SPENDING ARRANGEMENTS.—Section 106 (relating to contributions by an employer to accident and health plans) is amended by striking subsection (c).

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 62(a), as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting after paragraph (18) the following new item:

‘‘(19) PREMIUMS ON QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACTS.—The deduction allowed by section 223.’’

(2) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1, as amended by this Act, is amended by striking the last item and inserting the following new items:

"Sec. 223. Premiums on qualified long-term care insurance contracts.

"Sec. 224. Cross reference."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

(2) CAFETERIA PLANS AND FLEXIBLE SPENDING ARRANGEMENTS.—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2002.

SEC. ____ CREDIT FOR TAXPAYERS WITH LONG-TERM CARE NEEDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to non-refundable personal credits), as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting after section 25C the following new section:

"SEC. 25D. CREDIT FOR TAXPAYERS WITH LONG-TERM CARE NEEDS.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the applicable credit amount multiplied by the number of applicable individuals with respect to whom the taxpayer is an eligible caregiver for the taxable year.

"(2) APPLICABLE CREDIT AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable credit amount shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

"For taxable years beginning in calendar year—	The applicable credit amount is—
2001	$1,000
2002	1,500
2003	2,000
2004	2,500
2005 or thereafter	3,000.

"(b) LIMITATION BASED ON ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of the credit allowable under subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by $100 for each $1,000 (or fraction thereof) by which the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income exceeds the threshold amount. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'modified adjusted gross income' means adjusted gross income increased by any amount excluded from gross income under section 911, 931, or 933.

"(2) THRESHOLD AMOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'threshold amount' means—

"(A) $150,000 in the case of a joint return, and

"(B) $75,000 in any other case.

"(3) INDEXING.—In the case of any taxable year beginning in a calendar year after 2001, each dollar amount contained in paragraph (2) shall be increased by an amount equal to the product of—

"(A) such dollar amount, and

"(B) the medical care cost adjustment determined under section 213(d)(10)(B)(ii) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined by substituting 'August 2000' for 'August 1996' in subclause (II) thereof.

If any increase determined under the preceding sentence is not a multiple of $50, such increase shall be rounded to the next lowest multiple of $50.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) APPLICABLE INDIVIDUAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'applicable individual' means, with respect to any taxable year, any individual who has been certified, before the due date for filing the return of tax for the taxable year (without extensions), by a physician (as defined in section 1861(r)(1) of the Social Security Act) as being an individual with long-term care needs described in subparagraph (B) for a period—

"(i) which is at least 180 consecutive days, and

"(ii) a portion of which occurs within the taxable year.

Such term shall not include any individual otherwise meeting the requirements of the preceding sentence unless within the 39½ month period ending on such due date (or such other period as the Secretary prescribes) a physician (as so defined) has certified that such individual meets such requirements.

"(B) INDIVIDUALS WITH LONG-TERM CARE NEEDS.—An individual is described in this subparagraph if the individual meets any of the following requirements:

"(i) The individual is at least 6 years of age and—

"(I) is unable to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) at least 3 activities of daily living (as defined in section 7702B(c)(2)(B)) due to a loss of functional capacity, or

"(II) requires substantial supervision to protect such individual from threats to health and safety due to severe cognitive impairment and is unable to perform, without reminding or cuing assistance, at least 1 activity of daily living (as so defined) or to the extent provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary (in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services), is unable to engage in age appropriate activities.

"(ii) The individual is at least 2 but not 6 years of age and is unable due to a loss of functional capacity to perform (without substantial assistance from another individual) at least 2 of the following activities: eating, transferring, or mobility.

"(iii) The individual is under 2 years of age and requires specific durable medical equipment by reason of a severe health condition or requires a skilled practitioner trained to address the individual's condition to be available if the individual's parents or guardians are absent.

"(2) ELIGIBLE CAREGIVER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A taxpayer shall be treated as an eligible caregiver for any taxable year with respect to the following individuals:

"(i) The taxpayer.

"(ii) The taxpayer's spouse.

"(iii) An individual with respect to whom the taxpayer is allowed a deduction under section 151 for the taxable year.

"(iv) An individual who would be described in clause (iii) for the taxable year if section 151(c)(1)(A) were applied by substituting for the exemption amount an amount equal to the sum of the exemption amount, the standard deduction under section 63(c)(2)(C), and any additional standard deduction under section 63(c)(3) which would be applicable to the individual if clause (iii) applied.

"(v) An individual who would be described in clause (iii) for the taxable year if—

"(I) the requirements of clause (iv) are met with respect to the individual, and

"(II) the requirements of subparagraph (B) are met with respect to the individual in lieu of the support test of section 152(a).

"(B) RESIDENCY TEST.—The requirements of this subparagraph are met if an individual has as his principal place of abode the home of the taxpayer and—

"(i) in the case of an individual who is an ancestor or descendant of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse, is a member of the taxpayer's household for over half the taxable year, or

"(ii) in the case of any other individual, is a member of the taxpayer's household for the entire taxable year.

"(C) SPECIAL RULES WHERE MORE THAN 1 ELIGIBLE CAREGIVER.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If more than 1 individual is an eligible caregiver with respect to the same applicable individual for taxable years ending with or within the same calendar year, a taxpayer shall be treated as the eligible caregiver if each such individual (other than the taxpayer) files a written declaration (in such form and manner as the Secretary may prescribe) that such individual will not claim such applicable individual for the credit under this section.

"(ii) NO AGREEMENT.—If each individual required under clause (i) to file a written declaration under clause (i) does not do so, the individual with the highest modified adjusted gross income (as defined in section 32(c)(5)) shall be treated as the eligible caregiver.

"(iii) MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATELY.—In the case of married individuals filing separately, the determination under this subparagraph as to whether the husband or wife is the eligible caregiver shall be made under the rules of clause (ii) (whether or not one of them has filed a written declaration under clause (i)).

"(d) IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—No credit shall be allowed under this section to a taxpayer with respect to any applicable individual unless the taxpayer includes the name and taxpayer identification number of such individual, and the identification number of the physician certifying such individual, on the return of tax for the taxable year.

"(e) TAXABLE YEAR MUST BE FULL TAXABLE YEAR.—Except in the case of a taxable year closed by reason of the death of the taxpayer, no credit shall be allowable under this section in the case of a taxable year covering a period of less than 12 months."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 6213(g)(2) is amended by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (K), by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (L) and inserting ", and", and by inserting after subparagraph (L) the following new subparagraph:

"(M) an omission of a correct TIN or physician identification required under section 25D(d) (relating to credit for taxpayers with long-term care needs) to be included on a return."

(2) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25C the following new item:

"Sec. 25D. Credit for taxpayers with long-term care needs."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. ____ ADDITIONAL CONSUMER PROTECTIONS FOR LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.

(a) ADDITIONAL PROTECTIONS APPLICABLE TO LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 7702B(g)(2) (relating to requirements of model regulation and Act) are amended to read as follows:

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any contract if such contract meets—

“(i) MODEL REGULATION.—The following requirements of the model regulation:

“(I) Section 6A (relating to guaranteed renewal or noncancellability), and the requirements of section 6B of the model Act relating to such section 6A.

“(II) Section 6B (relating to prohibitions on limitations and exclusions).

“(III) Section 6C (relating to extension of benefits).

“(IV) Section 6D (relating to continuation or conversion of coverage).

“(V) Section 6E (relating to discontinuance and replacement of policies).

“(VI) Section 7 (relating to unintentional lapse).

“(VII) Section 8 (relating to disclosure), other than section 8F thereof.

“(VIII) Section 11 (relating to prohibitions against post-claims underwriting).

“(X) Section 13 (relating to requirement to offer inflation protection), except that any requirement for a signature on a rejection of inflation protection shall permit the signature to be on an application or on a separate form.

“(XI) Section 25 (relating to prohibition against preexisting conditions and probationary periods in replacement policies or certificates).

“(XII) The provisions of section 26 relating to contingent nonforfeiture benefits, if the policyholder declines the offer of a nonforfeiture provision described in paragraph (4).

“(ii) MODEL ACT.—The following requirements of the model Act:

“(I) Section 6C (relating to preexisting conditions).

“(II) Section 6D (relating to prior hospitalization).

“(III) The provisions of section 8 relating to contingent nonforfeiture benefits, if the policyholder declines the offer of a nonforfeiture provision described in paragraph (4).

“(B) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

“(i) MODEL PROVISIONS.—The terms ‘model regulation’ and ‘model Act’ mean the long-term care insurance model regulation, and the long-term care insurance model Act, respectively, promulgated by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (as adopted as of September 2000).

“(ii) COORDINATION.—Any provision of the model regulation or model Act listed under clause (i) or (ii) of subparagraph (A) shall be treated as including any other provision of such regulation or Act necessary to implement the provision.

“(iii) DETERMINATION.—For purposes of this section and section 4980C, the determination of whether any requirement of a model regulation or the model Act has been met shall be made by the Secretary.”

(b) EXCISE TAX.—Paragraph (1) of section 4980C(c) (relating to requirements of model provisions) is amended to read as follows:

“(1) REQUIREMENTS OF MODEL PROVISIONS.—

“(A) MODEL REGULATION.—The following requirements of the model regulation must be met:

“(i) Section 9 (relating to required disclosure of rating practices to consumer).”

“(ii) Section 14 (relating to application forms and replacement coverage).

“(iii) Section 15 (relating to reporting requirements), except that the issuer shall also report at least annually the number of claims denied during the reporting period for each class of business (expressed as a percentage of claims denied), other than claims denied for failure to meet the waiting period or because of any applicable preexisting condition.

“(iv) Section 22 (relating to filing requirements for marketing).

“(v) Section 23 (relating to standards for marketing), including inaccurate completion of medical histories, other than paragraphs (1), (6), and (9) of section 23C, except that—

“(I) in addition to such requirements, no person shall, in selling or offering to sell a qualified long-term care insurance contract, misrepresent a material fact; and “(II) no such requirements shall include a requirement to inquire or identify whether a prospective applicant or enrollee for long-term care insurance has accident and sickness insurance.

“(vi) Section 24 (relating to suitability).

“(vii) Section 29 (relating to standard format outline of coverage).

“(viii) Section 30 (relating to requirement to deliver shopper’s guide).

The requirements referred to in clause (vi) shall not include those portions of the personal worksheet described in Appendix B relating to consumer protection requirements not imposed by section 4980C or 7702B.

“(B) MODEL ACT.—The following requirements of the model Act must be met:

“(i) Section 6F (relating to right to return), except that such section shall also apply to denials of applications and any refund shall be made within 30 days of the return or denial.

“(ii) Section 6G (relating to outline of coverage).

“(iii) Section 6H (relating to requirements for certificates under group plans).

“(iv) Section 6I (relating to policy summary).

“(v) Section 6J (relating to monthly reports on accelerated death benefits).

“(vi) Section 7 (relating to incontestability period).

“(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the terms ‘model regulation’ and ‘model Act’ have the meanings given such terms by section 7702B(g)(2)(B).”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to policies issued more than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SA 764. Mr. DURBIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 314, after line 21, insert the following:

SEC. ____ DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS INCREASED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 162(l)(1) (relating to special rules for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals) is amended to read as follows:

“(1) ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), there shall be allowed as a deduction under this section an amount equal to the amount paid during the taxable year for insurance which constitutes medical care for the taxpayer, the taxpayer’s spouse, and dependents.”

(b) CLARIFICATION OF LIMITATIONS ON OTHER COVERAGE.—The first sentence of section 162(l)(2)(B) is amended to read as follows: “Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any taxpayer for any calendar month for which the taxpayer participates in any subsidized health plan maintained by any employer (other than an employer described in section 401(c)(4)) of the taxpayer or the spouse of the taxpayer.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SA 765. Mr. REID (for himself, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. GRAHAM, Ms. STABENOW, and Ms. CANTWELL) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002; as follows:

On page 314, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. . NEW GUARANTEED MINIMUM PRIMARY INSURANCE AMOUNT WHERE ELIGIBILITY ARISES DURING TRANSITIONAL PERIOD.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 215(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 415(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4)(B)—

(A) by inserting “(with or without the application of paragraph (8))” after “would be made”; and

(B) in clause (i), by striking “1984” and inserting “1989”; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

“(8)(A) In the case of an individual described in paragraph (4)(B) (subject to subparagraphs (F) and (G) of this paragraph, the amount of the individual’s primary insurance amount as computed or recomputed under paragraph (1) shall be deemed equal to the sum of—

“(i) such amount, and

“(ii) the applicable transitional increase amount (if any).

“(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the term ‘applicable transitional increase amount’ means, in the case of any individual, the product derived by multiplying—

“(i) the excess under former law, by

“(ii) the applicable percentage in relation to the year in which the individual becomes eligible for old-age insurance benefits, as determined by the following table:

“If the individual becomes eligible for such benefits in:	The applicable percentage is:
1979	55 percent
1980	45 percent
1981	35 percent
1982	32 percent
1983	25 percent
1984	20 percent
1985	16 percent
1986	10 percent
1987	3 percent
1988	5 percent.

“(C) For purposes of subparagraph (B), the term ‘excess under former law’ means, in the case of any individual, the excess of—

“(i) the applicable former law primary insurance amount, over

“(ii) the amount which would be such individual’s primary insurance amount if computed or recomputed under this section without regard to this paragraph and paragraphs (4), (5), and (6).

“(D) For purposes of subparagraph (C)(i), the term ‘applicable former law primary insurance amount’ means, in the case of any individual, the amount which would be such individual’s primary insurance amount if it were—

“(i) computed or recomputed (pursuant to paragraph (4)(B)(i)) under section 215(a) as in effect in December 1978, or “(ii) computed or recomputed (pursuant to paragraph (4)(B)(ii)) as provided by subsection (d), (as applicable) and modified as provided by subparagraph (E).

“(E) In determining the amount which would be an individual’s primary insurance amount as provided in subparagraph (D)—

“(i) subsection (b)(4) shall not apply;

“(ii) section 215(b) as in effect in December 1978 shall apply, except that section 215(b)(2)(C) (as then in effect) shall be deemed to provide that an individual’s ‘computation base years’ may include only calendar years in the period after 1950 (or 1936 if applicable) and ending with the calendar year in which such individual attains age 61, plus the 3 calendar years after such period for which the total of such individual’s wages and self-employment income is the largest; and “(iii) subdivision (I) in the last sentence of paragraph (4) shall be applied as though the words ‘without regard to any increases in that table’ in such subdivision read ‘including any increases in that table’.

“(F) This paragraph shall apply in the case of any individual only if such application results in a primary insurance amount for such individual that is greater than it would be if computed or recomputed under paragraph (4)(B) without regard to this paragraph.

“(G)(i) This paragraph shall apply in the case of any individual subject to any timely election to receive lump sum payments under this subparagraph.

“(ii) A written election to receive lump sum payments under this subparagraph, in lieu of the application of this paragraph to the computation of the primary insurance amount of an individual described in paragraph (4)(B), may be filed with the Commissioner of Social Security in such form and manner as shall be prescribed in regulations of the Commissioner. Any such election may be filed by such individual or, in the event of such individual’s death before any such election is filed by such individual, by any other beneficiary entitled to benefits under section 202 on the basis of such individual’s wages and self-employment income. Any such election filed after December 31 2001, shall be null and void and of no effect.

“(iii) Upon receipt by the Commissioner of a timely election filed by the individual described in paragraph (4)(B) in accordance with clause (ii)—

“(I) the Commissioner shall certify receipt of such election to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury, after receipt of such certification, shall pay such individual, from amounts in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, a total amount equal to $5,000, in 4 annual lump sum installments of $1,250, the first of which shall be made during fiscal year 2002 not later than July 1, 2002, and “(II) subparagraph (A) shall not apply in determining such individual’s primary insurance amount.

“(iv) Upon receipt by the Commissioner as of December 31, 2001, of a timely election filed in accordance with clause (ii) by at least one beneficiary entitled to benefits on the basis of the wages and self-employment income of a deceased individual described in paragraph (4)(B), if such deceased individual has filed no timely election in accordance with clause (ii)—

“(I) the Commissioner shall certify receipt of all such elections received as of such date to the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury, after receipt of such certification, shall pay each beneficiary filing such a timely election, from amounts in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, a total amount equal to $5,000 (or, in the case of 2 or more such beneficiaries, such amount distributed evenly among such beneficiaries), in 4 equal annual lump sum installments, the first of which shall be made during fiscal year 2002 not later than July 1, 2002, and “(II) solely for purposes of determining the amount of such beneficiary’s benefits, subparagraph (A) shall be deemed not to apply in determining the deceased individual’s primary insurance amount.”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE AND RELATED RULES.—

(1) APPLICABILITY OF AMENDMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this Act shall be effective as though they had been included or reflected in section 201 of the Social Security Amendments of 1977.

(B) APPLICABILITY.—No monthly benefit or primary insurance amount under title II of the Social Security Act shall be increased by reason of such amendments for any month before July 2002. The amendments made in this section shall apply with respect to benefits payable in months in any fiscal year after fiscal year 2005 only if the corresponding decrease in adjusted discretionary spending limits for budget authority and outlays under section 3 of this Act for fiscal years prior to fiscal year 2006 is extended by Federal law to such fiscal year after fiscal year 2005.

(2) RECOMPUTATION TO REFLECT BENEFIT INCREASES.—Notwithstanding section 215(f)(1) of the Social Security Act, the Commissioner of Social Security shall recompute the primary insurance amount so as to take into account the amendments made by this Act in any case in which—

(A) an individual is entitled to monthly insurance benefits under title II of such Act for June 2002; and

(B) such benefits are based on a primary insurance amount computed—

(i) under section 215 of such Act as in effect (by reason of the Social Security Amendments of 1977) after December 1978, or

(ii) under section 215 of such Act as in effect prior to January 1979 by reason of subsection (a)(4)(B) of such section (as amended by the Social Security Amendments of 1977).

(c) OFFSET PROVIDED BY PROJECTED FEDERAL BUDGET SURPLUSES.—Amounts offset by this section shall not be counted as direct spending for purposes of the budgetary limits provided in the congressional Budget Act of 1974 and the Balanced Budget and emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(d) REVENUE OFFSET.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall adjust the highest rate of tax under section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as amended by section 101 of this Act) to the extent necessary to offset in each fiscal year beginning before October 1, 2011, the decrease in revenues to the Treasury for that fiscal year resulting from the amendment made by this section.

SA 766. Mr. NELSON of Florida (for himself and Mrs. BOXER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 the concurrent resolution of the budget for fiscal year 2002; which was ordered to lie on the table;

SA 769. Mr. NELSON of Nebraska submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . CIRCUIT BREAKER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any fiscal year beginning with fiscal year 2004, if the level of debt held by the public at the end of that fiscal year (as projected by the Office of Management and Budget sequestration update report on August 20th preceeding the beginning of that fiscal year) would exceed the level of debt held by the public for that fiscal year set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002 (H. Con. Res. 83, 107th Congress), any Member of Congress may move to proceed to a bill that would make changes in law to reduce discretionary spending and direct spending (except for changes in Social Security, Medicare and COLA's) and increase revenues in a manner that would reduce the debt held by the public for the fiscal year to a level not exceeding the level provided in that concurrent resolution for that fiscal year. The motion to proceed shall be voted on at the end of 4 hours of debate.

(b) CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION.—A bill considered under subsection (a) shall be considered as provided in section 310(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 641(e)).

(c) PROCEDURE.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, motion, amendment, or conference report, pursuant to this section, that contains any provisions other than those enumerated in section 310(a)(1) and 310(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. This point of order may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this paragraph.

SA 770. Mr. LEVIN proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002; as follows:

Beginning on page 68, strike line 12 and all that follows through page 70, line 19, and insert the following:

Subtitle G—Other ERISA Provisions

SEC. 681. MISSING PARTICIPANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4050 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1350) is amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (e) and by inserting after subsection (b) the following new subsection:

"(c) MULTIEMPLOYER PLANS.—The corporation shall prescribe rules similar to the rules in subsection (a) for multiemployer plans covered by this title that terminate under section 4041A.

"(d) PLANS NOT OTHERWISE SUBJECT TO TITLE.—

"(1) TRANSFER TO CORPORATION.—The plan administrator of a plan described in paragraph (4) may elect to transfer a missing participant's benefits to the corporation upon termination of the plan.

"(2) INFORMATION TO THE CORPORATION.—To the extent provided in regulations, the plan administrator of a plan described in paragraph (4) shall, upon termination of the plan, provide the corporation information with respect to benefits of a missing participant if the plan transfers such benefits—

“(A) to the corporation, or “(B) to an entity other than the corporation or a plan described in paragraph (4)(B)(ii).

“(3) PAYMENT BY THE CORPORATION.—If benefits of a missing participant were transferred to the corporation under paragraph (1), the corporation shall, upon location of the participant or beneficiary, pay to the participant or beneficiary the amount transferred (or the appropriate survivor benefit) either—

“(A) in a single sum (plus interest), or “(B) in such other form as is specified in regulations of the corporation.

“(4) PLANS DESCRIBED.—A plan is described in this paragraph if—

“(A) the plan is a pension plan (within the meaning of section 3(2))—

“(i) to which the provisions of this section do not apply (without regard to this subsection), and

“(ii) which is not a plan described in paragraphs (2) through (11) of section 4021(b), and “(B) at the time the assets are to be distributed upon termination, the plan—

“(i) has missing participants, and

“(ii) has not provided for the transfer of assets to pay the benefits of all missing participants to another pension plan (within the meaning of section 3(2)).

“(5) CERTAIN PROVISIONS NOT TO APPLY.—Subsections (a)(1) and (a)(3) shall not apply to a plan described in paragraph (4).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to distributions made after final regulations implementing subsections (c) and (d) of section 4050 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (as added by subsection (a)), respectively, are prescribed.

SEC. 682. REDUCED PBGC PREMIUM FOR NEW PLANS OF SMALL EMPLOYERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 4006(a)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1306(a)(3)(A)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by inserting “other than a new single-employer plan (as defined in subparagraph (F)) maintained by a small employer (as so defined),” after “single-employer plan,”

(2) in clause (iii), by striking the period at the end and inserting “, and”, and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(iv) in the case of a new single-employer plan (as defined in subparagraph (F)) maintained by a small employer (as so defined) for the plan year, $5 for each individual who is a participant in such plan during the plan year.”.

(b) DEFINITION OF NEW SINGLE-EMPLOYER PLAN.—Section 4006(a)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1306(a)(3)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(F)(i) For purposes of this paragraph, a single-employer plan maintained by a contributing sponsor shall be treated as a new single-employer plan for each of its first 5 plan years if, during the 36-month period ending on the date of the adoption of such plan, the sponsor or any member of such sponsor’s controlled group (or any predecessor of either) did not establish or maintain a plan to which this title applies with respect to which benefits were accrued for substantially the same employees as are in the new single-employer plan.

“(ii)(I) For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘small employer’ means an employer which on the first day of any plan year has, in aggregation with all members of the controlled group of such employer, 100 or fewer employees.

“(II) In the case of a plan maintained by two or more contributing sponsors that are not part of the same controlled group, the employees of all contributing sponsors and controlled groups of such sponsors shall be aggregated for purposes of determining whether any contributing sponsor is a small employer.”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to plans established after December 31, 2001.

SEC. 683. REDUCTION OF ADDITIONAL PBGC PREMIUM FOR NEW AND SMALL PLANS.

(a) NEW PLANS.—Subparagraph (E) of section 4006(a)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1306(a)(3)(E)) is amended by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(v) In the case of a new defined benefit plan, the amount determined under clause (i) for any plan year shall be an amount equal to the product of the amount determined under clause (ii) and the applicable percentage. For purposes of this clause, the term ‘applicable percentage’ means—

“(I) 0 percent, for the first plan year.

“(II) 20 percent, for the second plan year.

“(III) 40 percent, for the third plan year.

“(IV) 60 percent, for the fourth plan year.

“(V) 80 percent, for the fifth plan year.

For purposes of this clause, a defined benefit plan (as defined in section 3(35)) maintained by a contributing sponsor shall be treated as a new defined benefit plan for each of its first 5 plan years if, during the 36-month period ending on the date of the adoption of the plan, the sponsor and each member of any controlled group including the sponsor (or any predecessor of either) did not establish or maintain a plan to which this title applies with respect to which benefits were accrued for substantially the same employees as are in the new plan.”.

(b) SMALL PLANS.—Paragraph (3) of section 4006(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1306(a)), as amended by section 682(b), is amended—

(1) by striking “The” in subparagraph (E)(i) and inserting “Except as provided in subparagraph (G), the”, and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following new subparagraph:

“(G)(i) In the case of an employer who has 25 or fewer employees on the first day of the plan year, the additional premium determined under subparagraph (E) for each participant shall not exceed $5 multiplied by the number of participants in the plan as of the close of the preceding plan year.

“(ii) For purposes of clause (i), whether an employer has 25 or fewer employees on the first day of the plan year is determined taking into consideration all of the employees of all members of the contributing sponsor’s controlled group. In the case of a plan maintained by two or more contributing sponsors, the employees of all contributing sponsors and their controlled groups shall be aggregated for purposes of determining whether the 25-or-fewer-employees limitation has been satisfied.”.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) SUBSECTION (a).—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to plans established after December 31, 2001.

(2) SUBSECTION (b).—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SEC. 684. AUTHORIZATION FOR PBGC TO PAY INTEREST ON PREMIUM OVERPAYMENT REFUNDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4007(b) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1307(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking “(b)” and inserting “(b)(1)”, and

(2) by inserting at the end the following new paragraph:

“(2) The corporation is authorized to pay, subject to regulations prescribed by the corporation, interest on the amount of any overpayment of premium refunded to a designated payor. Interest under this paragraph shall be calculated at the same rate and in the same manner as interest is calculated for underpayments under paragraph (1).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to interest accruing for periods beginning not earlier than the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 685. SUBSTANTIAL OWNER BENEFITS IN TERMINATED PLANS.

(a) MODIFICATION OF PHASE-IN OF GUARANTEE.—Section 4022(b)(5) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1322(b)(5)) is amended to read as follows:

“(5)(A) For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘majority owner’ means an individual who, at any time during the 60-month period ending on the date the determination is being made—

“(i) owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business,

“(ii) in the case of a partnership, is a partner who owns, directly or indirectly, 50 percent or more of either the capital interest or the profits interest in such partnership, or

“(iii) in the case of a corporation, owns, directly or indirectly, 50 percent or more in value of either the voting stock of that corporation or all the stock of that corporation. For purposes of clause (iii), the constructive ownership rules of section 1563(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall apply (determined without regard to section 1563(e)(3)(C)).

“(B) In the case of a participant who is a majority owner, the amount of benefits guaranteed under this section shall equal the product of—

“(i) a fraction (not to exceed 1) the numerator of which is the number of years from the later of the effective date or the adoption date of the plan to the termination date, and the denominator of which is 10, and

“(ii) the amount of benefits that would be guaranteed under this section if the participant were not a majority owner.”.

(b) MODIFICATION OF ALLOCATION OF ASSETS.—

(1) Section 4044(a)(4)(B) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1344(a)(4)(B)) is amended by striking “section 4022(b)(5)” and inserting “section 4022(b)(5)(B)”.

(2) Section 4044(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1344(b)) is amended—

(A) by striking “(5)” in paragraph (2) and inserting “(4), (5),”, and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (6) as paragraphs (4) through (7), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

“(3) If assets available for allocation under paragraph (4) of subsection (a) are insufficient to satisfy in full the benefits of all individuals who are described in that paragraph, the assets shall be allocated first to benefits described in subparagraph (A) of that paragraph. Any remaining assets shall then be allocated to benefits described in subparagraph (B) of that paragraph. If assets allocated to such subparagraph (B) are insufficient to satisfy in full the benefits described in that subparagraph, the assets shall be allocated pro rata among individuals on the basis of the present value (as of the termination date) of their respective benefits described in that subparagraph.”.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 4021 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1321) is amended—

(A) in subsection (b)(9), by striking “as defined in section 4022(b)(6)”, and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(d) For purposes of subsection (b)(9), the term ‘substantial owner’ means an individual who, at any time during the 60-month period ending on the date the determination is being made—

“(1) owns the entire interest in an unincorporated trade or business,

“(2) in the case of a partnership, is a partner who owns, directly or indirectly, more than 10 percent of either the capital interest or the profits interest in such partnership, or

“(3) in the case of a corporation, owns, directly or indirectly, more than 10 percent in value of either the voting stock of that corporation or all the stock of that corporation. For purposes of paragraph (3), the constructive ownership rules of section 1563(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall apply (determined without regard to section 1563(e)(3)(C)).”.

(2) Section 4043(c)(7) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1343(c)(7)) is amended by striking “section 4022(b)(6)” and inserting “section 4021(d)”.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to plan terminations—

(A) under section 4041(c) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1341(c)) with respect to which notices of intent to terminate are provided under section 4041(a)(2) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1341(a)(2)) after December 31, 2001, and

(B) under section 4042 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1342) with respect to which proceedings are instituted by the corporation after such date.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The amendments made by subsection (c) shall take effect on January 1, 2002.

SEC. 686. PERIODIC PENSION BENEFITS STATEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 105(a) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1025 (a)) is amended to read as follows:

“(a)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2)—

“(A) the administrator of an individual account plan shall furnish a pension benefit statement—

“(i) to a plan participant at least once annually, and “(ii) to a plan beneficiary upon written request, and

“(B) the administrator of a defined benefit plan shall furnish a pension benefit statement—

“(i) at least once every 3 years to each participant with a nonforfeitable accrued benefit who is employed by the employer maintaining the plan at the time the statement is furnished to participants, and “(ii) to a plan participant or plan beneficiary of the plan upon written request.

“(2) A pension benefit statement under paragraph (1)—

“(A) shall indicate, on the basis of the latest available information and reasonable estimates—

“(i) the total benefits accrued, and “(ii) the nonforfeitable pension benefits, if any, which have accrued, or the earliest date on which benefits will become nonforfeitable,

“(B) shall be written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant,

“(C) shall include a statement that the summary annual report is available upon request, and “(D) may be provided in written, electronic, or other appropriate form.

“(3)(A) In the case of a defined benefit plan, the requirements of paragraph (1)(B)(i) shall be treated as met with respect to a participant if the administrator provides the participant at least once each year with notice of the availability of the pension benefit statement and the ways in which the participant may obtain such statement. Such notice shall be provided in written, electronic, or other appropriate form, and may be included with other communications to the participant if done in a manner reasonably designed to attract the attention of the participant.

“(B) The Secretary may provide that years in which no employee or former employee benefits (within the meaning of section 410(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) under the plan need not be taken into account in determining the 3-year period under paragraph (1)(B)(i).”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 105 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1025) is amended by striking subsection (d).

(2) Section 105(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1025(b)) is amended to read as follows:

“(b) In no case shall a participant or beneficiary of a plan be entitled to more than one statement described in subsection (a)(1)(A) or (a)(1)(B)(ii), whichever is applicable, in any 12-month period.”.

(c) MODEL STATEMENTS.—The Secretary of Labor shall develop a model benefit statement, written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant, that may be used by plan administrators in complying with the requirements of section 105 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

(2) COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of a plan maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee representatives and one or more employers ratified by the date of the enactment of this Act, the amendments made by this section shall not apply, with respect to employees covered by any such agreement, for plan years beginning before the earlier of—

(A) the later of—

(i) the date on which the last of such collective bargaining agreements terminates (determined without regard to any extension thereof on or after such date of the enactment), or

(ii) January 1, 2002, or

(B) January 1, 2003.

SEC. 687. BENEFIT SUSPENSION NOTICE.

(a) MODIFICATION OF REGULATION.—The Secretary of Labor shall modify the regulation under section 203(a)(3)(B) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1053(a)(3)(B)) to provide that the notification required by such regulation—

(1) in the case of an employee who, after commencement of payment of benefits under the plan, returns to service for which benefit payments may be suspended under such section 203(a)(3)(B) shall be made during the first calendar month or payroll period in which the plan withholds payments, and

(2) in the case of any employee who is not described in paragraph (1)—

(A) may be included in the summary plan description for the plan furnished in accordance with section 104(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1024(b)), rather than in a separate notice, and

(B) need not include a copy of the relevant plan provisions.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The modification made under this section shall apply to plan years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SEC. 688. STUDIES.

(a) REPORT ON PENSION COVERAGE.—Not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Treasury, jointly with the Secretary of Labor, shall submit a report to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions of the Senate a report on the effect of the provisions of the Restoring Earnings to Lift Individuals and Empower Families Act of 2001 on pension coverage, including—

(1) any expansion of coverage for low- and middle-income workers;

(2) levels of pension benefits;

(3) quality of pension coverage;

(4) worker's access to and participation in plans; and

(5) retirement security.

(b) STUDY OF PRERETIREMENT USE OF BENEFITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury, jointly with the Secretary of Labor, shall conduct a study of—

(A) current tax provisions allowing individuals to access individual retirement plans and qualified retirement plan benefits of such individual prior to retirement, including an analysis of—

(i) the extent of use of such current provisions by individuals; and

(ii) the extent to which such provisions undermine the goal of accumulating adequate resources for retirement; and

(B) the types of investment decisions made by individual retirement plan beneficiaries and participants in self-directed qualified retirement plans, including an analysis of—

(i) current restrictions on investments; and

(ii) the extent to which additional restrictions on investments would facilitate the accumulation of adequate income for retirement.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than January 1, 2003, the Secretary of the Treasury, jointly with the Secretary of Labor, shall submit a report to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions of the Senate containing the results of the study conducted under paragraph (1) and any recommendations.

SEC. 689. ANNUAL REPORT DISSEMINATION.

(a) REPORT AVAILABLE THROUGH ELECTRONIC MEANS.—Section 104(b)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1024(b)(3)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: “The requirement to furnish information under the previous sentence shall be satisfied if the administrator makes such information reasonably available through electronic means or other new technology”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to reports for years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 690. CIVIL PENALTIES FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.

(a) IMPOSITION AND AMOUNT OF PENALTY MADE DISCRETIONARY.—Section 502(l)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1132(l)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking “shall” and inserting “may”, and

(2) by striking “equal to” and inserting “not greater than”.

(b) APPLICABLE RECOVERY AMOUNT.—Section 502(l)(2) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(l)(2)) is amended to read as follows:

“(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term ‘applicable recovery amount’ means any amount which is recovered from any fiduciary or other person (or from any other person on behalf of any such fiduciary or other person) with respect to a breach or violation described in paragraph (1) on or after the 30th day following receipt by such fiduciary or other person of written notice from the Secretary of the violation, whether paid voluntarily or by order of a court in a judicial proceeding instituted by the Secretary under paragraph (2) or (5) of subsection (a). The Secretary may, in the Secretary’s sole discretion, extend the 30-day period described in the preceding sentence.”.

(c) OTHER RULES.—Section 502(l) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1132(l)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(5) A person shall be jointly and severally liable for the penalty described in paragraph (1) to the same extent that such person is jointly and severally liable for the applicable recovery amount on which the penalty is based.

“(6) No penalty shall be assessed under this subsection unless the person against whom the penalty is assessed is given notice and opportunity for a hearing with respect to the violation and applicable recovery amount.”.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any breach of fiduciary responsibility or other violation of part 4 of subtitle B of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 occurring on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—In applying the amendment made by subsection (b) (relating to applicable recovery amount), a breach or other violation occurring before the date of enactment of this Act which continues after the 180th day after such date (and which may have been discontinued at any time during its existence) shall be treated as having occurred after such date of enactment.

SEC. 690A. NOTICE AND CONSENT PERIOD REGARDING DISTRIBUTIONS.

(a) EXPANSION OF PERIOD.—

(1) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 417(a)(6) is amended by striking “90-day” and inserting “180-day”.

(B) MODIFICATION OF REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall modify the regulations under sections 402(f), 411(a)(11), and 417 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to substitute “180 days” for “90 days” each place it appears in Treasury Regulations sections 1.402(f)-1, 1.411(a)-11(c), and 1.417(e)-1(b).

(2) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Section 205(c)(7)(A) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1055(c)(7)(A)) is amended by striking “90-day” and inserting “180-day”.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by paragraphs (1)(A) and (2) and the modifications required by paragraph (1)(B) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 2001.

(b) CONSENT REGULATION INAPPLICABLE TO CERTAIN DISTRIBUTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall modify the regulations under section 411(a)(11) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that the description of a participant’s right, if any, to defer receipt of a distribution shall also describe the consequences of failing to defer such receipt.

(2) MODEL STATEMENT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall develop a model statement, written in a manner calculated to be understood by the average plan participant, regarding participants’ rights to defer receipt of a distribution and the consequences of so doing, that may be used by plan administrators in complying with the requirements of this section.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The modifications required by paragraph (1) shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 2001.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF OPTIONAL FORMS OF BENEFITS.—

(1) AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE.—Section 417(a)(3) (relating to plan to provide written explanation) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(C) EXPLANATION OF OPTIONAL FORMS OF BENEFITS.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—If—

“(I) a plan provides optional forms of benefits, and

“(II) the present values of such forms of benefits are not actuarially equivalent as of the annuity starting date, then each written explanation required to be provided under subparagraph (A) shall include the information described in clause (ii).

“(ii) INFORMATION.—A plan to which this subparagraph applies shall include sufficient information (as determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary) to allow the participant to understand the differences in the present values of the optional forms of benefits provided by the plan and the effect the participant’s election as to the form of benefit will have on the value of the benefits available under the plan. Any such information shall be provided in a manner calculated to be reasonably understood by the average plan participant.”

(2) AMENDMENT OF ERISA.—Section 205(c)(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1055(c)(3)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(C)(i) If—

“(I) a plan provides optional forms of benefits, and

“(II) the present values of such forms of benefits are not actuarially equivalent as of the annuity starting date, then such plan shall include the information described in clause (ii) with each written explanation required to be provided under subparagraph (A).

“(ii) A plan to which this subparagraph applies shall include sufficient information (as determined in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury) to allow the participant to understand the differences in the present values of the optional forms of benefits provided by the plan and the effect the participant’s election as to the form of benefit will have on the value of the benefits available under the plan. Any such information shall be provided in a manner calculated to be reasonably understood by the average plan participant.”

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SEC. 690B. AMENDMENTS REGARDING NATIONAL SUMMIT ON RETIREMENT SAVINGS.

(A) by striking “There shall be no more than 200 additional participants.” and inserting “The participants in the National Summit shall also include additional participants appointed under this subparagraph.”;

(B) by striking “one-half shall be appointed by the President,” in clause (i) and inserting “not more than 100 participants shall be appointed under this clause by the President,” and by striking “and” at the end of clause (i);

(C) by striking “one-half shall be appointed by the elected leaders of Congress” in clause (ii) and inserting “not more than 100 participants shall be appointed under this clause by the elected leaders of Congress”, and by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting “; and”;

(D) by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(iii) The President, in consultation with the elected leaders of Congress referred to in subsection (a), may appoint under this clause additional participants to the National Summit. The number of such additional participants appointed under this clause may not exceed the lesser of 3 percent of the total number of all additional participants appointed under this paragraph, or 10. Such additional participants shall be appointed from persons nominated by the organization referred to in subsection (b)(2) which is made up of private sector businesses and associations partnered with Government entities to promote long term financial security in retirement through savings and with which the Secretary is required thereunder to consult and cooperate and shall not be Federal, State, or local government employees.”;

(5) in subsection (f)(1)(C), by inserting “, no later than 90 days prior to the date of the commencement of the National Summit,” after “comment” in paragraph (1)(C);

(6) in subsection (g), by inserting “, in consultation with the congressional leaders specified in subsection (e)(2),” after “report”;

(7) in subsection (i)—

(A) by striking “1997” in paragraph (1) and inserting “2001”; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(3) RECEPTION AND REPRESENTATION AUTHORITY.—The Secretary is hereby granted reception and representation authority limited specifically to the events at the National Summit. The Secretary shall use any private contributions accepted in connection with the National Summit prior to using funds appropriated for purposes of the National Summit pursuant to this paragraph.

“(4) FUNDS AVAILABLE.—Of the funds appropriated to the Pension and Welfare Benefits Administration for fiscal year 2001, $500,000 shall remain available without fiscal year limitation through September 30, 2002, for the purpose of defraying the costs of the National Summit.”; and

(8) in subsection (k)—

(A) by striking “shall” and inserting “may”; and

(B) by striking “fiscal year 1998” and inserting “fiscal years 2001 or 2002, and 2005, and 2009”.

On page 310, strike lines 10 and 11 and insert the following:

Subtitle I—Plan Amendments

SEC. 692. PROVISIONS RELATING TO PLAN AMENDMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If this section applies to any plan or contract amendment—

(1) such plan or contract shall be treated as being operated in accordance with the terms of the plan during the period described in subsection (b)(2)(A), and

(2) except as provided by the Secretary of the Treasury, such plan shall not fail to meet the requirements of section 411(d)(6) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 or section 204(g) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 by reason of such amendment.

(b) AMENDMENTS TO WHICH SECTION APPLIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—This section shall apply to any amendment to any plan or annuity contract which is made—

(A) pursuant to any amendment made by this Act, or pursuant to any regulation issued under this Act, and

(B) on or before the last day of the first plan year beginning on or after January 1, 2005.

In the case of a governmental plan (as defined in section 414(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986), this paragraph shall be applied by substituting “2007” for “2005”.

(2) CONDITIONS.—This section shall not apply to any amendment unless—

(A) during the period—

(i) beginning on the date the legislative or regulatory amendment described in paragraph (1)(A) takes effect (or in the case of a plan or contract amendment not required by such legislative or regulatory amendment, the effective date specified by the plan); and

(ii) ending on the date described in paragraph (1)(B) (or, if earlier, the date the plan or contract amendment is adopted), the plan or contract is operated as if such plan or contract amendment were in effect; and

(B) such plan or contract amendment applies retroactively for such period.

Subtitle J—Compliance With Congressional Budget Act

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now return to legislative session.

CONGRATULATING THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA FOR 150 YEARS OF OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO MINNESOTA

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 93, submitted earlier today by Senators WELLSTONE and DAYTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 93) congratulating the University of Minnesota, its faculty, staff, students, alumni, and friends for 150 years of outstanding service to the State of Minnesota, the Nation, and the world.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, it is my privilege today to commend the University of Minnesota, its students, staff faculty, alumni and supporters for its long history of excellence and accomplishments. The University of Minnesota celebrates its 150th anniversary this year as one of the Nation's great public universities.

The University was established in 1851, six years prior to the founding of Minnesota as a state. It began as a small preparatory school and operated without State or Federal funding.

During the Civil War the University went through a series of trying financial times, but was greatly lifted when Congress passed the Morrill Land Grant Act in 1862.

Signed by President Abraham Lincoln, this act gifted over 100,000 acres of land for public use in Minnesota, and called for the creation of a perpetual public fund.

The interest on this fund was to go towards, in the historic words of the document, "the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and mechanical arts . . . in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in several pursuits and professions in life."

In 1869 William Watts Folwell was inaugurated as the first president of the University. At that time there were only nine faculty members and 18 students. Today the University of Minnesota system is home to nearly 60,000 undergraduate and graduate students under the direction of President Mark Yudof.

As a land-grant institution, the University of Minnesota with its campuses in Crookston, Duluth, Morris and the Twin Cities has earned distinction as one of the most prestigious and competitive public university systems in the nation.

Since the first two bachelors of arts degrees were awarded in 1873, the university has granted over 549,000 undergraduate degrees and 25,000 Ph.D.'s in over 373 fields of study. Such rich academic diversity has allowed for students to walk in step with their dreams.

The University of Minnesota has fostered an environment for high-standards of education, academic achievement, and public service. It conducts some 300 programs serving children and youth, and students and staff of the University work with over 700,000 Minnesotans every year on issues ranging from agricultural research, health and medical sciences, to social development. The University of Minnesota is also a major source of employment, providing work for more than 100,000 Minnesotans.

As a major research institution the University has produced scholars of national and international distinction, including 13 faculty members and alumni who have been awarded Nobel Prizes, including the Nobel Peace Prize.

Alumni, faculty and staff have also developed a strong tradition of giving back to the University, beginning with historic philanthropist and University Regent, John Sargent Pillsbury in 1867, and continuing today. Private donations, grants and scholarship funds, along with Federal and State funds help the University of Minnesota to provide students with the necessary resources for a world-class education.

As a Senator from Minnesota I take pride in congratulating the University of Minnesota, with its solid and colorful academic history, on its 150th year of excellence. The State of Minnesota and the nation shall continue to benefit greatly from the efforts of this fine public university.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. President, I join the senior Senator from Minnesota, PAUL WELLSTONE in honoring the 150 year anniversary of the University of Minnesota. The many milestones so aptly described by Senator WELLSTONE illustrate the distinguished history of one of America's great land grant schools. From the most humble beginnings in 1851, before Minnesota could call itself a State, the University established itself, as a small preparatory school. Today, it is a premier land grant University, with a major medical school, an Institute of Technology, School of Agriculture and three campuses in greater Minnesota. The University serves nearly 60,000 undergraduate and graduate students.

The value of any great learning institution is measured both within its hallowed, academic halls as well as beyond the geographic borders of a central campus. The University of Minnesota Twin Cities has long been considered one of the Nation's top 25 public research universities. The University also serves a large and diverse state by reaching young people through the campuses at Morris, Crookston, and Duluth. In addition, the University has formed a unique partnership with the Rochester Community and Technical College, and Winona State University to form the University Center at Rochester.

Each of these campuses has its own identity, and adds a unique dimension to the University, and to the State. Rochester, the newest campus, is a joint venture with three different institutions and two academic systems. Because of this partnership, a student attending the University Center at Rochester can pursue a doctorate program or certificate. Established in 1959, the University of Minnesota, Morris is today considered one of the top three public liberal arts institutions in the country. University of Minnesota, Crookston attracts nearly 3,000 students, earning one of U.S. News and World Report's Best College rankings and Wired Magazine's Most Wired Campus Designation. And, the University of Minnesota Duluth, ranked as one of the 12 best Midwest regional public universities, serves the academic needs of the State with a comprehensive undergraduate and graduate program. Equally important, UMD is a vitally active partner in the economic development of Northern Minnesota.

We celebrate the University's Sesquicentennial by looking back through the long lens of a history rich with the achievements that have informed the people of our great State. These are the accomplishments in which the University of Minnesota played a key role. They include helping Minnesotans develop a strong agricultural economy, building a global reputation in medical sciences, establishing the relationship between the University's intellectual resources and community service, and forging an academic base, providing the brainpower that has carried Minnesotans into the new millennium. While we celebrate the University's past, we recognize that it is a part of our present and our future. It educates our children, grows our economy, and evaluates our decisions with sound research and good science.

I join all Minnesotans in celebrating the University of Minnesota's 150th anniversary. I know there will be many more productive years to come.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 93) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

(The text of the resolution is located in today's RECORD under "Submitted Resolutions.")

NATIONAL EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES WEEK

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of S. Con. Res. 40, and the Senate then proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40) expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the designation of the week of May 20, 2001, as "National Emergency Medical Services Week."

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to this measure be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 40

Whereas emergency medical services are a vital public service;

Whereas the members of emergency medical services teams are ready to provide lifesaving care to those in need 24 hours a day, 7 days a week;

Whereas access to quality emergency care dramatically improves the survival and recovery rate of those who experience sudden illness or injury;

Whereas providers of emergency medical services have traditionally served as the safety net of America's health care system;

Whereas emergency medical services teams consist of emergency physicians, emergency nurses, emergency medical technicians, paramedics, firefighters, educators, administrators, and others;

Whereas approximately two-thirds of all emergency medical services providers are volunteers;

Whereas the members of emergency medical services teams, whether career or volunteer, undergo thousands of hours of specialized training and continuing education to enhance their lifesaving skills;

Whereas Americans benefit daily from the knowledge and skills of these highly trained individuals; and

Whereas injury prevention and the appropriate use of the emergency medical services system will help reduce health care costs: Now, therefore, be it

(Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That—

(1) the week of May 20, 2001, is designated as "National Emergency Medical Services Week";

(2) the President should issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate programs and activities.

AUTHORIZING THE USE OF THE EAST FRONT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS FOR PERFORMANCES SPONSORED BY THE KENNEDY CENTER

AUTHORIZING THE USE OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS FOR THE WASHINGTON SOAP BOX DERBY

AUTHORIZING THE 2001 DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA SPECIAL OLYMPICS LAW ENFORCEMENT TORCH RUN ON CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed en bloc to the consideration of House Concurrent Resolutions 76, 79, and 87, which are at the desk.

I announce that these three concurrent resolutions authorize the use of the Capitol grounds for three separate events.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolutions by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 76) authorizing the use of the East Front of the Capitol Grounds for performances sponsored by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 79) authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the Greater Washington Soap Box Derby.

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 87) authorizing the 2001 District of Columbia Special Olympics Law Enforcement Torch Run to be run through the Capitol Grounds.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolutions en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be agreed to, and the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions (H. Con. Res. 76, H. Con. Res. 79, and H. Con. Res. 87) were agreed to.

AUTHORIZING USE OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Con. Res. 41, submitted earlier today by Senator STEVENS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 41) authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the National Book Festival.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 41) was agreed to.

FALLEN HERO SURVIVOR BENEFIT FAIRNESS ACT OF 2001

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1727, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1727) to amend the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 to provide consistent treatment of survivor benefits for public safety officers killed in the line of duty.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is passing the Fallen Hero Survivor Benefit Fairness Act.

Last night, I voted for the Smith amendment to add the Fallen Hero Survivor Benefit Fairness Act to the reconciliation tax package, and I am proud to cosponsor the Senate companion bill, S. 881, introduced by the senior Senator from Utah. Since the House of Representatives passed the Fallen Hero Survivor Benefit Fairness Act, H.R. 1727, on May 15, 2001, by a vote of 419-0, I am hopeful that this legislation to support the families of our nation's public safety officers will soon become law.

This legislation extends present-law treatment of survivor annuities for public safety officers killed in the line of duty on or before December 31, 1996. It is needed to correct a harsh inequity in the tax code that treats some survivors of slain public safety officers differently than others based on the date of the officer's death. That is unconscionable.

The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 provided that a survivor annuity paid on account of the death of a public safety officer who is killed in the line of duty is excluded from income for individuals dying after December 31, 1996. The survivor annuity must be provided under a government plan to the surviving spouse of the public safety officer or to a child of the officer. Public safety officers include law enforcement officers, firefighters, rescue squad or ambulance crew. But the family members of public safety officers killed before January 1, 1997 are fully taxed on their survivor annuities.

I believe that survivors of public safety officers killed in the line of duty should all receive the same tax treatment. We should do all we can to support the families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty. Basic fairness demands it.

I look forward to the Fallen Hero Survivor Benefit Fairness Act becoming law. It is only right that our Nation's tax laws support the families of public safety officers who gave the ultimate sacrifice to make America a safer place.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 1727) was read the third time and passed.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, MAY 23, 2001

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, May 23. I further ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then resume consideration of the tax reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. GRASSLEY. For the information of all Senators, the Senate will continue voting on reconciliation amendments as we have done for the past 19½ consecutive Senate hours. Votes will occur every 10 to 15 minutes until otherwise notified. It is hoped the Senate can pass this important tax bill early tomorrow so we can resume consideration of the education bill in a timely manner. Votes can be expected throughout the week.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order, following the remarks of Senator GRASSLEY and Senator DODD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BIPARTISANSHIP

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we voted on 3 amendments last week, 17 amendments yesterday, 27 amendments today. That is an awful lot of amendments on a bill that should have been done after 20 hours, plus a few votes.

We have had a flood of amendments, and almost all of them have come from the other party. Not one amendment from the other party has passed yet. That is after 3 last week, 17 yesterday, and 27 today. When is enough enough?

I ask this question in the spirit of bipartisanship that Senator BAUCUS and I have worked on since the first of the week and the entire work of the Senate Finance Committee, in the spirit of how the Finance Committee has always worked, and also in the spirit of the bipartisanship talked about 5 months ago in the new Congress. Why in the new Congress? Because it is the first time in 120 years the Senate has been evenly divided.

I hope that bipartisanship is not dead. But if bipartisanship is dead and buried within the last 5 months of this new Congress, I have not been invited to the funeral, and I don't think Senator BAUCUS was invited either. Senator BAUCUS and I have been working on this tax bill since January. That was right around the time the leaders of this body worked out power sharing. We all knew from the beginning that shared power brings shared responsibility. Where is the responsibility to get the people's work done? Where is the responsibility to finish legislation that has been worked upon for months by a committee of this Senate, one of the most powerful committees of this Senate? Where is the responsibility to finish legislation that is the product of the bipartisanship that is known to be a product of the Finance Committee or the bipartisanship that was asked for in January? Where is the responsibility to finish legislation that has ample bipartisan support to pass?

When this bill finally gets to that final rollcall vote, people are going to be shocked how many people are going to vote for this bill on final passage. Bipartisan, again.

Then, in the meantime, we are putting up with 27 rollcalls today, 17 rollcalls yesterday, 3 rollcalls last Thursday. Three long days of work on this bill, and we still do not see light at the end of the tunnel because there are stalling tactics that for some reason or another go beyond the protection of a minority within the Senate.

I don't argue with that protection of the minority. There is only one political institution in the United States Government where minority views are protected. Those are in the Senate of the United States. There are all sorts of rules to protect the minority. But there also can be abuse of the protection that is granted the minority, way beyond what was ever intended by the people who wrote our Constitution or established the traditions and the rules of the Senate. There is a time when statesmanship has to be above pure politics meant to kill tax relief for American taxpayers, a tax relief that is the third greatest in the last 50 years and the greatest in the last 20 years.

There has to be a time when examples of bipartisanship have to be followed by those who are calling for bipartisanship. I think Senator BAUCUS and I have established a good tradition of bipartisanship, a tradition of bipartisanship that I hope will not only help get a bipartisan vote on this bill tomorrow or the next day, a bipartisan vote on a product coming out of conference but, more importantly, as I said in my opening remarks last Thursday on this bill, a bipartisanship that will continue for many important issues that this Senate has to work on the rest of this year and next year. There is a long list of trade legislation our committee must produce. There is the issue that was most important in the Presidential campaign of both candidates: prescription drugs for seniors and how that impacts upon the whole Medicare program. There are the problems of dealing with the uninsured, the people who do not have health insurance. That is something that was involved in candidate Gore's campaign and Candidate Bush's campaign with which we must deal.

There are issues of helping with tax incentives for people to save and to have better opportunities for pensions. There are the issues dealing with tax credits for higher education and the issue of education savings accounts.

You can go on and on. But most of the major issues were part of the Presidential campaign, and for the most part to some degree or another were part of the campaigns of each candidate for President in the last election. Consequently, they have a right to be on the agenda. We have a responsibility to make sure they are not only on the agenda but are carried out.

So I hope what Senator BAUCUS and I have been working on since the first of the year will help produce further agreements. Some of them may be even more important than this tax bill.

I yield the floor.

RELIEF ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I know the hour is late. I am deeply appreciative of the floor staff of this body. They worked late last night and late again today. We started some 12 hours ago, so I will try to keep these remarks relatively brief, if I can.

It has been a little frustrating for this Member, and I suspect others over the past day or so, as we have dealt with what arguably would be the most significant piece of legislation we are likely to deal with for the next decade. And that legislation is the tax bill that is before us. So I wanted to take a few minutes to review the bidding, if I could, over what has happened over the last couple of days. I'd like to review where we are and why there are so many of us who have expressed our concerns about the direction of this legislation, its substance, and its priorities.

It is not that those of us here object to a tax cut. In fact, the overwhelming majority of Democrats and Republicans support a tax cut. That is not the issue. The issue is the makeup of this tax cut. The issue is the fairness of it, its distribution, and its size. And one of the most significant issues is the inability to predict with any certainty what economic conditions will look like 5 years from now, 3 years from now, let alone 10 years from now, where much of this bill is backloaded and when the effects of it will be felt the most.

I want to spend a few minutes and just go over, if I could, some of the amendments we have considered today.

First of all, let me point out that it has been said by some that we have had stalling amendments—27 amendments considered today, 17 yesterday, 3 the day before. We had a total of 20 hours of debate on this bill, less than 1 calendar day of actual debate on this bill. You were allowed to have 1 minute to explain an amendment and 1 minute to rebut that amendment. So as we have considered some 47 amendments over the last 3 days, there has hardly been the kind of deliberative debate one normally associates with the U.S. Senate.

There has been this abbreviated, truncated approach because that is all you are allocated under a reconciliation bill that gives you 20 hours: 20 hours to debate what arguably may be the single most important piece of economic legislation that this or succeeding Congresses will deal with for the coming decade or beyond. Twenty hours, less than 1 day.

I am one of a handful of people in this Chamber who was present 20 years ago. I see my friend from Delaware in the Chamber. He was present in the Chamber 20 years ago when we considered a tax cut of equal magnitude but of far less divisiveness. In fact, I think there were 10 or 11 of us who voted against that tax bill for the reasons that it would contribute to expanding the size of the national debt; would result in consumers paying higher interest rates for automobiles, for college loans, for homes; that we would end up in the red ink; and that our Nation would suffer economically.

At least back in 1981 we had 12 days of debate—not 20 hours. We had 12 days of debate on that bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield on that one point?

Mr. DODD. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BIDEN. The Senator, if I am not mistaken, was one of only 10 or so who voted no. The Senator from Delaware voted yes on that amendment. I have cast over 10,000 votes as a U.S. Senator. It was one of the two votes I most regret ever having cast. The other one was voting for a fine, decent man, Supreme Court Justice Scalia. I regret that because his view turned out to be so fundamentally different than my view of the Constitution.

One of the reasons why I think what the Senator is saying is so important is it took the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Delaware—you doing the right thing in the first instance, me making a mistake—it took us almost 20 years to bail out. I have the scars on my back, as does the Senator. He did not deserve them, I do—for the efforts we had to undertake to put the budget back in shape.

We did that at a time when we had expanding productivity, when we had a lot of unmet capacity in the country, when, in fact, we were moving—there was a chance to rectify it. There will be no chance because when this kicks in—and I am going to sit down—when this kicks in, because it is the same time guys like the Senators from Connecticut and Delaware, the baby boom generation, are going to be retiring.

Mr. DODD. That is right.

Mr. BIDEN. We are going to be in real trouble.

So I hope, I say to the new Senators on the floor, they do not make the same mistake this senior Senator did almost 20 years ago; that is, vote for something such as this. We will pay a dear price in this country for this vote.

I compliment the Senator on his comments tonight, as well as his vote in the 1980s. I wish I had the foresight he had to know what was going to happen.

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague for those comments. Out of those 10,000 votes he cast, by far, there were many more good ones. I appreciate his comments this evening.

Mr. President, I stood in that debate. I remember the debate well. When you compare this week's debate to that debate of 20 years ago when we had something like 115 or 116 amendments, maybe more, they were fully debated amendments. We had the give and take, back and forth over the wisdom or demerits of the various proposals. That is not what has taken place here today.

Imagine what it looks like to the American public as they watched these last couple of days. We were placed in a situation of allowing only 20 hours of debate under a reconciliation process that never contemplated that a tax cut proposal would be a part of it. Reconciliation was used and designed to reduce deficits, not to add to them.

So by choosing the limitation of 20 hours, you have then forced Members of this body to offer votes in what they call a vote-arama; that is, no time for debate, just offer the amendment and vote.

So it has been tremendously distressing for Members who believe this bill needs to be modified substantially before it would enjoy the kind of truly broad bipartisan support of which the chairman of the committee speaks. That has not occurred. So we have had 20 hours of debate, that is it, on a bill of such magnitude and such significance that will crowd out our ability to invest intelligently in the needs of this country.

Let me just briefly describe this tax bill. More than one-third of a $4 trillion tax cut over the next 10 years will go primarily to the top 1 percent of income earners in America. The second one-third goes to the top 9 percent of income earners in America. But if you are in the 15-percent tax bracket, you get no relief. Of all the brackets that exist that is the one that gets no tax cut at all. Mr. President, that is 72 million middle-income Americans. So if you are watching this evening or listening to this discussion and you fall into that category, this tax debate has nothing to do with you.

Two-thirds of this tax debate involves the top 9 percent of income earners in America. As a result of wasting $4 trillion, here are the things we are deciding are of less significance, just so you know. Most Americans were working today probably did not have the chance to tune into this debate. So let me just review for them what happened.

These are some of the amendments that this body considered today. This is what some of these amendments asked: Can we reduce the size of this tax cut for the most affluent Americans by 1 percentage point in order to fund a prescription drug benefit for the millions of seniors in this country who are being swamped by the cost of prescription drugs?

This body said: No, we think providing a tax cut for the top 1 percent of income earners is of a higher priority than providing the prescription drug benefit for Americans.

We asked how about doing something to protect Social Security and Medicare, because as my colleague from Delaware just absolutely correctly pointed out, the baby boom generation retires when the very worst aspects of this bill kick in. This body said no.

This bill is like a time-release capsule. You have all heard of time-release medicines. You take the medication, and nothing happens in the first 5 hours, or very little happens. Then, in the second 5 hours, the time release produces the kind of benefits that would attack whatever problem you are suffering from.

That is what this tax bill is. The first 5 years are relatively modest, in terms of their impact. It is when the second 5 years kick in, that this tax cut becomes overwhelming in its impact on our budget. That is exactly the time that you will have an overwhelming majority of baby boomers retiring and who will need Social Security and Medicare.

It is not by accident that this tax bill was written that way. It was designed specifically to create the train wreck between the retiring baby boom generation and this tax cut. This is not coincidental. This is what we have been trying to say over and over, with 1 minute discussions of these amendments. It is not the fault of the American public. How do you get to understand the impact of an amendment when you only have 60 seconds to describe the long-term effects of it?

Consider, if you will, the full funding for the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. We have debated over and over the importance of full funding for elementary and secondary education.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I want to respond to some of the things that were said earlier, just to kind of bring this to closure from this Senator's perspective, if I may, and I ask for an additional 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will not object.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a very brief question. Will the Senator agree with me that if you want to know what a country values, you should take a look at what its Tax Code says—who it makes pay, and what its budget is. I respectfully suggest that everything the Senator is saying—and I hope he continues to speak—reflects a fundamental difference in values—not just priorities, a fundamental difference in values between those who support this bill—they are not bad votes. It is not good and evil; it is a different value judgment. This tax bill neither reflects my priorities nor my values.

The Senator has laid out a number of items. He is going to lay out more. How do we explain that everybody in the Tax Code who is in a certain income tax bracket gets relief except people in the 15-percent tax bracket? How do you do that? It is a value judgment.

I assume our friends think, if you give the wealthier people a cut, and not the middle-income people and the little guy, that somehow that is going to trickle down. That is a value judgment, a fundamental value judgment.

How do we stand around and say, somebody who receives $100 million in inheritance should get a tax break when, at the same time, it is going to be paid for out of Social Security and Medicare surpluses? This is about values.

So I guess it is less a question than a statement. I hope the Senator lays out every one of these things because I think it is important the public understand so they can make clear choices. What do they value the most? This is a value judgment.

My friends on the other side always talk about values. Well, let me tell you, this is where the rubber meets the road. This reflects our values. I am where the Senator from Connecticut is. I hope he continues to educate me and the public about it. Make no mistake about it. It is not just priorities; it is about our basic values, what we value most.

Mr. DODD. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, if I may, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes at this point to complete my thoughts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With great indulgence, the Chair consents.

Mr. DODD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, to continue with these charts behind me, I mentioned the rate cut for 72 million Americans, from 15 to 14 percent. We cut the top rate of income earners at the very top of the income brackets of America, and every bracket on down, except the lowest one, which affects 72 million Americans.

You go on down the list. College tuition deductibility: The Senator from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, suggested, why not provide deductibility of the high cost of college tuition? That amendment was rejected.

You go on down the list. Immediate marriage penalty relief: How often have we heard about the penalties of the marriage penalty tax? We want to provide immediate relief for that. We are told no.

So offering these amendments during the day in this Chamber is not dilatory. These are not amendments that are designed to stall at all. Twenty hours of debate on a bill of this size, of this importance, is inadequate. This is not the House of Representatives. This is not some chamber in which just a handful, if you will, even a slight majority, should be able to dictate entirely what they will at the expense of those who have other points of view—even if it were only one. But when the points of view reflect almost 50 percent of this body, shouldn't those points of view be taken into consideration? We have been told repeatedly throughout consideration of this bill that we have to get this done. I don't disagree. But I don't think that we should rush action on this important legislation without taking thoughtful consideration of its potential impact on the future health and growth of our economy. I do not think that is quite right.

Some of the most important debates we have had in this Chamber have been lengthy. They have been unfettered with time constraints on offering amendments over a 60-second period. We had a debate a few weeks ago on campaign finance reform. It took 2 weeks. Most Members, I think, recognize it as one of the better debates in this Chamber. We did not do it in 20 hours. We did it in 2 weeks.

We have had debates in the past on any number of issues that have taken days. That is the unique nature of this body. That is the role of the Senate: not to act as some body where it is only a question of getting it done as fast as you can. This is the middle of May. It is not the end of the session. We have had a new administration in town for 16 weeks. This is a bill that we are considering that will have impacts for 10 years.

So when Members bring up these alternative ideas of fair and fiscally responsible tax cuts, the answer has been no. When we say, Social Security reform and debt reduction are important, the answer has been no. When we say we want to take care of spending caps, veterans benefits, middle-class tax benefits, the answer has been no.

That is not being frivolous. That is not being petulant. That is not being people who are in a tantrum, as someone said today. This is not about Democrats and Republicans. It is not a battle about the Presidency and the Senate Democrats here. It is about the American public. They are the ones who will live with the circumstances and the decisions that we make in this body over the next few days for many, many years to come. They are the ones who we have to keep in mind as we draft this legislation.

There is no argument about having a tax cut. There is room in this surplus for a tax cut. But there ought to be room, as well, to reduce the national debt.

We pay $220 billion a year in interest payments on the national debt. Think how many classrooms could be built, how many people who could be made healthy, how many houses could be constructed, how many water systems or sewage systems could be repaired or built with the $220 billion that goes to interest payments on the national debt. It does not construct anything. It does not help anybody. All it does is pay down on our financial obligations.

There is a great risk with the adoption of this tax proposal that we will be back in red ink and in debt again. Interest rates will begin to climb just as we saw in the 1980s. As those interest rates go up, the cost of an automobile, the cost of a home, the cost of a child going on to college, goes up. Then remember this debate and remember what this body did. This body has acted in a way, in my view, that is irresponsible and unmindful of the cost to this society.

That is why it is important for us to take some time and think about what we are doing, and offer some alternative ideas that can improve the quality of life for people.

So when it comes to prescription drugs, the Patients' Bill of Rights, elementary and secondary education, Medicare, Social Security, the infrastructure of this country, the defense needs of America, the environmental needs of America, there will be no room in the budget of the United States if this tax proposal is adopted.

I am alone in this Senate Chamber this evening, with the exception of the Presiding Officer. It is late. It has been a long day. I am tired, as my colleagues are. But I wanted to take these few minutes to review, as I said, what occurred here today and yesterday because I think it is so fundamentally and profoundly important.

My hope is that people might speak up in the remaining 24 or 48 hours that we have before we vote on final passage of this bill and leave for the recess. I hope that people can express themselves and ask their Members to think twice before they adopt a $4 trillion tax cut, the effects of which are cloudy at best, and is predicted by many to have dire consequences 10 years down the road. Who can say in 10 years what the economy will look like?

There is an energy crisis looming on the horizon. What will be the impact of that on this economy? We are told the administration wants to increase defense spending by as much as $100 billion or $200 billion. What is the impact of that on this economy? And here we are adopting a $4 trillion tax cut. All of these events are coming together, and yet we are also told we need to invest in education, in health care, and the infrastructure of America. But where are the resources going to come from?

It just doesn't add up. The math isn't there. We are told under the Elementary and Secondary Education Act that we are going to have a math test for every third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth grader. I suggest we need a math test here because these numbers don't add up. A third, fourth, fifth or sixth grader would tell you that: Add these numbers, and they don't produce a balanced budget or a surplus. They put this country in great economic peril.

That is why I take the floor this evening, to express my outrage and concern about what we are doing: 20 hours of debate, and then a vote-arama with 1 minute to describe or offer some explanation of an amendment that might make a difference on prescription drugs, on education, on Medicare, on middle-income Americans, 1 minute.

These amendments and these votes will not be forgotten. They will not be forgotten.

It has been said by philosophers that those who fail to remember the mistakes of history are doomed to repeat them, or words to that effect. Not unlike Cassandra of mythological note, for those of us who were here 20 years ago, I beg and beseech my colleagues who are relatively new: We don't tell you these things out of some sense of nostalgia. Twenty years ago, I heard the same arguments being made about the wisdom of a tax cut that was too big, too excessive. The overwhelming majority of our colleagues in the Senate and in the other Chamber disregarded those warnings and voted for a tax proposal that ultimately put this economy in a tailspin. As the Senator from Delaware has noted, it has only been during the last few years that we have recovered from it.

I deplore what is occurring here. I plead with my colleagues: Modify this tax cut proposal. There is room for a decent, strong tax cut that would provide benefits to almost all Americans while also providing room to pay down the debt and to invest in the needed investments of our country in education and health care and the infrastructure of America, to mention just three. There ought to be room to do all three of those things.

Adopting a tax cut that is too big is not unlike adopting a spending program that is too big. Imagine what we would be saying here today if someone were talking about a spending program of $4 trillion over the next 10 years. We would be saying: How do you know whether or not we can afford it 10 years from now? What will the economic conditions be in America 10 years from now?

It would be foolish to commit the resources of this country without having some idea of what the economic circumstances would be in our Nation.

Is it any less foolish to commit ourselves to a $4 trillion tax cut unknowing of what the economic circumstances will be 2, 3, 4, or 5 years from now? The answer is obvious.

For those reasons, I hope Americans across this country will raise their voices, will let Members know how they feel about this proposal, will express their worry that we may be adopting a proposal that will cause this country serious harm.

I apologize for taking a few minutes this evening, but we have not had time today to engage in debate. All we have had is 1 minute to offer amendments.

There are now recorded votes on where people stand on the issue of health care, education, Medicare, Social Security, transportation, and a variety of other issues about which the American public cares.

For those reasons, I urge my colleagues to rethink this proposal. It is only May. Step back, rethink this, develop a truly bipartisan proposal. Come back and ask us to rethink how we might fashion a proposal that would provide tax cuts for Americans as well as leave room for the other necessities of this Nation: Its defense needs, its educational needs, its health care needs. Those needs contribute to the long-term security of America as well. Leaving them to be crowded out, as we are on this day in May, this early on in this new century, is a mistake of historic proportions.

I yield the floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

TO HONOR MS. GEMA DUARTE LUNA AS A RECIPIENT OF THE ARIZONA STATE UNIVERSITY YOUNG ALUMNI ACHIEVEMENT AWARD

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to bring attention to the achievements of a great woman who was recently presented with the Arizona State University (ASU) Young Alumni Achievement Award. This award is bestowed upon an alum who has excelled early in his or her profession and has served the community with distinction. She is a native Arizonan, devoted wife, loving mother of two, and I am proud to know her as my friend. Mr. Speaker, I speak of Ms. Gema Duarte Luna of Phoenix, Arizona.

Raised in the small town of Superior, Arizona, Gema graduated from ASU in 1984 with a Bachelor of Science degree and was the first in her family to receive a college degree. She has had many triumphs in the fields of business, management, and local politics including appointments to many civic committees, such as the Mayor's Fiscal Capacity Committee and the City of Phoenix Transit Tax Citizen's Committee, due to her extensive involvement in issues affecting the community.

She also serves as a board member for KAET Channel 8 (a public television station), Xicanindio Artes, an organization that provides youth programs and promotes Chicano and Native American artists, the National Conference for Community and Justice, a diversity program for high school students, and serves as a member of the ASU Cesar Chavez Institute, a youth leadership program.

Gema served as chairwoman of the Arizona Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and is the current chair of the chamber's annual spring black and white ball which is the largest banquet and fund-raising activity of the Hispanic business community.

While working as the Affinity Marketing Manager for Bank of America she received the prestigious "LEND" award for her commitment to improve the efforts that target low and moderate families and neighborhoods. Currently, she serves as the market segment manager for the Arizona Republic and through her ongoing development and supportive measures, she has been instrumental in the funding of the ASU foundation, a non-profit organization that acts as the principal agent through which gifts are made to benefit the university.

As my colleagues can see, she is a role model to all Arizonans and young Latinas throughout the nation. Her involvement in the community is truly an inspiration and a testament to her dedication and commitment. Her strong presence and proven leadership skills have earned her the respect of her peers and she continues to be a well respected voice in the Valley's Hispanic community. Therefore, please join me today in honoring my friend, Ms. Gema Duarte Luna.

RECOGNIZING THE GUAM POLICE DEPARTMENT

HON. ROBERT A. UNDERWOOD

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, as we observe National Police Week, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize members of the Guam Police Department who have distinguished themselves during the past year. On the island of Guam, the highest honors are usually reserved for the Police Officer of the Year and the Civilian of the Year—awards presented annually to the top employees of the Guam Police Department (GPD). For the year 2001, Police Officer II Patrick J. Santos was named Police Officer of the Year while Ms. Yolanda M. Crisostomo was honored as Civilian of the Year.

Assigned to the Homicide Unit as a Special Agent, Officer Patrick J. Santos has proven his knowledge and abilities in the field of law enforcement. Officer Santos has displayed diversified skills in investigating some of the most complex cases required in police work. With sixteen years of experience in the field, he has participated and investigated in several homicide cases, cleared 119 felony cases, 101 misdemeanor cases and 113 death cases involving suicides, accidents and death by natural causes. In the pursuit of his chosen career, he had been made to sacrifice time away from his family. Often on call without regard to the time of the day, he has selflessly devoted many hours investigating and working on sensitive, complex, and time consuming cases. For his efficiency, dedication and professionalism, the Guam Police Department has chosen to award Officer Santos its highest honor for the year 2001.

GPD's Civilian of the Year is a Clerk Typist II assigned to the Legal Affairs Section. While the department underwent a critical personnel shortage, Yolanda M. Crisostomo was left to manage GPD's Legal Affairs Section. As the sole employee assigned to the section, Ms. Crisostomo tended to duties normally distributed among six staff members. Within the period of one year, she was able to personally generate 7,837 minutes of transcription that converted to 237 investigative reports and a total of 4,740 pages of typewritten legal documents. This is in addition to her collateral duties as a claims representative and a lay representative in adverse actions—duties that entailed legal research and normally assigned to paralegals. Her efficiency and good judgement in the performance of her duties have earned her the coveted honor of being GPD's Civilian of the Year for 2001.

On behalf of the people of Guam, I congratulate Patrick and Yolanda for having been named as GPD's Police Officer and Civilian of the Year. Through their diligence and dedication to their duties at the Guam Police Department, they have made great contributions towards the safety and protection of our island's residents.

I additionally wish to submit for the RECORD, the names of units, police officers, and civilian employees who were also recognized for their services to the department and to the people of Guam. I urge them to keep up the good work!

RECOGNITION FOR TWO OUTSTANDING TEACHERS

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to two teachers, Jack Ganse and Micheal Matassa of Superior, Colorado. Jack and Michael are eighth grade science and math teachers at Eldorado K-8 school. They have initiated a program in which their classes will work together to study how the tremendous population growth Superior has experienced effects the quality of the air, land, and water.

In this program, Jack and Michael have found a way to engage our children in a meaningful educational experience. This experience will engage the students in an issue that our civic leaders must wrestle with on a continuous basis. It will be an education in math and science and civics all at the same time.

As in many parts of the country, urban sprawl has become a great concern to the citizens of Colorado. Superior has grown from a small, rural town of 250 residents in the mid-1980's to a community of nearly 9,000 residents according to the 2000 census. It holds the title of Colorado's fastest growing town. Jack and Michael and their students are going to investigate the effects of this growth on everything from wildlife to possible local climate change from all the new concrete. In addition to posting their findings on the school's web site, the classes will also provide the information to the town board, so that it can then be used to assist in municipal decisions.

Jack and Michael are two of only 55 pairs of teachers nation wide to earn a $15,000 grant from Verizon to fund their project. This project will continue each year with each succeeding class picking it up and adding to the database.

At a time when unchecked growth is having detrimental impacts on our natural resources and environment, these two individuals are connecting our students' energies and knowledge to a pressing community need. They are teaching them that their studies can have a practical application, an application that will benefit the entire community.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to personally thank Jack Ganse and Michael Matassa for their selfless dedication to their community and to the education of the students to whom we entrust to them.

TRIBUTE TO INA SINGER

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Ina Singer, an American patriot and dedicated public servant, who retires on May 30, 2001, from the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD).

I first met Ina in 1969 when she came to the Coastal Bend of Texas after a hurricane. She was detailed to the Corpus Christi-Robstown, Texas, area to set up temporary housing for people who lost homes in the hurricane. It was the beginning of a long and beautiful friendship and professional relationship.

Ina is widely recognized as one of the best managers in the federal government. She is leaving the Directorship of Multifamily Housing in Baltimore, after a long and distinguished career in public service. Ina is a smart, tough motivator of people, and she has applied her considerable talents to improving public housing in the mid-Atlantic area since 1969.

Prior to her present position, Ina has held the following positions with HUD: Associate Deputy Assistant Secretary for Multi-family Housing, Director of the Housing Management Division in the Baltimore Office, and a variety of positions in the mid-Atlantic area that provided her with a foundation of understanding asset management and property disposition, the staples of the work HUD does.

She is an extraordinary leader who motivates people and gets the job done. High performance ratings have followed Ina throughout her career at HUD, and her team consistently exceeds their goals. She is one of the "go-to" people at HUD when trouble pops up. She has been detailed all over the country to deal with troubled offices.

Ina has taken her no-nonsense attitude about the disposition of taxpayers' money and applied that to programs at HUD. Anybody can say yes, but Ina is the rare government creature who is unafraid to say "no" to people who would be bad partners or who would sell bad property.

In her current position, she expanded her responsibility from the Chesapeake Bay area to include other Maryland counties and the District of Columbia, forming valuable community partnerships and creating a virtual office in the greater Maryland-District of Columbia area.

In addition to all the work she does for HUD, she also gives of her time to national roles she views as important to furthering the mission at the Department. In 1990, Ina was awarded HUD's Distinguished Service Award for consistently going above and beyond the call of duty. She leaves HUD with the respect of her colleagues both locally and nationally.

Ina has a beautiful family: her husband Jon, and their children Meredith and Michael. I ask my colleagues to join me today in paying tribute to Ina Singer as she completes a distinguished lifetime of service to the United States as a tremendous steward of the public trust.

A TRIBUTE TO LEE QUARNSTROM

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I am in the habit of paying tribute on this floor to constituents and persons who have made extraordinary contributions to our community. But words fall me when it comes to describing the life of one of Santa Cruz's finest newspaper columnists, Lee Quamstrom. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I ask your indulgence in my sharing with the House the observations of Mr. Quamstrom's journalism colleagues on the event of his retirement:

Whereas, Lee Quamstrom has toiled for the San Jose Mercury News for nearly 20 years, covering daily events in Santa Cruz County, Monterey County as well as the great American West, and during that time has written literally more than a dozen news stories; and

Whereas, Lee has covered three generations of Santa Cruz County politicians, simultaneously indulging and insulting them; and

Whereas, Lee is the only man in Santa Cruz County to have made the psychedelic journey from Merry Prankster to Cranky Curmudgeon; and

Whereas, Lee has acted as a selfless champion of homeless rights, giving even the poorest among us the special privilege to call themselves "bums"; and

Whereas, Lee has been voted "Man of the Year" by the Santa Cruz Bicycling Club for his columns that have come flat out against capital punishment for cyclists; and

Whereas, Lee is the longest-standing member of the local journalistic community's honorary, limited organization, "The Three Biggest Jerks in Santa Cruz County," serving along with such notables as Dick Little, Steve Shender, Tom Honig, Bob Smith, Greg Beebe, Lane Wallace and Don Wilson; and

Whereas, Lee has been a friend, an advocate and an intellectual voice for all that is good about journalism, Santa Cruz County and for all who ply their trade just trying to get a story in the paper without the copy desk screwing it up. He's funny, appropriately disrespectful and—perhaps the greatest praise of all—never boring to have around.

Now, therefore, be it resolved that Lee Quamstrom has been the most memorable Santa Cruz resident ever and thus shall be allowed to dismantle the Santa Cruz lighthouse, brick by brick, and take it to the real Surf City, Huntington Beach in Orange County, Calif. As his buddy and former fellow columnist, James Trotter, put it:

"He might as well take the lighthouse because without Lee Quamstrom, Santa Cruz will never be the same place again."

HONORING BILL AND JULIE ESREY

HON. KAREN MCCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor two of my constituents from Kansas City who recently have been recognized for their outstanding contributions to their community.

William T. Esrey, Chairman and CEO of Sprint Corporation, and his wife Julie Esrey have been awarded the 2001 Star Award by the Kansas City Starlight Theater. The Starlight Theater is Kansas City's largest and oldest performing arts organization and is the second largest theatre of its kind in the United States. Founded in 1950, the Starlight Theatre is now in its 51st season.

This distinguished Star Award was presented the Esreys, who are Honorary Co-Chairs for the 15th Annual Starlight Theatre Benefit Gala on Saturday, May 19, 2001. The Star Award is given to honor those individuals who have made outstanding contributions and dedicated long-time service to Kansas City, making a difference in the community. The Esreys are honored with this award through countless hours worked in the community to help benefit an extensive list of community service organizations.

Under Bill Esrey's leadership, the Sprint Foundation has been a major benefactor of The Starlight Theater. Additionally over the past five years alone, Sprint has donated more than $17 million in Sprint Foundation contributions and matching grants to organizations in greater Kansas City. Mr. Esrey also spearheaded the drive that raised millions of dollars for the rehabilitation of Union Station and the development of Science City, including $9 million in Sprint contributions since 1991.

Julie Esrey has worked both for Exxon and as an international economist for the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, as well as serving on the boards of Bank IV (Kansas), Duke University and Brown Shoe. In Kansas City, she has served as honorary Chairman, American Cancer Society Gala; Honorary Chairman, Lyric Opera Ball; Chairman, Children's Mercy Golf Classic; Chairman, March of Dimes Gourmet Gala; and Honorary Chairman, KCPT Speaking of Women's Health for 2001, as well as serving on the Central Governing Board of Children's Mercy Hospital from 1989 through 1995.

During Bill Esrey's tenure as CEO, Sprint has grown into a $23 billion worldwide communications force and was named the most admired communications company in Fortune Magazine's survey of corporate reputation. Business Week named Esrey as one of the "Top 25" business executives in the world in 1997. Bill Esrey joined Sprint, then known as United Telecommunications, Inc., in 1980 as Executive Vice President of Corporate Planning. In 1984, Esrey led the effort to fundamentally reposition the company by entering the long distance market and building the nation's first all-digital fiber optic network. Today Sprint is a leader in the communications industry, which has emerged as one of the growth engines for the overall U.S. economy. Currently, Bill Esrey serves on the boards of Exxon-Mobil Corporation, Duke Energy Corporation and General Mills, Inc. He also is chairman of the Business Council and a member of The Business Roundtable.

In addition to their dedication to the community and their careers, Bill and Julie are dedicated to each other and their family. Married since 1964, they have two grown children, Bill Jr. and John, who have participated in many local activities and follow in their parent's footsteps in giving back to the community.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to join me in congratulating Bill and Julie Esrey on receiving the 2001 Star Award. Their dedication to the Kansas City community and their family is an example to all of us of the difference individuals can achieve who have dedicated their lives to making the world a better place. Thank you Bill and Julie.

FERS REDEPOSIT ACT

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there is no debate over whether the federal government is facing a crisis—it is. Reports indicate that about 30 percent of the government's 1.6 million full-time employees will be eligible to retire within five years, and an additional 20 percent could seek early retirement. Furthermore, 65 percent of the Senior Executive Service will be eligible for retirement by 2004.

One hearing has been held and numerous editorials have been written about the impending workforce shortage, but very few specific policy changes have been suggested. Today I am introducing legislation that takes a step in the right direction. The FERS Redeposit Act would allow individuals who left the federal government and received a refund of their Federal Employees Retirement System (FERS) contributions to reenter government service without losing their accrued annuity. Instead of forfeiting credit earned during their prior service, returning employees would be able to redeposit their cashed out annuity upon reentrance. This benefit is already available to federal employees who are registered under the older Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS).

Retiring federal employees represent the institutional knowledge and expertise needed to run the government, and we must pro-actively address this drain on our human capital. Creating incentives for federal employees who left for the private sector to return to government service is one way to address this problem. Studies indicate that a key trait of younger workers, who are covered by FERS, is their increased professional mobility. FERS's design implicitly acknowledges this fact by incorporating a portable private sector-style Thrift Savings Plan and 401(K) plan. It is ironic that those federal workers who are in CSRS—most of whom have worked their entire careers in the federal government—have a redeposit option while the younger FERS employees do not.

As more and more FERS employees leave the federal government and later wish to reenter federal service, a redeposit option would provide the incentive needed to bring these individuals back to the government.

I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort to make federal service more attractive by co-sponsoring this important legislation.

RECOGNIZING THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH

HON. BOB SCHAFFER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize the value of agriculture research and the contribution it makes to the lives of U.S. producers and consumers.

Over the past few months, American livestock producers have closely followed the latest international news. We have watched nervously as foot-and-mouth disease (FMD) has ravaged the United Kingdom's livestock community, and as it has marched into the European mainland, the Middle East, Asia and South America.

To date, around 1,560 sites in Britain have been hit by the highly contagious virus. Now, Brazil is the latest country suspected of hosting the disease. Moreover, FMD has cost the world's cattle, hog and sheep industries billions of dollars. Britain's meat industry estimates the highly-contagious disease has cost it $12 million a week in lost sales leaving the UK with a bill of more than $4.3 billion just to halt and destroy the disease.

All of this begs the question: How do we best protect American livestock from animal ailments such as FMD and mad cow disease?

In the new global market, it is only a matter of time before the rest of the world's diseases come knocking on America's door. Considering my district—Colorado's Fourth District—is a leader in livestock sales, and that the U.S. livestock industry generates $55 billion a year, we must be able to defend our livestock from threats like FMD by means of science and technology, instead of relying only on border checks, federal agents and good luck.

Nor is new legislation the answer for the long term. The real key to prevention lies in agricultural research and development. It makes sense to take a proactive approach in protecting and improving America's livestock. Such research leads to the discovery of new uses for ag products, which in turn boosts demand.

I was surprised to learn that even though agriculture receives less than two percent of the federal research budget, productivity in the ag sector grows four-to-ten times faster than in other sectors. And while the federal government provides about 24 percent of funding for ag research, the private sector pays more than 60 percent of the bill, proving ag research is one of government's best buys.

Much of agriculture's most innovative research is conducted in my home of Colorado. Research excellence is perhaps best exemplified at Colorado State University's Center for Economically Important Infectious Animal Diseases. The center provides America's livestock producers with the latest knowledge, and technology in the fight against diseases. A leader in livestock research, the center also plays a key role in food concerns.

Another example is the National Beef Cattle Evaluation Consortium (NBCEC). Comprised of renowned scientists from CSU and other leading universities, as well as local cattlemen, the NBCEC is bolstering the competitiveness of U.S. beef by maximizing genetic research and returning the advantage to U.S. cattle producers.

The USDA's research budget has barely grown in real terms over two decades. But the recent livestock epidemics have provided an overdue wake up call, and we can expect Congress to advance a substantial increase in funding for ag research. If planned properly, such support will secure long-term solutions for the producers and consumers of today and tomorrow.

With more than one million individual farms and ranches comprising the U.S. livestock industry, investing in knowledge and prevention is one of the best ways policy makers can stand by American agriculture. It is a matter of national security. After all, at stake is America's capacity to feed itself and the rest of the world.

I ask the House to join me in supporting America's producers by doing everything possible to better the country's agricultural research.

20TH ANNIVERSARY OF GUMA' MAMI

HON. ROBERT A. UNDERWOOD

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 20th anniversary of Guma' Mami, which means "Our House" in the native language of the people of Guam. Guma' Mami is a non-profit corporation whose mission is to facilitate the full inclusion and integration of adults with developmental disabilities or mental retardation into their communities through individual and family support. Their success stem from ensuring the highest quality of services to support, enhance and improve the quality of life of adults with cognitive and other developmental disabilities.

Guma' Mami began in May 1981 by providing individual and family support and planning a housing support program. Until recently, the organization operated three housing support programs—the Independent Group Home, the Mary Clare Home and a transition home. The Mary Clare Home, which was opened in memory of a young woman in need of positive behavior support, and the Independent Group Home accommodates 11 individuals. These homes are staffed 24-hours a day, 7-days a week by Community Living Counselors and supervised by a Housing Support Manager with the ultimate goal for these individuals to transition into a home of their choice with the support services they need. To date Guma' Mami has successfully helped 18 persons from its housing support program to homes of their own—from dependency to autonomy. The third home, a transition or emergency shelter, served as temporary housing for homeless developmentally disabled individuals as well as those soon to be homeless. The housing support program successfully ran its eighteen-month funding cycle and transferred clients to homes of their choice. It was funded by the Guam Housing and Urban Renewal Authority through the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Community Development Block Grant.

Guma' Mami also assists individuals who live in the community by providing supportive services through its Comprehensive Case Management Program. Three Case Managers and a Program Coordinator in this section provide services and support for up to 104 individuals in the community. Case Managers monitor the progress of consumers by conducting consumer-driven needs assessment on an on-going basis and coordinate linkages with community resources, such as respite care, day programs, employment, psychological services, medical and dental services, as well as recreation and leisure, and emergency shelter when needed.

Other services provided by Guma' Mami include assisting clients by advocating for rights and training in self advocacy efforts; crisis intervention by providing coping skills for daily living, supportive counseling especially in time of crisis, positive behavior support and family training; and transportation services. Home visits and other personal contacts are made to assist with social integration, budget management, mobility training and personal hygiene. Guma' Mami is the legal guardian of some of the individuals with more significant disabilities. As legal guardian, Guma' Mami attends to the needs of these individuals, such as medical matters and living arrangements.

One of the hallmarks of Guma' Mami has been its ability to take on an active leadership role in the community. Today, the island community looks to Guma' Mami not only for the provision of housing options, but also for leadership in the planning and development of policy reform. Guma' Mami is represented in the Guam Developmental Disabilities Council, the Guam System for Assistive Technology, the University Affiliated Program on Developmental Disabilities, the Rehabilitation Council and the Statewide Independent Living Council. Guma' Mami takes pride in programs that are driven by the preference and choices of individuals it supports.

Twenty years later the organization continues to exist as a highly regarded professional service provider and this year they adopted the slogan, "IT'S ALL ABOUT CARE" to emphasize the basic human value that drives their mission of inclusion and integration of adults with developmental disabilities into their communities through individual and family support. The organization has implemented its three-year plan, "Guma' Mami: Millennium 2000," and has taken steps to begin meeting the goals and objectives as delineated in its plan.

In celebration of their 20th anniversary, and its continuous efforts to breakdown barriers, erase negative stereotypes of persons with developmental and mental disabilities, and educate the public, the Governor of Guam will proclaim the week of May 27 to June 2 as "Guma' Mami Week" in Guam. The Guam Legislature will also adopt a resolution in support of Guma' Mami's efforts.

The Guma' Mami Board of Directors, its staff and management have planned many activities for the week-long celebration. The celebration will begin with a Mass at Santa Teresita Church in Mangilao, the village where the organization's homes are located. Awareness activities include placing a banner along Guam's main highway, inviting the community to visit the Mary Clare and Independent Group Homes and to watch a series of interviews with Guma' Mami clients and staff during the nightly TV news program. Guma' Mami Week will culminate with a luncheon at which clients and persons in the community who have been of great support to Guma' Mami will be recognized.

Mr. Speaker, I share this story with you and my colleagues as a proud member of the Guma' Mami organization, and because its success is a reflection of the selflessness, the generosity and the caring nature of the people of my district. I lend my support in the form of financial contributions and by always being vigilant on the availability of federal grants with which the organization may improve the quality of its services. I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing and congratulating the staff and management of Guma' Mami, headed by Executive Director Peter Blas, for their tireless efforts to provide a positive and pro-active impact in the lives of persons with disabilities through community involvement, service excellence, and advocacy efforts.

Congratulations are also in order for the Board of Directors under the guidance and leadership of President James Denney for their significant contribution to the Guam community, most especially to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families enabling them to become active and contributing members of the community.

TRIBUTE TO LAURIE MATTHEWS

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the service of Laurie Matthews. For the past decade Laurie has directed the Colorado State Parks through a period of transition that has resulted in the system becoming a "national model." Overseeing forty state parks with an annual budget of $40 million, Laurie has become one of the most valued leaders in outdoor recreation in the nation.

When Laurie took charge of the state parks system, it consisted of 190,000 acres with a maintenance backlog that experts said would take over forty years to clear up. Under her leadership the state park system in Colorado expanded by 25,000 acres worth $54 million and completely erased the maintenance backlog. Her dedication to the outdoors showed in her bolstering of environmental education and interpretation by adding 19 new visitor centers and 30 new seasonal interpreters to better assist the public.

Laurie also serves on the Board of Directors for the National Association of State Park Directors, Volunteers for Outdoor Colorado, and Leave No Trace. She has been highly praised for her dedicated service to the State of Colorado by Gov. Bill Owens and the Executive Director of the Department of Natural Resources, Greg Walcher. Today I would like to add my voice to this praise. Laurie's service to the people and the lands of Colorado has been outstanding. The quality of life in our State has been enhanced by her commitment.

She leaves Colorado to join her husband in the Himalayan Dental Relief Project in Nepal. During my travels and mountain climbing experiences in that country, I have come to know and appreciate the people of Nepal and I know that Laurie will be of tremendous service to them. I wish Laurie and her husband the best possible luck there. If she has even a fraction of the amount of success there that she has had in Colorado then the people of Nepal will indeed be extremely fortunate.

Mr. Speaker, I am attaching a recent article and editorial from the Denver Post, and want to personally thank Laurie Matthews for her years of dedicated service.

HEAD OF COLORADO STATE PARKS TO STEP DOWN

(By Theo Stein)

Tuesday, April 17, 2001.—Ten years ago, Laurie Matthews inherited a Colorado State Parks system that had 190,000 acres, a $6 million annual budget and a maintenance program so far behind that officials said it would take 44 years to catch up.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

On Monday, Matthews announced she is leaving her position as director after a decade that saw park officials erase the maintenance backlog and add 25,000 acres of new holdings to a system that now counts 11 million visitors a year.

Under her tenure, sought-after lands were added under the park system's "crown jewel" initiative, and acquisitions around three urban-area parks, Castlewood, Roxborough and Barr Lake, provided important buffers.

"State parks have flourished under her leadership, and we will miss her greatly," said Edward Callaway, parks board chairman. "I have absolutely the highest regard for that woman." Matthews said she's resigning effective June 20 to spend several months in Nepal helping her husband, dentist Andrew Holeck, with the nonprofit Himalayan Dental Relief project they co-founded. "For five years, we've gone over to Nepal and gradually have done more and more of the clinics," she said.

While she's excited about the challenge, Matthews also said she has mixed feelings about leaving. "It's been a wonderful 10 years, the system is positioned beautifully, but, yeah, it's difficult," said Matthews. "What I'll miss most are the wonderful people who work for Colorado State Parks."

Matthews said three developments provided the footing necessary to make the gains of the past 10 years. First came the legislation enabling Great Outdoors Colorado, which earmarked state lottery money to help parks and recreation.

Second was a bill championed by the state's congressional delegation that allowed federal agencies to join cost sharing partnerships with states to renovate aging parks.

Finally, the state legislature approved park fee increases.

Matthews also focused on environmental education in the parks, adding 19 new visitor centers and 30 seasonal interpreters to assist the public.

CONTINUE PARKS LEADERSHIP

(By Denver Post Editorial Board)

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 2001.—In the past decade, Colorado's state parks have truly blossomed—and just at the right time. As our state's population grows, more people need more places for outdoor recreation. And our 40 state parks (with more slated to open in the next few years) offer just such opportunities to 11 million visitors each year.

Such a diverse system demands the excellence in leadership it has enjoyed for the past 10 years under state parks Director Laurie Matthews.

Now, however, the 48-year-old Matthews is leaving to help her husband run a new, nonprofit group that will provide free dentistry to Nepal's impoverished children.

Matthews' contribution to Colorado conservation cannot be overstated. She has been a tireless advocate for public recreation, environmental education, wildlife habitat preservation and open-space preservation. She has created good will between her agency and the state legislature—no easy task, given lawmakers' skepticism toward bureaucracies—and fostered cooperation among local, state and federal public-land managers. She has also lent her energy to numerous outdoor organizations, building community ties even as she helped build trails.

There's no replacing Matthews, but the state now must find a successor.

Whether Gov. Bill Owens' administration chooses someone inside or out of the state system, the next parks director must possess certain key qualities.

Foremost is solid leadership, including the ability to think strategically and envision what the state parks system should be five to 10 years hence. Indeed, protecting the parks from development pressures, while respecting the rights of surrounding property owners, is one of the toughest juggling acts the new director will face.

The director also must work collegially with other state agencies, while having the gumption to stand up for the best, long-term interests of the parks system.

Matthews certainly brought such admirable traits to her job. The Owens administration should search for a successor with equal attributes.

TRIBUTE TO THE LAKEVIEW HIGH SCHOOL KEY CLUB, BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN

HON. NICK SMITH

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, as a former president of the Key Club in my hometown of Addison, Michigan, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to honor the members of the Lakeview/Urbandale Kiwanis Club in Battle Creek, Michigan and the over 40 students from Lakeview High School who will gather on May 22, 2001 to celebrate the chartering of the community's first Key Club.

Key Club is an international service club for high school students which operates under the sponsorship of a local Kiwanis Club, and is designed to aid students in developing leadership skills, initiative and good citizenship through interaction with business and professional leaders in the community.

The Key Club constitution promotes daily living of the Golden Rule in all human relationships; the adoption and application of higher standards in scholarship, sportsmanship, and social contacts and providing a practical means to form enduring friendships, to render unselfish service, and to build better communities.

The history of Key Club dates to May 1925 with the chartering of the first chapter at Sacramento High School in California by the Kiwanis Club of Sacramento. The club was originally formed to provide vocational guidance to young, high school males and to serve as an alternative to high school fraternities and secret organizations. Today, Key Club is the largest high school service organization in the country, with more than 200,000 members in over 4,500 clubs throughout North America, Europe and the Caribbean.

The impeccable reputation of Kiwanis International is well documented and well deserved. Countless individuals worldwide have been assisted through the organization's commitment to community service and helping those in need. I am honored to recognize the members of the Lakeview/Urbandale Kiwanis Club for tireless efforts on behalf of the greater Battle Creek area and for their willingness to serve as mentors and role models to area youth. I congratulate the Lakeview High School Key Club on the receipt of its charter and wish the group much success in its inaugural year.

WORCESTER—AN ALL-AMERICAN CITY

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to inform my colleagues that the City of Worcester, Massachusetts has won the National Civic League's All America City Award five times in the history of the fifty-one year program: 1949, 1960, 1965, 1981, and 2000. Worcester is a city that the National Civic League credits with being able to solve community problems.

On Thursday, May 24th the city will host an All-America City Celebration in Worcester City Hall when city officials and community partners will unveil five permanently-mounted plaques to commemorate this achievement.

The Worcester City Council, Worcester School Committee, Superintendent Dr. James Caradonio, the Central Massachusetts Legislative Delegation, All America City Delegates, municipal department heads, and community partners will be invited to participate in this event. Reverend Richard Wright and Mrs. Shirley Wright, Community Co-Chairs for the City's successful bid for the Award one year ago, will serve as moderators for the occasion. The event will include a brief speaking program, refreshments, and music by the Worcester Firefighters Pipe and Drum Brigade. It should be quite a party.

As Tom Hoover, Worcester's City Manager, noted: "I am very proud of our collective work to improve the lives of others and ultimately this community; it is the right thing to do!"

Mr. Speaker, I know all of my colleagues join me in congratulating the people of Worcester for this remarkable achievement.

RECOGNIZING JUDY JAMES FOR HER OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO THE SONOMA COUNTY FARM BUREAU

HON. MIKE THOMPSON

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, we rise today to recognize Judy James, who is retiring after twelve years of service as the Executive Director of the Sonoma County Farm Bureau.

In the past twelve years, agriculture in Sonoma County has undergone profound changes. New pests and diseases have threatened production, farmers and ranchers have had to resist urban encroachment and development pressures, and environmental regulations have restricted some agricultural practices. The Farm Bureau, under the leadership of Ms. James, has successfully guided its members by adapting to these changing times.

Ms. James has always been a creative and dedicated advocate for Sonoma County agriculture.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

She developed the Government Executive Institute program to educate local policy makers about the challenges faced by Sonoma County farmers and ranchers. The Sonoma County Farm Bureau received the first of its three national awards from the American Farm Bureau Federation for this program.

Ms. James also created the Ag-Education Contribution Fund that is supported by Farm Bureau members. Funds raised through this program are used to promote Sonoma County agriculture in the local schools.

Under her direction, the Bureau's annual Crab Feed grew from serving 100 people to serving more than 600 people, thereby generating more than $15,000 annually for Farm Bureau activities.

Although Ms. James is retiring from a leadership role in the Farm Bureau, she will continue to be an active member. She will help her husband run the family vineyard, assist her children on their 4-H livestock projects, and teach agriculture classes at Santa Rosa Junior College.

Mr. Speaker, because of Judy James' many contributions to the Sonoma County Farm Bureau and to her community, it is fitting and proper to honor her today.

INTRODUCING THE FATAL GRADE CROSSING ACCIDENT INVESTIGATIONS ACT

HON. COLLIN C. PETERSON

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PETERSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the "Fatal Grade Crossing Accident Investigations Act" to require the National Transportation Safety Board to investigate all crashes between a train and a road vehicle that result in a fatality.

The NTSB is currently charged with investigating a variety of transportation and pipeline accidents, some of which result in no loss of life or even injury. However, freight trains and cars collide 4,000 times a year resulting in 400 deaths. The NTSB gathers these statistics from the Federal Railroad Administration and feels that its work is done. Meanwhile, the NTSB is the only agency with the authority to fully investigate these fatal crashes, and its failure to do so leaves a vacuum where families have to fight with railroad companies for answers and local law enforcement agencies are powerless to help them. In some cases, the family of a lost loved one must sue the railroad for the train engine's data recorder or results of toxicology tests that railroads conduct on employees involved in a crash. The NTSB has the authority to collect this information—if it chooses to investigate the accident. My bill requires the National Transportation Safety Board to put its resources to work where a loss of life occurs on any railroad crossing.

I am offering this bill with support from a group called Citizens Against Railroad Tragedies which brought to my attention the serious gap that exists in car-train accident investigations. I encourage all Members of the House to hear the concerns of their constituents who are associated with this group and to help us eliminate railroad crossing accidents by increasing the safety at intersections and investigating the crashes that tragically still occur everyday across our country.

HONORING DR. WILLIAM WILKINSON

HON. GRACE F. NAPOLITANO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely proud to rise today to honor a very special man—Dr. William Wilkinson, a long time physician and former Chairman of the Board of Directors of Beverly Hospital in Montebello, California. Today, in recognition of Dr. Wilkinson's numerous contributions to the hospital and community at large, a record of achievements and service spanning more than 40 years, Beverly Hospital will dedicate its new Senior Resource Center in his name and establish the "Dr. William Wilkinson Nursing Education Fund."

Dr. Wilkinson has a long litany of accomplishments which speak to his sense of duty and responsibility to the sick, to his profession and to the community that is so much a part of his life. He has been on the Beverly Hospital Board of Directors since 1971 and also served as its President; was an official physician for the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles; a member of the Founding Board of Directors of MERCI—Mentally and Emotionally Retarded Children (1962); a Clinical Instructor for the Department of Family Medicine at the University of California at Irvine (1974–1988); an Assistant Professor of Family and Community Medicine at the University of Southern California beginning in 1980; and a Trustee on the Beverly Hospital Foundation Board. In addition, Dr. Wilkinson was awarded the Outstanding Volunteer Teacher of the Year (1986–1987) while at the University of California at Irvine.

Mr. Speaker, I would like all my colleagues to join me in saluting Dr. William Wilkinson for his selfless and untiring efforts on behalf of others. His devotion to his work and his commitment to others—the needy, the poor, the sick, the young and old alike—have endeared him to so many of his fellow medical professionals and to the countless people who have received his comfort, advice and professional care. It is indeed fitting today that we honor Dr. Wilkinson for all he has done to make life better for so many.

POWER TEAM WEEK, KENNESAW, GEORGIA

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

HON. JOHNNY ISAKSON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the dates Monday, May 28th through Sunday, June 3rd, 2001, will be recognized by the City of Kennesaw, Georgia as, "Power Team Week." During this week young people from all walks of life will have the opportunity to be motivated, encouraged and inspired by their awesome displays of strength, and powerful, values based motivational message.

In Congress we struggle every day with serious issues and problems facing the youth of our country. It is encouraging to know John Jacobs and his Power Team, are motivated by a quote from Mr. Jacobs himself, "today's young people are tomorrow's future." He is absolutely correct, and for more than 20 years, he and The Power Team have been taking the message of "saying no" to drugs and alcohol, the importance of high moral standards in one's life, and striving for academic excellence, directly to the youth of America.

We commend John Jacobs and The Power Team for their continued work on behalf of America's young people, and for the City of Kennesaw for recognizing May 28th through June 3rd, 2001 as "Power Team Week."

ASIAN PACIFIC AMERICAN HERITAGE MONTH

HON. ADAM B. SCHIFF

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate Asian Pacific American Heritage Month this May 2001. Almost two decades ago, President Jimmy Carter signed a joint resolution declaring the first Asian Pacific American Heritage Week as May 4-10, 1979. Then, a decade ago, the celebration was extended to the entire month. Finally, Public Law 102-450 approved on October 23, 1992, designated May of each year as Asian Pacific American Heritage Month.

I am proud that the region I represent in Congress is a diverse one and is home to many people of Asian Pacific heritage. So many of my constituents have distinguished themselves through their accomplishments in education, business, medicine and science, and other forms of public and private sector involvement, and through a strong and successful family life. To commemorate Asian Pacific American Heritage Month, I would like to briefly highlight the remarkable accomplishments of three distinguished Asian Pacific American civic leaders who represent constituents from California's 27th Congressional District, which I am proud to serve in the U.S. House of Representatives.

John Chiang has shown a deep and genuine commitment to public service as Vice Chair of the California Board of Equalization. Elected as the representative of the Fourth District of the Board of Equalization in 1998, Mr. Chiang has promoted public-private community outreach and taxpayer-education initiatives to better serve his more than 8 million constituents in Los Angeles County. Mr. Chiang organized the first joint Board of Equalization, Franchise Tax Board, and Internal Revenue Service seminar for nonprofit organizations and joined with the Los Angeles County Assessor's Office to hold a tax seminar for religious organizations. He has also organized business and labor forums on fighting tax evasion in the "underground economy" and sponsored state legislative reforms to enhance the California Taxpayers' Bill of Rights. John is the son of Judy Chiang, a generous and committed community volunteer, and Dr. Mutong Thomas Chiang, a thoughtful and dedicated scholar.

Carol Liu has a long-standing record of community leadership, culminating with her election last year as the representative of California's 44th Assembly District. Assemblymember Liu's top priority is to restore California's public education system to be among the very best in the nation. Prior to her election to the State Assembly, Ms. Liu's work in education included serving as a PTA President, President of the Pasadena City College Foundation Board, and Co-Chair of the Pasadena City College capital campaign to fund construction of a new physical education and sports complex. In addition, Liu sits on the Board of Trustees of the U. C. Berkeley Foundation. She also served her community as a civic leader, with her election to the La Canada Flintridge City Council in 1992, re-election in 1996 and her terms as Mayor in 1996 and 1999. Liu has been honored for her contributions to the community with the La Canada Flintridge Educational Spirit of Outstanding Service Award and the Second Baptist Church Outstanding Service Award. In 1998, when I served as a State Senator in California, I was proud to designate her as the 21st Senatorial District Woman of the Year. Liu is married to Mike Peevey, a businessman and entrepreneur, and they are the proud parents of three grown children, Jed, Maria, and Darcie, and even prouder grandparents of three grandchildren.

Matthew Y.C. Lin, M.D., is the first Asian American elected to serve as a Member of the City Council of the City of San Marino, California. Dr. Lin, a board-certified orthopedic surgeon, has an extensive record of community service. His volunteer activities include leadership positions with the San Marino Schools Foundation, Pasadena Symphony, Chinese Club of San Marino, United Way of the San Gabriel Valley and Luke Christian Medical Mission. He has sought to improve the lives of our children through his service at the West San Gabriel Valley Boys and Girls Club, Asian Youth Center, and by coaching AYSO soccer and serving as assistant coach for the San Marino High School Judo Club. He has taken part in voluntary medical missions to aid the victims of disasters, responding to the Taiwan earthquake in September 1999 and the earthquake in El Salvador in January 2001. Dr. Lin and his wife, Joy, are the proud parents of four adult children, Jenny, George, Tim and Jerry.

I am proud to recognize the community and civic accomplishments of Councilman Lin, Assemblywoman Liu and Board of Equalization Member Chiang as we celebrate Asian Pacific American Heritage Month. They are truly remarkable leaders who through their service to our communities are an inspiration to us all.

AMERICA'S NATIONAL TREE—THE OAK

HON. BOB GOODLATTE

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to introduce legislation recognizing the people's selection of the oak tree as America's national tree. This past Arbor Day, April 27, Members of Congress, Agriculture Secretary Veneman, Interior Secretary Norton, and EPA Administrator Whitman joined the National Arbor Day Foundation in a ceremonial unveiling of a young oak on the Capitol grounds. Selected by the American public over a four-month long open voting process using the Internet (<http://www.arborday.org/NationalTree/ntResults.html>), the oak earned the title of America's Chosen National Tree. To recognize this distinction, I and Mr. GOSS of Florida along with Mr. OSBORNE of Nebraska are introducing legislation today granting the oak official status as America's national tree. The junior Senator from Nebraska, Mr. NELSON, has already introduced companion legislation, S. 811.

As a member of Congress representing a heavily forested district in Virginia, I fully understand and appreciate how trees add to an individual's quality of life. As chairman of the House Agriculture Subcommittee responsible for forestry, I know how trees and forests enhance the environment, add recreational opportunities and provide for the livelihoods of 1.4 million working individuals in the $262 billion dollar forest industry. Whether one is enjoying the myriad of products generated from a forest, or the simple satisfaction of laying under a shaded giant, trees contribute to all Americans. This is why I am here today and why it is appropriate to recognize the Oak as the National tree chosen by the American public.

I would also like to commend the National Arbor Day Foundation for its use of the Internet as the primary communication tool in this endeavor to name America's National tree. As co-chair of the Congressional Internet Caucus, I applaud the powerful role the Internet played in this historic vote. Not only did this medium make possible easy, broad-based participation in the vote, but it also offered many educational opportunities for those who checked out arborday.org online. Having been a member of the Foundation for 16 years, I am impressed with their work in promoting trees in our communities across the country, and I am also pleased that they are using the capabilities of the Internet to educate the American public about the proper care and benefits of trees.

Along with other well-known national emblems, the oak is a most fitting selection as America's National tree. The stately oak not only surrounds us here on the Capitol ground, but also is a part of our daily lives as wood products in our homes, our offices and places of gathering. Common to all fifty states, the oak has played a huge role in America's history as a valuable resource. It helped our founding fathers establish a new nation, supplying building materials for the expanding original thirteen colonies. It further greeted pioneers as they traveled across the new republic to the West Coast. And to this day it has remained an enduring, valuable, and highly-prized raw material. Its use as beautifully crafted furniture, sturdy door and window framing, ornate flooring and paneling, all reinforce the sensible selection of the oak. This majestic tree, which has long been a part of our national heritage and strength, fully merits this distinction.

I want to personally thank those who took part in the vote for America's national tree, and I applaud Arbor Day for its dedication to the future for which the oak represents. I look forward to working with my colleagues to designate the oak as America's national tree.

PRINTED CIRCUIT INVESTMENT ACT OF 2001

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and join my good friend and colleague, Bob Matsui of California, to introduce the Printed Circuit Investment Act of 2001. This simple and straightforward bill allows manufacturers of printed wiring boards and printed wiring assemblies, known as the electronic interconnect industry, to depreciate their production equipment in three years rather than the five years in current law. Printed wiring boards are those ubiquitous little green boards loaded with tiny wires and microchips that are the nerve centers of electronic items from television sets to computers to mobile phones and electronic organizers.

The interconnecting industry, like so much of the electronics industry, has changed dramatically in just the last decade. This industry, which has $44 billion in annual sales, was once dominated by large companies. Now it consists overwhelmingly of small firms. The rapid pace of technological advancement today makes interconnecting manufacturing equipment obsolete in 18 to 36 months. This makes the interconnecting industry very capital intensive. In fact, capital expenditures last year totaled more than $3 billion and continue to grow.

The depreciation rules found in the tax code have not kept pace with the realities of this dynamic market. The industry currently relies on tax law passed in the 1980s, that was based on 1970s era electronics technology. US competitors in Asia, however, enjoy much more favorable tax treatment as well as direct government subsidies.

The Printed Circuit Investment Act of 2001 will provide necessary tax relief to the interconnect industry and the 400,000 Americans whose jobs directly rely on the success of this industry. I urge my colleagues to join Congressman MATSUI and I in supporting this important legislation.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB RILEY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained for rollcall No. 126, H. Con. Res. 56, Expressing the sense of the Congress regarding National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day. Had I been present for this vote I would have voted in favor of H. Con. Res. 56.

I was also unavoidably detained for rollcall No. 127, H.R. 1885, To expand the class of beneficiaries who may apply for adjustment of status under section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act by extending the deadline for classification petition and labor certification filings, and for other purposes. Had I been present for this vote I would have voted against H.R. 1885.

WELCOMING PRESIDENT CHEN SHUI BIAN TO THE U.S.

HON. JIM RYUN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished visitor, President Chen Shui Bian of the Republic of China will be stopping briefly in New York before heading to Central America later this month.

This is the first visit by Mr. Chen to New York as a head of state. President Chen has just completed his first year in office as the Tenth President of the Republic of China on Taiwan. As the former mayor of Taiwan's capital, President Chen has served as a dedicated leader to this island democracy.

President Chen's visit will undoubtedly serve to strengthen the warm friendship between the United States and the Republic of China. I hop my colleagues will join me in extending a word of welcome to President Chen during his visit to the United States.

THE INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 1692, TO SIMPLIFY AND MAKE MORE EQUITABLE THE TAX TREAT- MENT OF SETTLEMENT TRUSTS ESTABLISHED PURSUANT TO THE ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, on May 3, 2001, eighteen of our colleagues from both sides of the aisle and I introduced H.R. 1692, a bill to simplify and make more equitable the tax treatment of Settlement Trusts established pursuant to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act.

I am very pleased today to add the names of two of our distinguished colleagues, Representative WES WATKINS, a cosponsor from last Congress and Member of the Ways and Means Committee to which the bill was referred, and Representative MARK SOUDER.

Also, in my statement upon introduction of the bill, there were two items that need correcting. First, Representative FROST, Representative BONO, and Representative STUPAK should have been referred to as "Representative" as were the other cosponsors. And, in the last paragraph of the statement, the word "vetted" was inadvertently transcribed in the RECORD to read "vetoed." With that edit, that paragraph should have read:

A version of this bill was included by the Ways and Means Committee in legislation last Congress that was vetoed and a version of it passed the Senate as well. This current version of the bill we are introducing today has been vetted over the past several years with the tax writing committees of Congress in the House and Senate, the Joint Committee on Taxation and the Department of Treasury. It addresses the key deficiencies in the current law. I urge that it be included in tax-related legislation considered by the House in this session of the 107th Congress and that our colleagues join the co-sponsors of the bill in supporting this meritorious legislation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. THOMAS H. ALLEN

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, during the weeks of May 7, and May 14, 2001, I was unavoidably absent for seven rollcall votes, due to the illness and death of a family member.

Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on rollcall votes 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113, and voted "nay" on rollcall votes 107 and 108.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BILL PASCRELL, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained due to a personal issue and was unable to be present last night for floor votes.

If I had been present, I would have voted in the affirmative on H. Con. Res. 56 and H.R. 1885.

TO HONOR MS. TERRI CRUZ AS THIS YEAR'S RECIPIENT OF THE JEWELL AWARD WHICH HONORS THOSE THAT HAVE GIVEN GENEROUSLY AND SELFLESSLY FOR THE BETTERMENT OF THEIR COMMUNITY

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, I stand before you today to pay tribute to a great woman who has been an influential force in assisting Arizonans in need. The woman of whom I speak is Ms. Terri Cruz, a woman whose accomplishments in life are reflected in the success of her community and its members.

Ms. Cruz has touched the lives of many citizens of Arizona through her active community involvement. In 1985 she was appointed by former Governor Bruce Babbitt to the Nursing Care Institution Administrators Board, while concurrently serving as the National Chairman of the Hispanic Senior Citizen Foundation Board. Other boards Ms. Cruz has served on are the YWCA, Maricopa County and Phoenix Human Resource Commissions and the Mayor's Commission for the Aging. In addition, she served as President of the West Phoenix LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens) Council.

Ms. Cruz's work as a Job Developer for Operation S.E.R. provided training for high school students in clerical skills, general office procedures, and other areas, giving young people who may not otherwise have had the opportunity to gain these valuable skills become productive members of their communities.

Currently Ms. Cruz is the Social Services Counselor for Chicanos Por La Causa, Inc., based in Phoenix. Her primary responsibility is providing social services to clients. She helps solve problems they may be having with Social Security, food stamps, health agencies, and landlord/tenant problems. Many of these problems may have gone unchecked if it were not for caring individuals such as Ms. Cruz. As a tribute, Chicanos Por La Causa named one of their buildings after Ms. Cruz for all her work in helping individuals gain job skills and obtain employment.

Because of her lifelong dedication to helping others, Ms. Cruz recently was honored with a Jewell Award. This is an award that annually recognizes "a woman who has given generously and selflessly for the betterment of our community," in metropolitan Phoenix. Her extensive background in job training and development, her commitment to working within business, industry, social and community organizations and government to help others truly has made her deserving of this award.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and my colleagues join me today in honoring this giving and caring individual, my friend, Ms. Terri Cruz.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. J.C. WATTS, JR.

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I was unable to be here yesterday due to my daughter's grade school graduation in Oklahoma, and missed Recorded Votes No. 126 (Motion to suspend the rules and pass H. Con. Res. 56—National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day), and No. 127 (motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 1885—extending section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act).

Had I been present, I would have voted yea on both of the above motions.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ROBERT W. NEY

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, on May 21, 2001 my flight was extremely delayed by over three hours. As a result I missed rollcall vote No. 126 and No. 127. Please excuse my absence from this vote. If I were present, I would have voted yea in support of H. Con. Res. 56 the Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day Resolution.

THE STORY OF EMILY ROSS

HON. STEVE C. LATOURETTE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. LATOURETTE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a courageous young woman from Westlake, OH, who recently contacted me to share her story and the need for increased funding for Muscular Dystrophy research. Emily, a sophomore at Westlake High School, has Friedreich's Ataxia, one of the many neuromuscular diseases that fall under the umbrella of Muscular Dystrophy. Emily was diagnosed when she was five.

Emily's parents, Charlie and Carolyn Ross, shared with me two articles Emily wrote about her daily struggle with Muscular Dystrophy and how she is overcoming the challenges the disease places before her. The first was written when Emily was in eighth grade, "A Day in the Life of Emily Ross." The second, "Onward and Outward!" was published in the April 2001 edition of The Bay Press. I am submitting the writings of Emily Ross into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD so they will become a part of the official record of the U.S. House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, Emily believes that God chose her to have Muscular Dystrophy because he needed someone to help find a cure. I applaud her courage and grace, and hope that others will be as touched by her story as I was.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF EMILY ROSS

(By Emily Ross)

When I wake up in the morning, I shut off my alarm and begin my day by stopping to think how I am going to walk across my bedroom floor. Attempting to go into the bathroom is scary because my feet are stiff, my balance is terrible and I manage to bang into every piece of furniture in my bedroom! I get downstairs to the kitchen for breakfast by scooting down on my behind step by step. Going into the kitchen for breakfast I have trouble opening the peanut butter jar, pouring a glass of milk or getting any cereal into my mouth because my hands shake. I hope my teeth are clean because I cannot squeeze the toothpaste. Buttons, zippers and socks are a challenge. I'm already tired but off to school I go with my Mom and my dog, Oats.

At school, my Mom helps me to the door because my feet trip easily on the uneven sidewalk. I cannot open the heavy doors by myself. Once inside, I hop on my battery-powered scooter and go to my locker. If I'm not shaking too badly I can get my combination lock opened in three tries! Headed to my first class I face crowded hallways, funny looks from other kids and hurtful comments like "there goes the cripple." Sometimes some of the kids will lie on the floor pretending that I have hit them with my scooter which really hurts my feelings. I'm constantly being asked to move out of the way because they say my scooter takes up too much room. After class I'd like a drink of water but the water fountains are too high. At lunchtime I never buy a school lunch because I cannot reach the food on the shelves or get my scooter through the narrow gate. I tried to walk through the lunch line several times but everyone is pushing and I'm scared I'll lose my balance. I dropped my tray once and believe me, once is enough!

It's now sixth period and I'm starting to get really tired and I have two more class periods to go. The bell rings and school is finally over. It's pretty tricky getting my scooter down the hallway with everyone pushing and shoving their way out to the buses. I finally get to my locker, hope I can get it open in time so I don't miss my bus, grab my coat and panic when I can't zip up my backpack. All my papers fall out all over the floor. I frantically stuff them back inside my backpack, park my scooter, and struggle past 800 other kids waiting to catch their bus rides home. My bus finally arrives and I gratefully sit down for my ride home. An aide helps me up to the side door of my house and helps hold my hands steady so I can aim my key in the lock and she also helps me to turn the doorknob so I can get safely inside. Once inside I let my backpack and coat drop on the floor and I fall onto the couch where I am grateful to God that I have made it another day. Oats, my dog, is the only one I can talk to when I get home from school, she always understands me.

My name is Emily Ross. I am 13 years old and in the eighth grade. I have Friedreich's Ataxia which is one of forty neuromuscular diseases listed under Muscular Dystrophy. It is a hereditary degenerative nerve disease which affects the hands and feet resulting in fatigue and loss of feeling and balance. I was diagnosed when I was 5. I thank God allowed me to have MD because he needed someone to help find a cure. He's chosen me and has led me to a team of doctors that have asked to take a biopsy of muscle and nerve tissue in a "one of a kind" research program which The Muscular Dystrophy Society is sponsoring. They are hoping to determine how they can replace or regenerate the protein that is missing in the cells of all Friedreich's patients. Even if a cure is years away, this study may allow for a medicine that could help me and many others to stop shaking and stop our muscles from weakening anymore.

Not all of my days are stressful because I have the love of my family and many good friends who help me throughout each day. My Mom, Dad and my brother, Hunter, help me squeeze the toothpaste, open the peanut butter jar and button my clothes. My school has allowed me to start my school day one hour later than everyone else and when my friends see me coming up to the door, they hold them open for me. Sometimes it's even a really cute boy which makes my day start off pretty darn good!!! My scooter is sometimes being used by my crazy science teacher but she always comes zooming down the hall just in time for me to get to English. My teachers have been wonderful with kind understanding and a willingness to adapt to my special needs, because of my school's support, I am a straight A student. And, if my feelings are hurt by some kids, I have many more good friends that support me in many different ways. Sometimes I think the entire school knows my locker combination because they are always helping me to open it. They help me carry my books, write my lessons for me, copy homework assignments, take notes off the board, stand in the lunch line to get me a chicken patty sandwich and help me make it through a Friday night canteen in the auditorium in one piece!!! god must have really been looking out for me after school because I have the oldest living bus driver in the world who is late every single day. For me, this is a blessing.

I am proud to say I am going on the 8th grade Washington, D.C. trip this June for four days, I plan on attending M.D. Camp for the second year, I help elementary kids to read at our Library's summer program and if she'll hire me again, I'd like to help Mrs. Peterson at our church this summer in the Family Life Ministry office.

So I guess you could say that I'm quite a lucky girl. God has blessed me with a special challenge that lets me look at the world in a lot of different ways. When I grow up I hope to help make the world an easier place to be for all special people. Thank you for listening to me today and I hope you will see people with special needs through different eyes—God's eyes.

ONWARD AND OUTWARD!

AN UPDATE FROM EMILY ROSS

(By Emily Ross)

Two years ago I shared "A Day in The Life of Emily Ross" with our congregation. I was very touched when recently many of you asked how I am doing now that I am in high school and faced with a new set of challenges. I'm proud to say that I am doing well, accepting the challenge Heaven has asked of me, Muscular Dystrophy is a silent, progressive disease, and Friedreich's Ataxia, the type I have, robs me of the ability to store energy in my cells. I have noticed a loss of touch and hearing, as well as slurred speech over the years, but I've become quite clever at managing my daily activity.

I am now a sophomore at Westlake High School, maintaining a 3.2 grade average, carrying a full class schedule, and even hosting a five-minute broadcast segment called "This Week in Science" through WHBS, our school's television broadcasting system. I am no longer able to walk by myself, so my new leg braces, along with the use of a scooter, help me to my classes. The school purchased a special locker for me that opens with a magnetic key, so I no longer have to worry about combination locks; they even remodeled certain areas to accommodate my scooter. I have full use of the school's elevator and front row seating in all of my classrooms. Some teachers are compassionate and understanding, some strict and unbending, but isn't that the way it is for all students? By evening, my hands are usually too tired to hold a pencil, so someone in my family writes my homework for me as I dictate. My mom is very good at not telling me if the answer I am saying is correct, she just keeps writing no matter what!

Every year, a few students stare and whisper as I drive by in my scooter, but most of the kids have known me since elementary school, and I now fit in almost effortlessly. I have concerns that boys will be judgmental, seeing only the wheelchair and not the girl seated in it. I will admit to having days filled with self-pity at not being able to walk, dance, or run but they soon pass when I realize all the things I am capable of and have already accomplished. I actually like going to school because it's something I can manage independently, and I feel comfortable surrounded by my teachers and friends.

I am a bit more cautious, though, in the world outside my high school. I am trying very hard to leave the security of familiar surroundings and make an attempt to be seen at more school and community functions. It took me a long time to learn that if people do not see you at school events, the mall, or the movies (like a normal teenager), then they assume that you do not wish to be included. Many teenagers have never even been close to a wheelchair, or think that because my body is weak then my mind

One of my personal challenges this past year was saying yes to a movie and dinner with my friends. It meant not being ashamed to be seen in my wheelchair, which may not sound like a big thing to an adult, but it was a scary first step for me. To help me accomplish this, God blessed me with two guardian angels, my friends Stephanie and Britney. Stephanie, my best friend for six years now, proudly pushes me through the mall, across parking lots, or up to jewelry counters. We have an understanding that when she pushes, I hold all our packages, frozen cokes, and purses. Stephanie has always treated me with dignity, great compassion, and honesty, and I thank her for that. Britney is a girl I met at Muscular Dystrophy Camp last summer, and she is fighting her own form of the disease. She is also a sophomore living in Alliance. Having someone to talk to who truly knows how you are feeling because they are going through the same experience is a one-in-a-lifetime gift from Heaven. The two of us together at the mall is a team adventure with both of us counting on the other for balance or for a steady hand when trying on a new lipstick.

God has also given me a wonderful family, who has taught me how lucky I am. I can tell my mom anything, and I do. She always listens when I need to vent my frustrations. She makes the jerking muscles relax the fivers subside, the exhaustion feel comfortable. She makes me laugh. My dad brings breakfast upstairs to me every day before school so I don't waste any energy going downstairs into the kitchen. He has remodeled, rewired, and redesigned our entire house to accommodate me and carries my wheelchair up and down the steps hundreds of times per week. He makes me safe. My brother has gone off to college this past year, and surprisingly, I miss him! He used to look out for me when we were in high school together, and he still calls to see if I need anything. He makes me normal. My dog, Oats, is always glad to see me and cares about me in a dog sort of way. Somehow she can predict when I'm going to fall and has actually sacrificed herself as a sort of cushion between me and the floor. She follows me from room to room, stares up at me adoringly and loves to eat potato chips while I tell her about my day.

So I'm learning with daily "help me get through this" prayers, to look at the world with the following in mind: If I need to create solutions to my unique challenges during my teenage years, then I also need to actually "get out there" to experience them. Considering all the things I hope to accomplish within the next few years, I'm going to need all the "out there" experience I can muster! You see, I plan on driving within the next year, which will mean special testing, special adaptive devices, and, hopefully, a ramped van. My biggest dream is to have my own motorized wheelchair within the next year and enjoy the freedom to wheel around unassisted. The grandest of all will be attending college upon graduation from high school.

With the continued support from everyone around me and God's graceful hands holding me up, I will write to you again a few years from now with news of my adventures on a campus somewhere, running for class president.

TO HONOR THE TORREZ FAMILY AS RECIPIENTS OF THE 2001 ARIZONA HISPANIC CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ENTREPRENEURS OF THE YEAR AWARD.

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise before you to pay tribute to not one person, but an entire family in my district which has established itself as a beacon of accomplishment. The family I speak of is the Torrez Family, owners of the great Azteca Plaza in Phoenix.

The Torrezes have been a benevolent part of our community for over 56 years. Adolfo Torrez and the late Kay Anne Torrez set a standard not only with their commitment to their business and customers, but also with the values and ethics that they installed in their children Raoul, Royna, and Gregory.

Azteca Café was first started by Adolfo and Kay Torrez in 1946. Soon they added a small bar which they named Azteca Bar. These two businesses flourished at the corner of Third and Washington streets. Over the next few years, the Torrez family would expand their property and their businesses to include a flower shop, furniture store, bridal store, formal clothing retailer, and even a dry cleaning company.

The three Torrez children would work side by side with their parents learning from their versatility and passion for hard work. Today Gregory, Raoul, and Royna, continue in their parents footsteps, managing Azteca Plaza and are proving to their community that they are as ethical and driven as their parents, and as compassionate and caring for their community.

The Torrez family recently received the 2001 Arizona Hispanic Chamber of Commerce Entrepreneurs of the Year Award for their work not only as business people, but for their contributions to society.

Mr. Speaker and all my colleagues, please join me today in paying respect to this incredible family, my friends, the Torrezes of Phoenix.

UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF PUPIL RIGHTS

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, a group of students from Kingston, New York have spent a good part of the past couple of years working with a students from St. Petersburg, Russia to draft a document that catalogs a set of universal rights of students. The program from which they are working is administered by the Center for Civic Education, which promotes worldwide community participation.

The students in my district have been communicating with the students in St. Petersburg mostly by Internet, but have had personal exchanges as well, both in Russia and in New York. In comparing their educational stories, the students found that they shared similar experiences and held common opinions about problems that young people were faced with at either ends of the world. They decided it was time to document certain rights that they believed to be applicable to students around the world. The end result is the Universal Declaration of Pupil Rights.

The students will soon be meeting with representatives of the United Nations to present their document. In recognition of the efforts that were put into creating this important document and because I firmly believe that all young people should be afforded certain rights that guarantee an appropriate education, I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to submit the Universal Declaration of Pupil Rights in the Record so that it may receive an appropriate level of attention.

UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF PUPIL RIGHTS PREAMBLE

Recognizing the fact that educational institutions are necessary to prepare pupils to become positive, confident, and efficient members of society,

Taking in due account the importance for the child to receive education in a manner conducive to the child's harmonious development,

Bearing in mind that pupils are to be taught in the spirit of the ideals proclaimed by the United Nations and in particular in the spirit of peace, dignity, tolerance, freedom, equality, and solidarity,

Considering the fact that the opportunity to receive better education will help countries better uphold their obligations under the Charter of the United Nations, thus promoting universal respect for human rights and freedoms,

Recognizing past indifference to and disrespect for pupil rights have resulted in inhumane treatment and aggression towards pupils from persons and nations,

Due to the fact that the school is considered to be a special territory where the child's rights are not applicable, resulting in the regular violation of the rights already established in other United Nations documents,

Understanding that the enumeration in the Declaration shall not be construed to deny or disparage other rights retained by the people,

The UN General Assembly proclaims this Declaration of the pupil's rights as a standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations in order to secure the pupil's rights and freedoms at school and in its territory.

Article 1

For the purposes of the present Declaration, a pupil shall mean every individual, without discrimination of any kind as to race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status, who is attending a sanctioned institution of learning.

Hereinafter referred to as the school, for the purpose of acquiring knowledge.

Article 2

1. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this Declaration without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth, or other status.

2. Every pupil shall have the freedom to exercise his rights provided he does not offend public moral, religious, and other feelings, violate the rights of other people, damage their health, or hamper the learning process.

Article 3

1. Every pupil shall have the right to freedom of thought, opinion, and speech.

2. Every pupil shall have the right to freedom of belief and religion. No pupil can be forced to participate in religious or other ceremonies. Every pupil shall have the right to exercise his religious ceremonies when that does not hamper his studies.

3. Every pupil shall have the right of freedom of self expression, including:

- (a) The right to decide his appearance;
- (b) The right to freedom of creativity.

4. Every pupil shall have the right to freedom from exploitation. Nobody can use either physical or intellectual labour of a pupil without his consent.

Article 4

1. Everyone has the right to education. Education shall be free, at least in the elementary and fundamental stages. Elementary education shall be compulsory.

2. Every pupil shall have the right to receive high-quality and complete education, including:

(a) The right to be taught by certified teachers;

(i) Standards for certification shall be set by the State;

(b) Free access to informational resources, including textbooks granted by the state;

(i) Textbooks must contain accurate and reasonably up-to-date information;

(c) Equal access to the technological resources available in the school that are designated for student use;

(d) The right to study the mother tongue;

(e) Assistance to foreign pupils with learning the new language and help with coursework in this language;

(f) Knowledge of the State's minimum compulsory educational requirements;

3. Every pupil shall have the right to attend the school on all school days and to attend all lessons, unless disciplinary action has to be taken requiring the removal of the pupil from the school day.

Article 5

Every pupil shall have the right to receive education in the conditions that are required for healthy, adequate, and high-quality education. Therefore, the following is to be provided:

1. A healthy atmosphere in the school, which shall include:

(a) High quality and timely medical aid, which is to be:

- (i) Available to every pupil free of charge;
- (ii) Available during all school hours;
- (iii) Provided by a professional, licensed practitioner;

(b) Cleanliness of the educational premises and its territory;

(c) Sufficient natural and artificial lighting;

(d) Maintenance of a low noise level;

(e) Maintenance of a comfortable air temperature;

(f) Healthy and high-quality catering and adequate time intervals for eating;

(i) It should be available at reduced cost for pupils with financial difficulties;

2. A structurally sound building, including:

(a) The absence of harmful substances that are integrated within the building in levels that is detrimental to the pupil's health;

(b) Working System to dispose of waste;

(i) Lavatory facilities are to be designed for private or individual use and with the health of the user in mind

(c) An adequate ventilation system;

If the school cannot observe any of these terms within reason, the school administration is to bring forward for discussion the matter of suspending studies until the problem is resolved

3. A safe environment:

(a) States Parties shall take all appropriate measures, including legislative, administrative, racial and educational measures, to protect children from the illicit use of narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances in the learning environment.

(b) States Parties shall take all appropriate measure, including legislative, administrative, social and educational measures, to protect children from the illicit use of weapons.

(c) States Parties undertake to protect the children from all forms of sexual exploitation and sexual abuse. For these purposes, States Parties shall in particular take all appropriate national, bilateral, and multilateral measures to prevent:

(i) The inducement or coercion of a pupil to engage in any unlawful sexual activities;

(ii) The exploitative use of children in prostitution or other unlawful sexual practices

(iii) The exploitative use of children in pornographic performances and materials

(d) School officials must ensure that no unauthorized solicitation occurs on school grounds.

(e) School officials must take all possible measures to prevent physical harassment or abuse.

(f) School officials must take all possible measures to prevent verbal harassment or abuse.

Article 6

1. Every pupil shall have the right to safety and protection of his property in the territory of the school.

2. Every pupil shall have the right to be present at the examination, search and/or confiscation of his personal property;

(a) The procedure for these actions shall be established by the school and conducted only by authorized persons;

(b) There is to be an accurate list of items, which can be confiscated, including weapons, alcohol, drugs, and other items dangerous to the well being of others. Pupils and their guardians shall be made aware of the specifications of this list.

3. Under any other circumstances it is to be forbidden to examine, search, and/or confiscate the pupil's property in the territory of the school.

Article 7

1. Every pupil shall have the right to be treated with respect for his personality without:

(a) Public or private degradation which might have physical, mental, or other impacts on the pupil;

(b) The discussion of the pupil's personality of his behavior.

2. Every pupil shall have the right to the confidentiality of his private life, including:

(a) The right to the confidentiality of his correspondence;

(b) The right not to give public explanations;

(c) The right to maintain friendly relations with any other pupil;

(i) School faculty may not prohibit pupil's social interactions provided the learning process is not interrupted;

(d) The right to have the assessment and content of his work remain private unless the pupil gives consent.

Article 8

Every pupil shall have the right to rest and leisure, including:

1. The right to reasonable limitation of the number of lessons per day;

(a) Duration of intervals between lessons is not to be reduced by teachers;

2. The right to periodic holidays.

Article 9

Pupils shall have the right to set up and distribute mass media. Mass media shall be independent and shall have the right from freedom of speech and press.

Article 10

1. Every pupil shall have the right to participate in the school government, as well as the right to participate in the development of the school rules and a student bill of rights specific to their school.

2. The pupils shall have the right to establish a school council, and every pupil shall have the right to participate in its activity. The school council shall be formed through the election of representatives from every form.

3. Every pupil and his parents or guardian shall have the right to be informed about all rules which regulate school life, including:

(a) Criteria under which school marks are given;

(b) Attendance policies;

(c) Requirements to the content and execution of subject matter.

4. Pupils shall have the right to the freedom of peaceful meetings and associations. Nobody can be forced to join an organization.

Article 11

1. All pupils shall have the right to learn about world history from an unbiased perspective.

2. Pupil's curriculum is not to include propaganda.

Article 12

All pupils shall have the right to personal, professional, and academic counseling.

(a) Information imparted during counseling session is to remain confidential between pupil and counselor, unless the safety of the pupil or another person is in question;

(b) Counselors shall meet standards of certification set by State.

Article 13

Pregnant pupils, pupils who are parents, or pupils responsible for younger children have the right to continue their education.

(a) State and school shall provide assistance with childcare.

Article 14

1. All pupils shall have the right to select courses of study outside of the mandatory curriculum if such courses and/or activities exist.

2. Supplementary courses recommended by the teacher shall not become mandatory, shall not affect final grades, and shall be free.

(a) All compulsory material shall be taught during compulsory classes.

Article 15

1. Every pupil shall have the right to be treated without discrimination by the teachers, school administration, pupils and their parents, and school employees, irrespective of the pupil's or his family member's race, sex, age, religion, political or other opinion, property status, state of health, or other circumstances.

2. Every pupil with physical and/or mental disabilities shall have the right to attend the same school as pupils who do not share their disabilities. The school must provide for their needs accordingly.

3. Every pupil shall have the right to equal, unprejudiced, and fair treatment when marks are given, and benefits and duties distributed.

Article 16

All pupils shall have the right to a just disciplinary procedure.

1. All pupils shall have the right to due process;

2. Every student has the right to an appeals process.

Article 17

Every pupil shall have the right to be informed of his rights, including but not limited to those stated in such documents as the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the European Convention on the Rights of the Child, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, the constitution of his own country, and this Declaration of the Pupil's Rights.

Article 18

Nothing in the present Declaration shall affect any provisions which are more conducive to the realization of the rights of the pupil and which may be contained in:

1. The law of a State party;

2. International law in force for that State.

THE U.S. INTERNATIONAL POLICY ON SUSTAINABLE USE

HON. RICHARD W. POMBO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. POMBO. Mr. Speaker, through professional and scientific management, this nation currently enjoys stable and healthy wildlife and marine resource populations. Sadly, there were excessive harvests of wildlife in the 17th and 18th centuries, but that circumstance is history never to be repeated. Today, through appropriate laws and reasoned regulations, the future of these resources is assured for generations to come.

Given this background of successful management and wise use of these renewable resources, I am dismayed when government representatives of this nation participate in international conventions, treaties and bilateral and multi-lateral conservation agreements concerning the sustainable use of wildlife and marine resources, a different agenda seems to be in place; specifically, that agenda rejects science and favors anti consumptive use of those renewable resources.

For example, policy positions taken by the United States Delegations at the Conference of the Parties of the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES) and the Annual Meetings of the International Whaling Commission (IWC) of the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling (ICRW) reflect a political agenda rather than a science-based policy. Through the past leadership of the United States at CITES and IWC, several nations have followed this flawed and imprudent policy to the detriment of various wildlife and marine species.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to note President Bush's recent remarks to the Environmental Youth Award winners regarding this Administrations foundation for environmental policy. He affirmed that it will be "based on sound science, not some environmental fad of what may sound good—that we're going to rely on the best evidence before we decide [on policy]." Currently, the United States is developing its position for the upcoming 53rd Annual Meeting of the IWC.

Due to the significance of the event, I recently sent a letter to the Secretary of Interior, the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Commerce concerning the background of United States policy at the IWC meetings. Mr. Speaker, at this time I hereby submit to the RECORD for my colleagues consideration the letters (referenced above) to the Bush administration.

I believe the time has come for the United States to truly reflect an international commitment to the sustainable use of renewable wildlife and marine resources based on science. As I stated in my letters, this conservation policy should be followed whether the subject species are elephants, turtles, whales, or trees. Such leadership by the United States is the responsible and ethical policy that must be pursued for the benefit of renewable wildlife, marine resources and humankind itself.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Washington, DC, May 3, 2001.

Hon. GALE NORTON,

Secretary, U.S. Department of Interior,

Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY NORTON: I am writing to express my strong support for the need for science to be the fundamental guide in United States participation in international conservation commitments as legally recognized under the Uruguay Round Agreements of the General Agreements on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Unfortunately, the United States policy under the former-Clinton administration acted contrary to this legal concept under the tenets of the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling (ICRW). Specifically, it did so by continued opposition and obstructionist positions on the resumption of limited and managed whaling by island and coastal nations.

Although it is true that there was over exploitation of certain whale stocks in the 18th and 19th centuries for commercial oil products, this is not the case today. In fact, no whale stocks were ever threatened by whale harvests for human food consumption. The Scientific Committee of the governing body of the ICRW and the International Whaling Commission (IWC) has found that limited harvests would have no adverse impact on population stocks.

However, in the past, the United States and other nations have consistently opposed the resumptions of limited whaling on what amounts to purely a political agenda. For instance, the United States supported the adoption of the Southern Ocean Sanctuary for whales without any scientific basis for such a position. Further, the United States is supporting the adoption of a Pacific Ocean Sanctuary where there is no scientific basis for the establishment of such a sanctuary. Even after the Bush administration took office, the Department of State has opposed legal trade in whale products between Norway and Japan. I would sincerely urge the Bush administration to carefully review the United States policy in terms of science and law.

I must say, I was extremely pleased to note President Bush's recent remarks to the Environmental Youth Award winners about environmental policy. As you know, the President stated that decisions regarding environmental matters in his Administration would be, and I quote, "based upon sound science, not some environmental fad or what may sound good—that we're going to rely on the best evidence before we decide [on policy]."

After representing the Congress at two Conferences of the Parties (COP) to Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), as well as having chaired several hearings in the Congress about the sustainable use or renewable resources on the international level, I know the United States is certainly a nation that supports the consumptive use of renewable wildlife and marine resources under scientific management.

As such, I respectfully request that any future policy regarding various species—whether the subject species are elephants, whales, turtles, or trees—be based on sound science and the legal ramifications of the Uruguay Round Agreements of GATT.

I appreciate your attention to this request, and I look forward to your response. Please do not hesitate to contact me should you have questions or comments.

Sincerely,

RICHARD W. POMBO,
Member of Congress.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 3, 2001.

Hon. COLIN POWELL,
Secretary, U.S. Department of State,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY POWELL: I am writing to express my strong support for the need for science to be the fundamental guide in United States participation in international conservation commitments as legally recognized under the Uruguay Round Agreements of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Unfortunately, the United States policy under the former-Clinton administration acted contrary to this legal concept under the tenets of the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling (ICRW). Specifically, it did so by continued opposition and obstructionist positions on the resumption of limited and managed whaling by island and coastal nations.

Although it is true that there was over exploitation of certain whale stocks in the 18th and 19th centuries for commercial oil products, this is not the case today. In fact, no whale stocks were ever threatened by whale harvests for human food consumption. The Scientific Committee of the governing body of the ICRW and the International Whaling Commission (IWC) has found that limited harvests would have no adverse impact on population stocks.

However, in the past, the United States and other nations have consistently opposed the resumption of limited whaling on what amounts to purely a political agenda. For instance, the United States supported the adoption of the Southern Ocean Sanctuary for whales without any scientific basis for such a position. Further, the United States is supporting the adoption of a Pacific Ocean Sanctuary where there is no scientific basis for the establishment of such a sanctuary. Even after the Bush administration took office, the Department of State has oppose legal trade in whale products between Norway and Japan. I would sincerely urge the Bush administration to carefully review the United States policy in terms of science and law.

I must say, I was extremely pleased to note President Bush's recent remarks to the Environmental Youth Award winners about environmental policy. As you know, the President stated that decisions regarding environmental matters in his Administration would be, and I quote, "based upon sound science, not some environmental fad or what may sound good—that we're going to rely on the best evidence before we decide [on policy]."

After representing the Congress at two Conferences of the Parties (COP) to Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES), as well as having chaired several hearings in the Congress about the sustainable use or renewable resources on the international level, I know the United States is certainly a nation that supports the consumptive use of renewable wildlife and marine resources under scientific management.

As such, I respectfully request that any future policy regarding various species—whether the subject species are elephants, whales, turtles, or trees—be based on sound science and the legal ramifications of the Uruguay Round Agreements of GATT.

I appreciate your attention to this request, and I look forward to your response. Please do not hesitate to contact me should you have questions or comments.

Sincerely,

RICHARD W. POMBO,
Member of Congress.

ERADICATION OF TUBERCULOSIS ON A WORLD-WIDE BASIS

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, as you know, infectious diseases are needlessly killing millions of people every year and cost the global community billions in healthcare costs and lost revenue. Diseases such as Tuberculosis (TB) are on the rise around the world, and due to their infectious properties, are threatening the health and welfare of Americans. TB cannot be stopped at our national borders and the only way to eliminate TB here at home is to control it abroad. In fact, according to the National Intelligence Council, new and re-emerging infectious diseases will pose a rising global health threat and will complicate U.S. and global security over the next twenty years. We must take action to address these dangers now.

I feel strongly that Congress should make a significant investment in low-cost, high-impact programs like TB control. Mr. Speaker for just $20 to $100 invested in a quality TB program, a life can be saved. This is one of the most cost-effective health interventions available today. In FY2001, Congress provided $60 million for international TB control, a solid step towards addressing this killer. More must be done this year. Fifteen million people in the U.S. are infected with the TB bacteria, and nearly two million people perish world-wide each year. In addition, eight million people are afflicted with this disease annually and every second of every day, someone in the world is infected with the disease.

TB is the biggest killer of people with AIDS, and TB rates have skyrocketed in sub-Saharan Africa due to the AIDS/TB co-epidemics. Direct Observed Therapy treatment or "Dots" is one of the most cost-effective ways to prolong and improve the lives of people with HIV. As we increase resources for HIV and AIDS, it makes sense to increase funding for TB control as well.

If we do not act promptly, new deadly drug-resistant strains of TB and rising HIV rates will make TB very difficult or impossible to control. I have asked that we provide $200 million in the FY2002 foreign aid budget for the international TB control program.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of Congress from an international border city, I know the importance of combating TB at our borders. Now is the time to combat tuberculosis and eradicate this horrible disease before it begins more impacting on our population.

HONORING METRO SCHOOLS DIRECTOR, DR. BILL M. WISE, ON THE OCCASION OF HIS RETIREMENT FROM THE METROPOLITAN NASHVILLE-DAVIDSON COUNTY PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Metro Schools Director, Dr. Bill M. Wise, on the occasion of his retirement from the Metropolitan/Davidson County/Nashville, Tennessee school system after 31 years of outstanding service to students, teachers, and personnel.

Dr. Wise is to be commended for the impact he has made on the local, state, and national levels through his tireless work to achieve unity during legal battles over court-ordered desegregation busing. His leadership proved pivotal in the successful resolution of this important matter. Leaders from across the Nation have sought his advice and expertise in this area and he has offered consultations and hope in times of crisis to schools in Texas, South Carolina, Mississippi, Georgia, Kentucky, North Carolina, and Alabama. Wise is also recognized nationally for his successful management skills and expertise in school facilities management.

His philosophy has always focused on what is best for students and student achievement including improving physical conditions in school facilities and fostering morale. Because of his strong leadership skills combined with character and courage, Wise's efforts have proven extremely fruitful.

A native Tennessean, Bill Wise was educated at the University of North Alabama in Florence, where he received a Bachelor of Science in 1963, and a Master's Degree in 1965. He continued his education at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, earning a Doctorate of Education in 1970.

Wise began his career as an Alabama school teacher in 1963 working for the Florence City School system and later moving to the university level as an instructor and coach at the University of North Alabama until 1968.

After a two-year stint as a Ford Foundation Fellow at the University of Tennessee, Wise was named Assistant Superintendent for the Metropolitan Nashville-Davidson County Public School System in 1970. He was promoted to Deputy Superintendent, where he served from 1994-1997. He then became Interim Director of Schools and nine months later was named Director of Schools.

As Director of Schools, Wise has been responsible for an operating budget upwards of $300 million and a capital budget of nearly $100 million, while implementing and overseeing The Strategic Plan for the Metropolitan Nashville Public School District. The school district includes more than one hundred twenty-five public schools with thousands of students from all walks of life.

Wise has been honored numerous times by his peers. Recent awards include: the Council of the Great City Schools First Annual Bill Wise Award in 2000; the National Football Foundation and College Hall of Fame, Middle Tennessee Chapter, Distinguished American Award in 2001; and the Tennessee School Plant Management Association's Superintendent of the Year for 2001.

Additionally, he has been active in numerous professional organizations including: the American Association of School Administrators; the Tennessee Association for Supervision and Administration; the Council of the Great City Schools, Business Officials Group; the Southeastern Association of School Business Officials; Phi Delta Kappa; Iota Lambda Sigma; and Council of Educational Facility Planners.

His civic contributions include involvement on the Board of Directors for the following organizations: Green Hills YMCA; Nashville Chapter of the American Red Cross; National Kidney Foundation of Middle Tennessee (Past President); Nashville Institute for the Arts; Cumberland Science Museum; Boy Scouts of America's Middle Tennessee Council; Junior Achievement of Middle Tennessee, Inc.; and Metropolitan Nashville Public Education Foundation.

With the obvious challenges and changes that Wise has faced during his career in public education, I am pleased to honor him for facing adversity with courage and using the tools available in an imperfect system to craft a successful educational program for students in our community. I respect his philosophy of focusing on learning, support systems and appropriate settings for equity and excellence for all students and promoting change as positive and necessary for continual personal improvement.

In closing, Dr. Wise is to be commended for building a solid foundation for those who will follow in his footsteps and strive to meet the goal of improving educational opportunities for all Tennesseans. I have no doubt that his dedication and service to our community, our state, and our nation, will be remembered for many years to come.

SECTION 245(i) EXTENSION ACT OF 2001

HON. ELTON GALLEGLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. GALLEGLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I voted in favor of H.R. 1885, a bill sponsored by Immigration and Claims Subcommittee Chairman GEORGE GEKAS, which will extend by four months the time illegal immigrants may apply for legal residence while remaining in the United States. The measure requires illegal immigrants who utilize Section 245(i) of the immigration law to have been in the United States as of December 21, 2000. In addition, H.R. 1885 requires that the family relationship or employment existed by April 30, 2001. These two important provisions contained in H.R. 1885 will ensure that the extension of Section 245(i) does not provide future incentives for illegal immigration or punish legal immigrants waiting in line for their applications to be processed.

I supported this short-term extension of Section 245(i) because it will assist those immigrants who were eligible to apply for a green card as of April 30, but were unable to meet the deadline due to administrative problems, such as the INS not issuing regulations on Section 245(i) until March of this year. At the same time, H.R. 1885 will not reward those who enter illegally with the hope of becoming legal without first returning to their native country. Most importantly, it will send the message that legal immigrants, who waited in line and obeyed our immigration laws, should get first priority in the processing of immigration applications.

Although I supported this four-month extension of Section 245(i) for the reasons discussed above, I will not support any extension beyond this time period. This is not the first time that this ill-conceived provision has been extended. Section 245(i) was first added to the immigration law in 1994. Since that time, it has been extended on numerous occasions, including most recently in December of last year. This has provided persons who wanted to apply for permanent residency status more than enough time to submit their application to INS.

A longer extension than the period of time contained in H.R. 1885 will further encourage illegal immigration and punish legal immigrants waiting for their application to be processed. Also, because U.S. State Department consular officers are better suited than INS employees to determine if the illegal immigrant has a criminal background, a longer extension of Section 245(i) will undermine the important law enforcement goal of preventing criminal aliens from remaining in our country.

CONGRATULATING JOSE DE
ESCANDON ELEMENTARY SCHOOL ON BEING NAMED A "BLUE RIBBON SCHOOL"

HON. RUBÉN HINOJOSA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the Jose De Escandon Elementary School in the La Joya Independent School District in my South Texas district on being named a "Blue Ribbon School."

Quality education is the passport to a successful future and Escandon Elementary has been relentless in its pursuit of educational excellence. This award truly symbolizes the many successful futures this school has forged for its students.

La Joya is not a wealthy school district. The majority of the students are Hispanic and many live below the poverty level. It is in an isolated, rural community along the Texas-Mexico border. Despite these seeming disadvantages, under the leadership of Superintendent Dr. Robert Zamora and principal Benita Salazar, Escandon has demonstrated what can be achieved when parents, teachers, school officials and the community join together to utilize every resource to its fullest potential. In addition to the Blue Ribbon Award, Escandon has been recognized by the State of Texas as an Exemplary Elementary School, having over 90 percent of its students pass the 3rd grade Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test.

Blue Ribbon Awards are exclusive in nature and are presented to only 264 elementary schools across the country including both public and private institutions. Schools receiving the award must demonstrate strong leadership; a clear vision and sense of mission; high-quality teaching; challenging up-to-date curriculum; policies and practices that ensure a safe environment conducive to learning; solid evidence of family involvement; evidence that the school is helping ALL students achieve high standards; and a commitment to share best practices with other schools.

On Monday, I will be visiting Escandon Elementary to celebrate its great achievement. The citizens of La Joya are fiercely proud of their town and their school. This award is not only a reflection of the exemplary work that the children have done, but also a reflection of the values and dedication of the whole community. I would encourage every locality to follow La Joya's example. When the entire community works together and commits to helping every child succeed, it will happen and all of our children will receive the quality education they deserve.

CONCERNING PARTICIPATION OF TAIWAN IN WORLD HEALTH OR- GANIZATION

SPEECH OF

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 15, 2001

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 428, a bill which calls for Taiwan's participation in the World Health Organization (WHO). I would also like to commend the author of the legislation, my friend and colleague from Ohio, Mr. SHERROD BROWN, for his leadership on this issue. I am proud to join as a co-sponsor of this important bipartisan legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the World Health Organization is the most important international health organization in the world. In its charter, the WHO sets forth the crucial objective of attaining the highest possible level of health for all people, yet today the 23 million citizens of Taiwan are denied appropriate and meaningful participation in the international health forums and programs conducted by the WHO. Currently, there are over 190 participants in the WHO; Taiwan is not one of them. What this means is that Taiwan is not permitted to receive WHO benefits.

Access to the WHO ensures that the highest standards of health information and services are provided, facilitating the eradication of disease and improvement of public health on a world-wide basis. The work of the WHO is particularly crucial today given the tremendous volume of international travel, which has heightened the transmission of communicable diseases between borders. Lack of access to WHO protections has caused people of Taiwan to suffer needlessly.

Mr. Speaker, there is no good reason why Taiwan should be denied observer status with the World Health Organization. As a strong democracy and one of the world's most robust economies, Taiwan should participate in the health services and medical protections offered by the WHO. In addition, the WHO stands to benefit significantly from the financial and technological contributions that Taiwan has to offer.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation.

COMMENDING JUDY BELL—FIRST LADY OF GOLF

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to direct the attention of my Colleagues to Hasbrouck Heights, New Jersey where this evening one of golf's legends will be honored. The Professional Golf Association (PGA) will honor Judy Bell as recipient of this year's "First Lady of Golf Award". The PGA First Lady of Golf Award, inaugurated in 1998, is presented to a woman who has made significant contributions to the promotion of the game of golf.

With interest and participation in golf growing to new heights every year, it is appropriate that the stewards of the game honor those who laid a strong foundation for today's success.

Judy Bell's golf career—which spans the 50's, 60's, 70's 80's, 90's and has now reached into the new millennium—has been marked by one outstanding achievement after another. She has made significant contributions as a champion player, Rules official and an industry leader. Her lifetime record of service to the golf industry includes becoming the first woman to be elected president of the United States Golf Association. Bell was elected the USGA's 54th president from 1996–97. Today, the 64-year-old Bell is in her 34th year of service to the USGA, and is consulting director of the USGA Foundation.

Bell is a 1961 graduate of Wichita State University, where she was a two-time NCAA runner-up during a prolific amateur career. She won three Kansas State Amateur championships, and competed at age 14 in the 1950 U.S. Women's Open, which would be the first of 38 USGA championship appearances. She was a two-time Curtis Cup Team member (1960, '62) and a two-time Curtis Cup Team Captain (1986, '88). She is the only individual to captain both a men's and women's U.S. World Amateur Team, leading the women in Stockholm, Sweden in 1988, and the men in Bad Saarow, Germany in 2000. In addition, Judy Bell has been a USGA Rules official since the 1970s and has worked both the U.S. Open and U.S. Women's Open.

Judy Bell has been a source of inspiration to all she meets. By her work, by her words and by her example, she has brought a countless men, women and youngsters into the game. I urge my Colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Judy Bell—this year's recipient of the PGA's "First Lady of Golf" award.

A TRIBUTE TO MICHAEL V. FINLEY, YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK SUPERINTENDENT

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to pay tribute to the 30-year-public service career of Michael V. Finley, the superintendent of Yellowstone National Park. After providing leadership in parks ranging from Yosemite in California to the Everglades in Florida. Superintendent Finley will retire in June for a new career in private industry.

Starting with his first ranger position at Big Bend National Park, Michael Finley has worked a rich and varied career helping keep America's National Park system beautiful and educational for our citizens and visitors from around the world. He actually began his life in our parks in 1965 as a seasonal fire control aide, working throughout the West for the next six years.

Over the years, Michael Finley has developed an expertise in inter-governmental relations, working with state and local governments and on Native American issues. He has directed legislative efforts, research projects, law enforcement operations, museums and cultural facilities, engineering and maintenance programs and oversight of mining and mineral uses in the parks. He has worked extensively with the media and public interest groups, and is an international expert on conservation efforts.

His awards have included the National Park Service Superior Performance Award, the Department of Interior's Meritorious Service Award, and national recognition for public service by conservation groups.

Californians have been among those who have most benefited from Superintendent Finley's expertise. He was a ranger in Pinnacles National Monument and Redwood National Park, as well as ranger and superintendent of Yosemite from 1989–1994. He also served as a federal liaison and trainer in the development of seven state parks in the Santa Cruz Mountains of California. He was also superintendent of Assateague Island National Seashore in Maryland and as associate regional director for 13 parks in the Alaska region. Before taking over as Yellowstone superintendent in 1994, he was acting associate director of operations for the park service.

In his role as chief of the crown jewel of American parks, Superintendent Finley has successfully managed a staff of 800 and a budget of $25 million. He helped create the Yellowstone Park Foundation to solicit private support for the world's first national park, and set Yellowstone on a course that will preserve its natural heritage, while providing the best possible experience for the 3 million people who visit each year.

Mr. Speaker, Michael Finley is leaving the park service to become president of the Turner Foundation in Atlanta, Georgia, one of the most dynamic philanthropic organizations in the nation. Please join me in thanking him for his years of service to our nation's parks, and wishing him and his wife, Lillie, continued success in their new endeavors.

INTRODUCING LEGISLATION CONGRATULATING THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA ON ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MARTIN OLAV SABO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. SABO. Mr. Speaker, today, along with my colleagues from Minnesota, I am introducing legislation congratulating the University of Minnesota and its faculty, staff, students, alumni, and friends on the occasion of its 150th anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, the University of Minnesota is a land grant institution established in 1851, seven years before the state of Minnesota was accepted into the Union. Since its creation, the University of Minnesota has become one of the most comprehensive and prestigious universities in the United States, and is a major research institution spanning four campuses and outreach centers statewide.

During its first 150 years, the University of Minnesota has awarded more than 537,575 degrees, including more than 24,728 doctoral degrees. Among the University of Minnesota's accomplished faculty and alumni are 13 Nobel Prize winners.

The University of Minnesota's faculty, staff, and students have made significant contributions to our nation, and our world, which include the establishment of the world's leading kidney transplant center, as well as the invention of the flight recorder (commonly known as the "black box"), retractable seat belt, and the heart-lung machine used in the world's first open-heart surgery.

The University of Minnesota has also made contributions in other areas such as agriculture, manufacturing, and physical sciences, including the creation of more than 80 new crop varieties, the development of the taconite process, and the isolation of uranium-235.

The University of Minnesota reaches across the state with its Extension Service, which has contact with 700,000 Minnesotans each year. With program areas ranging from crop management to effective parenting, all Minnesotans benefit from the University of Minnesota Extension Service.

Mr. Speaker, the University of Minnesota is an esteemed institution of higher learning, and as we mark its 150th Anniversary, I invite my colleagues to join me, and my fellow Minnesota colleagues, in honoring this remarkable university and its contributions to us all.

TRIBUTE TO BECKY TRINKLEIN

HON. JAMES A. BARCIA

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. BARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Becky Trinklein as she prepares to celebrate twenty-five years of dutiful service as an educator, the past twenty years of which she spent at Immanuel Lutheran School in Frankenmuth, Michigan. Becky's faithfulness and dedication in sharing the good news of God's love in Christ with her students and others has made her an invaluable part of Lutheran education in her community.

A native of Frankenmuth, Becky is the only child of Victor and Marguerite Trinklein. The love and support of her family has carried her through every facet of her career and molded her into the unique, caring woman that she is today.

Becky holds a bachelor's degree in education with a special concentration in art education and a master's degree in education with a focus on early childhood education from Concordia Teacher's College. Her strong faith and adherence to God's will led her from St. John Lutheran School of Edgerton, Wisconsin, where she taught kindergarten and preschool for five years, to a similar job at Immanuel Lutheran School in the fall of 1981.

While Becky's teaching ministry has been distinguished, her noteworthiness extends far beyond the classroom walls. She has held leadership positions in the Michigan District Early Childhood Educators Conference, the North and East Lutheran Schools Early Childhood Educators Conference, and the Bay-Midland Lutheran Teachers Conference. The Michigan Region Five Odyssey of the Mind Board and the Bay Arenac Skill Center Advisory Committee have also benefited from her time and attention to service. Immanuel Lutheran has flourished from the commitment of this exceptional teacher and her presence has graced many committees and projects.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to praise Becky for her continued adherence to excellence in education. The early school years put an indelible stamp on children and Becky Trinklein's strong influence has helped instill in them a sense of self-worth and pride that will carry them far in achieving success in life. I ask my colleagues to join me in expressing gratitude to Ms. Trinklein for her dedicated service to the children and in wishing her continued success.

WELCOME TO NEWARK, OTUMFUO OSEI TUTU II, SIXTEENTH ASANTEHENE

HON. DONALD M. PAYNE

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, May 22, my home city of Newark, New Jersey will have the privilege of hosting Otumfuo Osei Tutu II, sixteenth Asantehene, direct successor to Opemsuo Osei Tutu I from Ghana. I would like to ask my colleagues here in the United States House of Representatives to join me in welcoming the leader of Ghana to New Jersey. Our nation has a special relationship with Ghana, which in 1957 became the first country in colonial Africa to achieve independence. Kwame Nkrumah, the first president of the Republic of Ghana, earned a college degree from Lincoln University in Pennsylvania in 1939, creating a close bond between the people of Ghana and African Americans. When I had the great honor of accompanying President Clinton on his historic trip to Africa, we received a warm and enthusiastic welcome when over 500,000 Ghanaians came out to greet us.

Otumfuo Osei Tutu II has won admiration for the unique leadership he has provided the people of Asante and Ghana in general since he assumed the high office of Asantehene and the heavy responsibilities that go with the position. This dynamic, personable king has succeeded in refocusing the attention of the Asante nation and Ghana, on the development of the country's most valuable resource—its people. It is for this reason that his vision encompasses education, health and industry. A healthy people equipped with the requisite technical and scientific skill and knowledge constitute an invaluable asset to any community, any nation that aspires to achieve maximum industrialization.

Born on the 6th of May 1950 and named Barima Kwaku Duah, Otumfuo Osei Tutu II is the youngest of the five children of Nana Afua Kobi Scrwaa Ampem II, Asantchemaa (Queen Mother of Asante). Under his Majesty's leadership and direction numerous and very drastic efforts have been made to assess and redefine traditional roles, integrating some into global standards based in practicality, sustainability and functionality. What has emerged is a much better administrative design of six strategically functional and articulate units of the system.

As part of mobilization efforts to relax some aspects of Asante culture to embrace development and progress, Otumfuo has embarked on a drastic overhaul of the Kingdom and its logistics to enable the Manhyia Palace to better equip and prepare itself and its traditional leaders to accommodate the impeding challenges of development. By liberalizing various aspects of the Kingdom, Otumfuo has enhanced governance and emphasized development.

HONORING CAPTAIN WILLIAM W.
COPPERNOL

HON. PAUL RYAN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues an accomplishment by a young man serving in the United States Army. Captain William W. Coppernol, who is from Burlington, Wisconsin, has received the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award. This award is given to those Army officers who embody the leadership ideals of General MacArthur. After my meeting with him this afternoon, I can certainly see why he was chosen for this prestigious award.

Captain Coppernol is an excellent example of the American military servicemember. He grew up in a city not far from me in southern Wisconsin. His family is still there, with his father working in Milwaukee for the FAA and his mother working at Burlington Catholic Central High School. Captain Coppernol is now stationed in Minnesota, which he is happy about because his parents can see their grandson, William, more often.

While Captain Coppernol is a family man, he is also an Army man. He is a bright man who plans to make a career out of the Army, and our country should be thankful for it. This "Army of One" is a true asset to the United States of America. I congratulate Captain Coppernol on receiving the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

VETERINARY HEALTH ENHANCEMENT ACT FOR UNDER-SERVED AREAS

HON. CHARLES W. "CHIP" PICKERING

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, many rural and inner city areas of the United States lack proper veterinary care within their communities. As a result, the health of both animals and humans in these areas is at risk. In many cases, veterinarians, upon graduating from a school of veterinary medicine, opt to practice in prosperous urban settings which often provide opportunities for higher standings of living. The result is a lack of animal health care professionals in hundreds of communities and rural regions.

Rural areas of the United States are going through a unique transformation. Thousands of small-town, agrarian communities are literally vanishing. These agricultural communities are dependent upon livestock veterinarians to help ensure the well-being of their rural economies. Unfortunately, lower earning potential, long hours, unfavorable weather conditions, danger, and fewer farmers are making livestock veterinarians remarkably scarce in these agrarian communities.

In the same respect, inner-city areas have also noticed a shortage of animal health care professionals within their communities. These areas are potential hotbeds for dangerous diseases carried by rodents and stray animals. These diseases can be easily transmitted to residents, particularly more highly-susceptible children. Veterinarians may often be the key in preventing the spread of such diseases in highly-populated, inner-city areas.

In response to the growing number of under-served areas that are lacking animal health care professionals, I am introducing the "Veterinary Health Enhancement Act for Under-served Areas" to meet the health care needs of these communities. Under this proposal, veterinary students will be provided scholarships and tuition debt relief if they choose to choose to practice in under-served areas for an agreed upon period of time. The result of having veterinarians provide their services to these communities will improve animal health, will ensure that the risk of disease transfer from animals to humans is minimal, and will improve economic opportunities for agriculture producers who depend on livestock veterinarians.

This is non-controversial legislation that will provide benefits to the entire country. I urge my colleagues to show their commitment to communities throughout their respective districts which lack proper veterinary care by lending their support for the "Veterinary Health Enhancement Act for Under-Served Areas".

HONORING MRS. EDDIE LEE EDWARDS MCPHERSON ON HER BIRTHDAY

HON. JACK KINGSTON

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor and pleasure to rise today on behalf of a very special person who resides in my district. On Saturday, May 26th, Mrs. Eddie Lee Edwards McPherson will be celebrating her 80th birthday along with her friends and family. I would like to join with the many in congratulating her upon this significant milestone.

Eddie Lee was born to the late Samuel P. M. Rhodes and the late Florence Hagins Rhodes in 1921 in Bulloch County, GA; and was united in marriage to the late Joseph Sterling Edwards, Sr. with whom she was blessed with her six children, four daughters and two sons. She is currently married to Leroy McPherson who graced her with four stepchildren, three daughters and one son. Throughout her life, though, the Lord bestowed upon her the love of even more sons and daughters-in-law, numerous grandchildren and great-grandchildren, as well as other embraced children.

Mrs. McPherson graduated from Savannah State College with a degree in Elementary Education. Throughout her career, Eddie Lee was given the opportunity to reach many young children at Perry Elementary, Viola Burroughs Elementary, C.B. Greer Elementary and Ballard Elementary. She has also served faithfully in the community and at local churches.

This remarkable lady is an encourager, a disciplinarian, a dear friend to many and an indomitable matriarch. Her faith, courage and kindness are an inspiration to all who have been touched by her. God blessed us when he gave us Mrs. Eddie Lee Edwards McPherson. May God bless her on her 80th birthday.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. PATRICK J. TIBERI

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. TIBERI. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 21, 2001, my plane was delayed in arriving due to bad weather. As a result, I was not present for Roll Call Vote #126, Expressing the sense of the Congress regarding National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day and Roll Call Vote #127, the 245(i) Extension Act of 2001.

Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on Roll Call Vote #126 and #127.

“A TRIBUTE TO COMMANDER
JAMES F. STADER”

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an outstanding Marine Corps Officer, Major Stewart H. Holmes, who served with distinction and dedication for two and a half years for the Secretary of the Navy, Commandant of the Marine Corps and under the Assistant Secretary of the Navy (FM&C) as the Marine Corps Appropriations Liaison Officer in the Appropriations Matters Office. It is a privilege for me to recognize his many outstanding achievements and commend him for the superb service he has provided to the United States Marine Corps, the Department of the Navy, the Congress, and our nation.

During his tenure in the Appropriations Matters Office, which began in December of 1998, Major Holmes has provided members of the House Appropriations Committee, Subcommittee on Defense as well as our professional and associate staffs with timely and accurate support regarding Marine Corps plans, programs and budget decisions. His valuable contributions have enabled the Defense Subcommittee and the Marine Corps to strengthen its close working relationship and to ensure the most modern, well-trained and well-equipped marine forces attainable for our nation's defense.

Mr. Speaker, Stewart Holmes and his wife Deborah have made many sacrifices during his marine career, and his distinguished service has exemplified the Marine motto “Semper Fidelis.” As they depart the Appropriations Matters Office to embark on yet another great Marine adventure, I call upon colleagues to wish them both every success.

HONORING RYAN PATTERSON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this moment to honor one of the bright young minds of western Colorado. Central High School junior Ryan Patterson, amazed people for the second year in a row at a science fair for creating a compact device capable of digitally translating sign language onto a small electronic readout.

Ryan is no stranger at science fairs. He was the winner of last years science fair and went on to win first place and nearly $10,000 at the Intel International Science and Engineering Fair in Detroit. In total, Ryan has won numerous science awards, $192,000 in scholarships, $15,750 in cash, two lap-tops, and two trips to Stockholm, Sweden, for the Nobel Prize ceremonies. Seventeen year-old Ryan recently won the top award in the International Science Fair in San Jose, California.

The device that brought young Ryan all this fame is a glove that translates American Sign Language into digital information that can be read on a portable screen. The device will assist those with speaking disabilities communicate anywhere without a translator. Ryan came up with this while in a Burger King. “I was in Burger King when I saw some people ordering their food in sign language with someone else translating for them,” “So I thought something like this would help them become more independent by being able to communicate easier.”

“For me, it's been an incredible journey,” said John McConnell, a retired physicist. “I'm 70 years old and he's one of the greatest joys of my life.” Tests for the device were promising enough that Ryan plans on seeking a patent and he hopes to manufacture it.

Mr. Speaker, Ryan has a bright future ahead of him, and I would like to congratulate him on behalf of Congress and wish him the best of luck in his future endeavors. Ryan's family, classmates, and Western Colorado can be proud of Ryan for his accomplishments.

RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL MARITIME DAY 2001

HON. STEPHEN HORN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize today, May 22, 2001, as National Maritime Day. In 1933 the 73rd Congress passed Senate Joint Resolution 7 designating May 22nd as National Maritime Day. Since that time every President starting with Franklin Roosevelt has issued an annual proclamation declaring May 22nd as National Maritime Day. I am pleased that President Bush has continued that proud tradition again this year.

With yesterday's passage of House Concurrent Resolution 109, this body took a positive step toward recognizing the significant contributions of the United States Merchant Marine to our maritime defense and national security. This resolution acknowledges the critical role played by vessels of the U.S. Merchant Marine fleet in transporting equipment, supplies, and personnel to support the nation's defense and recognizing the historical significance of May 22nd as National Maritime Day. It encourages the American people and appropriate government agencies to recognize the services and sacrifices of the U.S. Merchant Marine through ceremonies. And it requests that all U.S. ships prominently display the American flag on this day. As a co-sponsor of this legislation, I am pleased to see its passage in the House.

It is fitting to honor the past and present members of the U.S. Merchant Marine. To this end, I introduced legislation in the last Congress to authorize additional federal funding for the Merchant Marine Memorial Wall in San Pedro, California. This provision has been incorporated into broader legislation, H.R. 1098 and I am pleased with the legislative progress of the Maritime Policy Improvement Act of 2001 thus far. The House passed this measure in March by a bi-partisan vote of 415 to 3. The Senate Committee on Commerce recently approved this legislation. It is my hope that the full Senate will act soon on H.R. 1098 and that we will send this legislation to the President shortly.

I am proud to acknowledge the U.S. maritime fleet on National Maritime Day. Each day U.S. mariners diligently transport tons of imports and exports from ports around the country, many working in my district at the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach. On this day, we thank those people civilian and military, who spend their days on the water serving the American people.

THANKING JEAN HULL FOR HER YEARS OF VOLUNTEER WORK

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment and say thank you to a resident of Glenwood Springs, Colorado. For 45 years, Jean Hull has volunteered her time with the hospital auxiliary. Throughout these 45 years, Jean has been a warm, friendly face for not only visitors but hospital employees as well.

Jean started out volunteering at the information desk in 1956 when the Valley View Hospital Auxiliary was formed. “She has lent her support for literally the entire existence of Valley View,” said Gary Brewer, the Hospital Administrator. “Her gentle, competent and positive presence is valued by the hospital, and by our patients and families.” Jean now volunteers every Thursday in the gift shop, where she is known as a very persuasive seller. Jean also helps with fund-raisers.

Other groups have benefited from Jean's willingness to volunteer her time. Jean was part of the Parent-Teacher Association. She is an active member of the First Presbyterian Church of Glenwood Springs, and for the past 28 years, she has been a member of the P.E.O., which raises money to help young women finish their education. “It's a tremendous way for someone just moving into Glenwood to become acquainted. It's a wonderful way of doing something worthwhile. You feel like you're doing something for the community.”

During the month of May, Valley View Hospital named Jean “Volunteer of the Year”. “I was just overwhelmed, and very flattered of course,” Jean said. “Many volunteers have many more hours than I do.”

Mr. Speaker, I hope that you and Congress will join me in congratulating Jean on her award and thank her for all she has done for the community of Glenwood Springs.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained for several rollcall votes on May 21st and May 22nd due to flight delays and cancellations. The votes were on passage of H. Con. Res. 56, and on adoption of several amendments to H.R. 1, to Leave No Child Behind Act of 2001. If I had been present, I would have voted the following: rollcall vote No. 126—"yea"; rollcall vote No. 128—"yea"; rollcall vote No. 129—"yea"; rollcall vote No. 130—"nay"; and rollcall vote No. 131—"yea".

In particular, I want to voice my strong support for H. Con. Res. 56, a resolution recognizing National Pearl Harbor Remembrance Day. This resolution pays tribute to the roughly 2,400 American citizens who died in the attack that day, and to the more than 12,000 members of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association. The story of Pearl Harbor will always invoke tragic memories for all of us, and it is appropriate that we pay special tribute and respect towards the military men and women who have paid the ultimate price to preserve the freedoms we Americans enjoy to this day.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

TRIBUTE TO WATERSHED PIONEER
LYNDON V. "LINDY" GRANAT

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 22, 2001

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, a most respected member of Western Colorado passed away on May 12, 2001. Lyndon V. "Lindy" Granat was a pioneer in Western Colorado, and I would like Congress to pause a moment and recognize Lindy for his years of work and dedication to the community. Everyone who knew him will sorely miss him.

Lindy was born in Eagle Bend, Minnesota, and in 1920 at the age of seven he moved to Palisade, Colorado in 1920 with his family. He graduated from Palisade High School in 1930 and three years later he met his future wife, Violet Wolverton. He and Violet married in 1935. Lindy was a peach rancher until his retirement in 1978. According to his family, "Lindy had a lifelong love of Palisade, calling it 'God's Country' and Palisade is richer efforts."

Lindy spent a lifetime booster the town, fighting for every cause. During his life he belonged to countless organizations like the Peach Board of Control and the United Fruit Growers Association where he served on the board of directors. He was a lifetime member of the NRA and the Western Colorado Horticulture Society.

Lindy is best known for helping to build the Palisade Watershed along with George Nesbitt, Ray Denison, and Bob Flockhart. As a result, Lindy was often the unofficial tour guide. In 1995 the Town of Palisade named the Granat Reservoir in his honor because of his intimate knowledge of the watershed's development. The Palisade Watershed is how the town receives its water from the Grand Mesa.

"He was a true gentle giant because his heart overflowed with love—love for his family, friends and his town. He was loyal, the kind of man you could count on, no matter what the need," said the Palisade Tribune.

Mr. Speaker, Lyndon V. "Lindy" Granat deserves the thanks and praise of Congress for all of his work for the Town of Palisade throughout his life. The memory of Lindy will last forever with wife and his sons Gary and Roger, his daughter Ruth and his grandchildren.

SENATE—Wednesday, May 23, 2001

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JEFF SESSIONS, a Senator from the State of Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, His Holiness Catholicos Karekin the Second, Catholicos of All Armenians, Holy Etchmiadzin, Republic of Armenia.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain, Catholicos Karekin the Second, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God and Lord, we come together from different places, cultures, and traditions on a unique day You have created. We rejoice and are glad in it. Help us walk together in Your light.

Thank You for our diversity and the richness this brings when we share our lives. Help us understand each other through our differences and recognize what we have in common. Thank You for democracy, which gives such dignity to each person and reflects Your sense of human worth. Please nurture our democracies—America, which has grown strong over two centuries, and Armenia, a new democracy with strong hopes. In this year, when we recognize the 1700th anniversary of Armenia's conversion to Christianity, may we grow stronger in faith and remember the importance of being true to the vision You give.

We join the prayer of St. Nersess the Graceful and ask You for wisdom so we may always think, speak, and do what is good in Your sight, and to save us from evil thoughts, words, and deeds. Please give us wisdom in our decisions and dealings with each other, staff, constituents, and those seeking our help. Thank You for placing us in positions of influence. Help us make the Nation and our world better.

Holy Father, I ask You to bless the Senators, the American Government and people, and Armenian people and nation. I pray for the unity of churches and peoples and ask You to bless the clergy of this Nation. We know that You alone are God. To You be glory, power, and honor, now and always and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JEFF SESSIONS led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

The assistant legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, May 21, 2001.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JEFF SESSIONS, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SESSIONS thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business for 3 minutes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GUEST CHAPLAIN KAREKIN II

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I know I speak for all of my colleagues in thanking His Holiness, Catholicos Karekin the Second, the Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of All Armenians, for leading the Senate in prayer this morning. His prayer, I must say, was inspiring. I hope all of us took to heart particularly his admonition that we should show wisdom in our dealings with one another.

His Holiness is the world leader of the Armenian Church, which traces its roots to the first century preaching of Jesus' Apostles, Saint Thaddeus and Saint Bartholomew. The Armenian Church is among the Orthodox churches, which, along with the Catholic and Protestant Churches, constitutes one of three branches of Christianity.

The Catholicos was elected democratically by an assembly of clergy and lay delegates from around the world in October 1999. He is the 132nd in a continuous line of catholicos. He sits in Armenia and administers the Armenian Church from the Mother See of Holy Etchmiadzin and has authority over Dioceses on five continents.

In the United States, there are well over 1 million Armenian Americans who live in all parts of our country. They have made very important contributions to all aspects of American life.

His Holiness is well known not only for his spiritual leadership but his charitable works to help the needy, his educational programs, and his management skills. He is also recognized in the international religious community, where he sought to draw churches closer together. He has met with John Paul II and will be meeting in September with Pope John Paul II when he comes to visit Armenia.

The Catholicos is visiting the United States to celebrate the 1700th anniversary of the conversion of Armenia to Christianity. He is meeting with U.S. religious leaders and the Armenian-American communities. The theme of his visit is "Walking Together in the Light of the Lord."

Mr. President, we are pleased and honored that he is here with us today.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, today the Senate will resume voting—and voting—on amendments to the reconciliation and tax relief bill, and consecutive votes will occur throughout the morning. It is hoped—hope springs eternal—that final passage on the tax relief and reconciliation bill will occur during today's session. If passage occurs as expected, the Senate will resume consideration of the education bill. There will be additional votes all throughout the day, and Senators are encouraged to stay in the Senate Chamber after the final votes on the tax bill. I thank my colleagues for their consideration and cooperation.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before we hear from our friend, I wish to indicate to the Senate that we have six amendments lined up. We are confident that the two leaders can work something out during the day. We hope maybe there can be some end to the debate on this bill, but that will be up to the two leaders. We have shared the first amendment with the majority. We have five others we will give to them briefly.

We are hopeful things will move along well today, and especially, if we stick to our 10-minute voting, I think we can go through the first six amendments at an accelerated rate.

Mr. ROBERTS. I say that is splendid news.

RESTORING EARNINGS TO LIFT INDIVIDUALS AND EMPOWER FAMILIES (RELIEF) ACT OF 2002

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 1836, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1836) to provide the reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002.

Pending:

Collins/Warner amendment No. 675, to provide an above-the-line deduction for qualified professional development expenses of elementary and secondary school teachers and to allow a credit against income tax to elementary and secondary school teachers who provide classroom materials.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTS). The distinguished Senator from Maine.

AMENDMENT NO. 741

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I send up amendment No. 741 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Ms. SNOWE], for herself, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. KERRY, Mr. DODD, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. DOMENICI, and Mr. SMITH of Oregon, proposes an amendment numbered 741.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate that the modifications to the child tax credit contained in section 201 should be part of the final tax package)

On page 18, between lines 14 and 15, insert:
SEC. 202. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON THE MODIFICATIONS TO THE CHILD TAX CREDIT.

(a) FINDINGS.—

(1) There are over 12,000,000 children in poverty in the United States—about 78 percent of these children live in working families.

(2) The child tax credit was originally designed to benefit families with children in recognition of the costs associated with raising children.

(3) There are 15,400,000 children whose families would not benefit from the doubling of the child tax credit unless it is made refundable and another 7,000,000 children live in families who will not receive an increased benefit under the bill unless the credit is made refundable.

(4) A person who earns the Federal minimum wage and works 40 hours a week for 50 weeks a year earns approximately $10,300.

(5) The provision included in section 201 would give families with children the benefit of a partially refundable child tax credit based on 15 cents of their income for every dollar earned above $10,000.

(6) For a family earning $15,000 that is an additional $750 to help make ends meet.

(7) Doubling the child tax credit to $1,000 and making it partially refundable will benefit over 37,000,000 families with dependent children.

(8) The expansion of the child tax credit included in section 201 is a meaningful and a responsible effort on the part of the Senate to address the needs of low income working families to promote work and such an expansion would provide the benefit of a child tax credit to 10,700,000 more children than the provision passed by the House of Representatives.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the “10-15” child tax credit provision included in section 201 is a worthy start, and should be maintained as part of the final package.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to offer a sense of the Senate amendment in support of the provisions in the bill that expand and extend the child tax credit to millions of working families. I am joined in offering this amendment by Senators LINCOLN, JEFFORDS, CHAFEE, DEWINE, KERRY, DODD, ROCKEFELLER, COLLINS, DOMENICI, SMITH of Oregon, and WELLSTONE.

The RELIEF Act doubles the maximum child tax credit from $500 to $1,000 per child and extends it by making it partially refundable for 15 cents on every dollar earned above $10,000. These provisions were incorporated in the bill during the Senate Finance Committee markup on a bipartisan basis and, together, these provisions will extend the benefits of the child tax credit to more than 55 million children nationally, as well as 37 million families. Without refundability, almost 16 million of these children would not be eligible for an increased benefit. The overwhelming majority of these children—almost two-thirds—live in working families.

This amendment demonstrates our commitment to the child tax credit provisions in this package. I urge support of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time in opposition?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I know of no opposition to this amendment. We yield back our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) and the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 94, nays 4, as follows:

The amendment (No. 741) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 769, AS MODIFIED

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 769 and ask unanimous consent to modify it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. Without objection, the amendment is modified. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NELSON] proposes an amendment numbered 769, as modified.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide a circuit breaker for tax cuts if debt levels are not reduced as provided in the budget resolution for fiscal year 2002)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . CIRCUIT BREAKER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any fiscal year beginning with fiscal year 2004, if the level of debt held by the public at the end of that fiscal year (as projected by the Office of Management and Budget sequestration update report on August 20th preceding the beginning of that fiscal year) would exceed the level of debt held by the public for that fiscal year set forth in the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002 (H. Con. Res. 83, 107th Congress), any Member of Congress may move to proceed to a bill that would make changes in law to reduce discretionary spending and direct spending (except for changes in Social Security, Medicare and COLA's) and increase revenues in a manner that would reduce the debt held by the public for the fiscal year to a level not exceeding the level provided in that concurrent resolution for that fiscal year.

(b) CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION.—A bill considered under subsection (a) shall be considered as provided in section 310(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 641(e)).

(c) PROCEDURE.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, motion, amendment, or conference report, pursuant to this section, that contains any provisions other than those enumerated in section 310(a)(1) and 310(a)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. This point of order may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this paragraph.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. This amendment is a circuit breaker as opposed to a trigger. Nothing automatically kicks in as in the case of the trigger amendments that have been offered in the past but it does, in fact, create an opportunity for a privileged motion that deals with spending or tax cuts in the event the debt reduction targets are not being met.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senate will please come to order.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, this circuit breaker does not specify any action to be taken if the midcourse review legislation is not enacted into law. What it does is it simply permits any Senator to bring up a privileged motion that deals with spending or tax cuts but exempts Social Security, Medicare, and COLA's from being subject to any potential spending cuts in the midcourse correction.

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment. I ask they do so.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am not going to use my 1 minute. With this modification, I ask unanimous consent the amendment be agreed to; if not, then by voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield back his time?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 769), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the list we gave to the majority lists Senator DURBIN being next but we want to flip that and have Senator GRAHAM's amendment be next in order.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENSIGN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 784

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 784 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself and Mr. JOHNSON, proposes an amendment numbered 784.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide a deduction for unreimbursed expenses related to certain public activities of emergency response professionals)

At the end of subtitle D of title IV, add the following:

SEC. —. ABOVE-THE-LINE DEDUCTION FOR QUALIFIED EMERGENCY RESPONSE EXPENSES OF ELIGIBLE EMERGENCY RESPONSE PROFESSIONALS.

(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 (relating to additional itemized deductions for individuals), as amended by this Act, is amended by redesignating section 224 as section 225 and by inserting after section 223 the following new section:

“SEC. 224. QUALIFIED EMERGENCY RESPONSE EXPENSES.

“(a) ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of an eligible emergency response professional, there shall be allowed as a deduction an amount equal to the qualified expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

“(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) ELIGIBLE EMERGENCY RESPONSE PROFESSIONAL.—The term ‘eligible emergency response professional’ includes—

“(A) a full-time employee of any police department or fire department which is organized and operated by a governmental entity to provide police protection, firefighting service, or emergency medical services for any area within the jurisdiction of such governmental entity,

“(B) an emergency medical technician licensed by a State who is employed by a State or non-profit to provide emergency medical services, and

“(C) a member of a volunteer fire department which is organized to provide firefighting or emergency medical services for any area within the jurisdiction of a governmental entity which is not provided with any other firefighting services.

“(2) GOVERNMENTAL ENTITY.—The term ‘governmental entity’ means a State (or political subdivision thereof), Indian tribal (or political subdivision thereof), or Federal government.

“(3) QUALIFIED EXPENSES.—The term ‘qualified expenses’ means unreimbursed expenses for police and firefighter activities, as determined by the Secretary.

“(c) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—No other deduction or credit shall be allowed under this chapter for any amount taken into account for which a deduction is allowed under this section.

“(2) COORDINATION WITH EXCLUSIONS.—A deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for qualified expenses only to the extent the amount of such expenses exceeds the amount excludable under section 135, 529(c)(1), or 530(d)(2) for the taxable year.

“(d) TERMINATION.—This section shall not apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2006.”

(b) DEDUCTION ALLOWED IN COMPUTING ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—Section 62(a) (relating to adjusted gross income defined), as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting after paragraph (19) the following new paragraph:

“(20) QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES.—The deduction allowed by section 224.”

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Sections 86(b)(2), 135(c)(4), 137(b)(3), and 219(g)(3), as amended by this Act, are each amended by inserting “224,” after “221.”

(2) Section 221(b)(2)(C), as amended by this Act, is amended by inserting “224,” before “911.”

(3) Section 469(i)(3)(E), as amended by this Act, is amended by striking “and 223” and inserting “, 223, and 224”.

(4) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1, as amended by this Act, is amended by striking the item relating to section 223 and inserting the following new items:

“Sec. 224. Qualified emergency response expenses.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

Mr. HARKIN. First, I thank my colleagues, the chairman of the committee, Senator GRASSLEY, and the ranking member, Senator BAUCUS, for helping work out this amendment. They have done a great job. I really appreciate it. But I also believe all of our policemen and our firefighters and our volunteer firefighters are going to appreciate it even more because what happens right now is a lot of our law enforcement officers, firefighters, and volunteer firefighters spend a lot of money out of their own pockets for work-related expenses. This amendment would help cover their out-of-pocket expenses for their guns, bullet-proof vests, uniforms, some transportation costs, and equipment for volunteer firefighters.

Just to give you an example of what I am talking about, police officers in Altoona, IA, pay for their own guns, which can cost up to $800. In Des Moines, they have to pay for their guns, ammunition, shoes and boots, and part of the cost of their $600 bullet-proof vests. For some police, when they go to training, the training is paid for but the transportation to get there is not paid for, so they have to pay for that out of their own pocket.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask unanimous consent for just 30 seconds more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARKIN. For these men and women, who earn an average of $28,000 to $40,000 a year and have families to support, those expenses add up, especially for new officers. This amendment would help provide a deduction for these people when they pay for those expenses out of their own pocket.

Again, I thank Senator GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS for being willing to work out this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this amendment is similar to one we did in another profession on another amendment that is being worked out. We accept this amendment, look favorably on it. I ask if we can have a voice vote. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

The question occurs on agreeing to amendment No. 784.

The amendment (No. 784) was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I call up my motion at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan (Ms. STABENOW) moves to recommit the bill H.R. 1836, as amended, to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the same back to the Senate forthwith with an amendment that—

(1) ensures that the provisions of this bill do not result in any fiscal year in an on-budget surplus for that fiscal year that is less than the surplus for that year in the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund; and

(2) establishes a 60-vote point of order prohibiting any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that uses funds in such Trust Fund for any purpose other than for providing part A benefits under the Medicare program.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, I ask my colleagues to join me in this motion to recommit and to join with Senator BOB GRAHAM, who has been such a leader in protecting Medicare, and my colleague from Minnesota, Senator DAYTON, who has been such a champion on Medicare and prescription drugs.

This is a very simple, straightforward motion. No. 1, it says we will not use the Medicare Part A trust funds in order to pay for this tax cut. We have seen in the numbers from the final conference committee on the budget that every single year Medicare trust funds are used for this tax cut. This says no to that practice. It puts into place a 60-vote point of order in the future for any other attempts to use the Medicare trust fund.

We believe strongly that we need to update Medicare. We need to provide prescription drugs and strengthen Medicare. We ought not to be using it for other purposes.

We ask colleagues to join us, to say strongly that when it comes to Medicare, we want to update it, not raid it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, everything the Senator from Michigan said, I agree with. I would just do it in a different way. I would do it according to the budget resolution that was adopted.

In that budget resolution, we fully protect Part A. It is a commitment on the part of this party, this Congress, and the President of the United States to only use Medicare money for Medicare, nothing else. That is what we will do.

This amendment is not needed because of the budget and the planning on this tax bill. This issue comes up every time we are trying to spread out the tax reductions over the next 10 years. It is very basic to every decision we make that we not go into the Medicare trust fund.

I ask Members not to vote for the amendment because it is not needed.

I raise a point of order on germaneness. That point of order is based upon section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for consideration of the pending motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 46, nays 54, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 783

(Purpose: To allow individuals a deduction for qualified long-term care insurance premiums, use of such insurance under cafeteria plans and flexible spending arrangements, and a credit for individuals with long-term care needs)

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 783.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 783.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is located in the RECORD of Tuesday, May 22, 2001, under "Amendments Submitted and Proposed.")

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, one of the dramatic announcements of the 2000 census was the fact that one of the fastest growing components of our population is Americans over the age of 80. This is just the first ripple of what will be a tidal wave of Americans over the age of 80 as we move into the 21st century.

This amendment goes to exactly that issue by first recognizing the care that is currently being given to older Americans by caregivers by providing a $3,000 tax credit to those persons who are tending to the needs of a frail elderly member of their family, and second, to encourage Americans to purchase long-term care insurance for their own protection when they might reach the point where they require institutional care.

This is an extremely important amendment for preparation of the future of millions of Americans. I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we know of the need to recognize the contribution of 22 million family caregivers in the United States. We know the need to encourage people to save for long-term care through tax credits for long-term health care.

Following a hearing I held last month on long-term care, Senator GRAHAM and I introduced legislation to do what this amendment creates. He and I worked jointly on a similar bill last year and pressed hard for its passage.

As I stated at the hearing, I am committed to addressing the pressing financial long-term care challenges that accompany the retirement of the baby boom generation. However, I cannot support the inclusion of his amendment in the bill since it raises taxes on people to pay for it.

I will be offering a second-degree amendment. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

AMENDMENT NO. 786 TO AMENDMENT NO. 763

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have a second-degree amendment at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY] proposes an amendment numbered 786 to amendment No. 763.

On page 1, line 2, strike all after the word "strike" through the end of page 1, line 3.

On page 20, strike lines 14 and 15 and insert the following:

"This section shall apply to policies issued after January 1st 2006."

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, this amendment, rather than raise taxes, will be paid for out of the budget surplus.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, what is the time limit for debate on second-degree amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute each. The Senator yielded back his time. The Senator from Florida has 1 minute.

Mr. GRAHAM. The amendment that is offered proposes to pay for this by making a 1-percent reduction in the marginal rate cut for the highest income Americans. The second-degree amendment pays for it by blowing the budget cap of $1.35 trillion and going above that for the purposes of this very important amendment.

I believe strongly in this amendment, but I also believe in fiscal discipline. I am afraid the course being suggested by the second-degree amendment is the course that is going to be suggested for the remaining months of this session of Congress; that is, every time we have a new tax idea, let's do it by increasing the total amount of tax and not be faithful to the commitment we have made to limit the total tax authority to $1.35 trillion.

Mr. President, on policy grounds, I strongly oppose the second-degree amendment. I raise a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the pending second-degree amendment violates section 311(a)(2)(B) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I move to waive the Budget Act and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 49, the nays are 51. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, am I correct the second-degree amendment has failed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It failed.

Mr. GRAHAM. By virtue of the waiver of the point of order not having received 60 votes, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have a point of order that the pending amendment is not germane to the provisions of the reconciliation bill. I make that under section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask the budget point of order be waived. I will ask for the yeas and nays, but before doing so I would like to use my 1 minute to speak against the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, what we have raised in this one amendment are two of the most basic questions that this overall tax bill raises. One is fiscal discipline. We had a vote, and I am pleased more than a majority of Senators voted not to break the $1.35 trillion cap. That was what we were being asked to do, to add $50 billion beyond the current tax cut authority through the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The second issue we are now facing is one of priorities. Upon which do you put the higher priority, assisting Americans prepare for their old age, helping families who are providing care for a frail, elderly family member through a $3,000 tax credit—is that a higher priority than delaying the 1-percent decrease for the highest income-tax payers in America, the rate reduction which is in this underlying bill? Those are the choices. Which is more important to you? What are your priorities?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for equal time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to support my point of order and to say I agree on the need for long-term care insurance, a need to encourage family care giving through tax credits. The Senator and I have introduced legislation to accomplish that. Also, people need to remember that senior citizens who pay income taxes are going to benefit from our tax reduction as well.

The second and last point I will make is: This, again, is one more time of, I will bet, dozens of times over the last 4 days that we have had amendments from the other side to break up the rate structure, the bipartisan compromise in this bill. I ask we vote against waiving the point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is sufficient second. The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

Mr. SCHUMER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 777

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 777, the good luck amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] proposes an amendment numbered 777.

Mr. SCHUMER. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide alternative minimum tax relief for individuals, extend certain expiring tax provisions, and to provide an offset for revenue loss)

On page 314, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. —. INDIVIDUAL ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX INDEXING; EXTENSION OF CERTAIN EXPIRING PROVISIONS.

(a) ALTERNATIVE MINIMUM TAX RELIEF.—Section 701(a) of this Act is amended to read as follows:

(12) PHASEOUT OF DEDUCTION FOR CLEAN-FUEL VEHICLES AND CERTAIN REFUELING PROPERTY.—

(A) TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF PHASEOUT.—Subsection (b)(1)(B) of section 179A is amended—

(i) in the matter preceding clause (i), by striking “December 31, 2001” and inserting “December 31, 2002”,

(ii) in clause (i), by striking “2002” and inserting “2003”,

(iii) in clause (ii), by striking “2003” and inserting “2004”, and

(iv) in clause (iii), by striking “2004” and inserting “2005”.

(B) EXTENSION OF TERMINATION DATE.—Section 179A(f) is amended by striking “December 31, 2004” and inserting “December 31, 2005”.

(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this paragraph shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 2001.

(13) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT FOR ELECTRIC VEHICLES.—

(A) TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF PHASE OUT.—Section 30(b)(2) is amended—

(i) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking “December 31, 2001” and inserting “December 31, 2002”,

(ii) in subparagraph (A), by striking “2002” and inserting “2003”,

(iii) in subparagraph (B), by striking “2003” and inserting “2004”, and

(iv) in subparagraph (C), by striking “2004” and inserting “2005”.

(B) EXTENSION OF TERMINATION DATE.—Section 30(e) is amended by striking “December 31, 2004” and inserting “December 31, 2005”.

(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this paragraph shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 2001.

(14) GENERALIZED SYSTEM OF PREFERENCES.—Section 505 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2465) is amended by striking "September 30, 2001" and inserting "December 31, 2002".

(15) ANDEAN TRADE PREFERENCE.—Section 208(b) of the Andean Trade Preference Act (19 U.S.C. 3206(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) TERMINATION OF DUTY-FREE TREATMENT.—No duty-free treatment extended to beneficiary countries under this title shall remain in effect after December 31, 2002."

(16) TEMPORARY INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF RUM EXCISE TAX COVERED OVER TO PUERTO RICO AND VIRGIN ISLANDS.—Section 7652(f)(1) (relating to limitation on cover over of tax on distilled spirits) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) $10.50 ($13.25 in the case of distilled spirits brought into the United States after June 30, 1999, and before January 1, 2003), or".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

(d) REVENUE OFFSET.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall adjust the reduction in the highest marginal tax rate in the table contained in section 1(i)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by section 101(a) of this Act, as necessary to offset the decrease in revenues to the Treasury for each fiscal year resulting from the amendments made by this section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, this is a simple amendment. We have had two worries mainly about this tax bill. One is that the dollars go too much to the wealthiest people and not enough to the middle class, and we have had a lot of amendments thereon. The second is that it breaks fiscal discipline. This amendment deals with that second category.

What is missing in this tax bill bothers me as much as what is in it, maybe more. We do not do any of the tax extenders which we know we will do later this year. We do not change the alternative minimum tax hardly at all, which will catch 39 million people by the time this 10-year bill is finished.

This amendment includes both of those so we do not have to come back and do them and break the $1.35 trillion that we said we will keep and lowers the top rate to make room for those.

It is a fiscally responsible amendment. I would challenge anyone who wants to vote against it to make a pledge that they will not vote at a later time outside the budget cap for these two issues.

I thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, this amendment raises the whole extender question, something the Finance Committee will be looking at later this year. The bipartisan bill before us does not address this issue.

This amendment is nongermane to the bill, and I raise a point of order that it is nongermane.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I move to waive the point of order and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 46, nays 54, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 163 Leg.]

YEAS—46

Akaka	Dorgan	Lieberman
Bayh	Durbin	Lincoln
Biden	Edwards	Mikulski

Ensign	McConnell	Warner

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 46, the nays are 54. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected.

The point of order is sustained and the amendment falls.

RECESS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now stand in recess until 1:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, may I inquire of the distinguished floor leaders, the Collins-Warner amendment has been pending. We have been very deferential to the leadership. Can we get an idea of when that might be disposed?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Let me be perfectly candid with the Senator from Virginia. If the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Maine still want a roll-call on their amendment, we will do that at 1:30.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have worked hard over here today with people wanting to offer amendments. Some have been on file since last week. I hope this doesn't start another string of amendments.

Mr. WARNER. I am not hearing the soft, wonderful voice of my great friend. Can he raise it a bit?

Mr. REID. We have about 40 amendments over here that have been filed. Through various means, the amendments are not going to be brought up. I hope the managers can work something out as to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia without another rollcall vote. I am afraid this may start a series of rollcall votes.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, might I say to the distinguished Democratic leader and the managers of the bill that there has been an ongoing negotiation with regard to this amendment, and my distinguished colleague from Maine and I have been very forthcoming with our managers. Our bill was up and we got the yeas and nays when this matter first hit the floor. We have acceded to their requests day after day to delay it. We think the time has come now.

I assure the Senator we were in the front of the queue. Amendment after amendment has been filed at the desk subsequent to ours. We were here day 1, hour 1. We have cooperated with our distinguished managers to this point. I hope our distinguished Democratic whip will allow us to bring up this amendment.

Mr. REID. Senator BAUCUS and I will work to see that we have no more rollcall votes. If you have to have this one, I guess you do. But I hope we don't have to have another one also. We will do our best to see that there will not be any more.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I point out to the Senator that the yeas and nays were ordered on the Collins-Warner amendment last Thursday night when it was first debated for a half hour on the Senate floor. This isn't a new amendment or a new request. The yeas and nays were, in fact, ordered last week. I wanted to clarify that for the record.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I advise our distinguished Democratic leader that Senators MIKULSKI, DODD, and HARKIN have worked with us right along, so it is a bipartisan effort. I am sure if they were present, they would join us in this request.

Mr. REID. That is my point. It sounds as if you have a good bipartisan amendment. I can't understand why we need a rollcall vote.

Mr. WARNER. I say to my good friend, I guess I reached down in the 23 years of experience in managing many bills and being in many conferences. There is a certain feeling about this legislation. It is for teachers. It is simple—

Mr. REID. If the Senator will withhold, if the managers will agree, we will work to see what needs to be done.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I believe Senator BAUCUS would agree with me. I have been asked now if we can do it this way. We will recess until 1:30, but we would vote on the amendment by the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Maine just prior to final passage. So we would have this rollcall vote and then final passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senator from Iowa, is he making that part of his unanimous consent request?

Mr. WARNER. I so request, Mr. President.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I make that as part of my unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, will the Senator from Iowa allow the recess to end at 1:40?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I change my unanimous consent request that the Senate stand in recess now until the hour of 1:40.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:38 p.m., recessed until 1:40 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Ms. STABENOW).

AMENDMENT NO. 789

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I send a managers' amendment to the desk. It has been agreed to by the two managers. I ask unanimous consent the amendment be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements regarding these amendments be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for himself and Mr. BAUCUS, proposes an amendment numbered 789.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted and Proposed.")

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I am pleased the managers' amendment includes language identical to S. 694, the Artist-Museum Partnership Act, I introduced with Senator BENNETT earlier this year. I would like to thank Senator BENNETT for his leadership on this issue and also would like to thank Senators BINGAMAN, COCHRAN, DASCHLE, DODD, DOMENICI, JEFFORDS, JOHNSON, KENNEDY, LIEBERMAN, LINCOLN, REID, and WARNER for cosponsoring this bill.

This bipartisan legislation will enable our country to keep cherished art works in the United States and preserve them in our public institutions, while erasing an inequity in our Tax Code that currently serves as a disincentive for artists to donate their works to museums and libraries. Our bill would allow artists, writers and composers who donate works to museums and libraries to take a tax deduction equal to the fair market value of the work. This is something that collectors who make similar donations are already able to do.

There is an inequality in the current tax law where artists who donate self-created works are only able to deduct the cost of supplies such as canvas, pen, paper, ink. This is unfair to artists and it hurts museums and libraries, large and small, that are dedicated to preserving works for posterity.

In my State of Vermont, we are incredibly proud of the great works produced by hundreds of local artists who choose to live and work in the Green Mountain State. Displaying their creations in museums and libraries helps develop a sense of pride among Vermonters and strengthens a bond with Vermont, its landscape, its beauty and its cultural heritage. Anyone who has gazed at a painting in a museum or examined an original manuscript or composition, and has gained a greater understanding of both the artist and the subject as a result, knows the tremendous value of these works. I would like to see more of them, not fewer, preserved in Vermont and across the country.

I thank the Chairman and ranking member of the Finance Committee for including this legislation in the managers package. I hope that the provision will be retained by the Conference Committee.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, the Boxer-Nelson of Florida amendment seeks to safeguard public health and improve our nation's drinking water by aiding water companies to secure tax-exempt bond to comply with the 10 parts per billion arsenic drinking water standard.

Ironically, we offer this amendment today, May 23, 2001, one day after Environmental Protection Agency finalized its decision to delay implementation of a new arsenic standard until February 22, 2002.

Thus, the 1942 arsenic standard of 50 parts per billion, a standard put in place before arsenic was known to cause cancer, remains the standard for our nation's drinking water.

This is true despite the scientific data which shows that the 50 parts per billion standard could result in one additional case of cancer for every 100 people consuming drinking water.

The EPA knows arsenic is dangerous. In fact, the EPA has found another danger associated with arsenic in addition to cancer: genetic alteration of our DNA. In April of this year, a team of EPA scientists published a report in "Chemical Research Toxicology" that demonstrates that in addition to causing cancer, arsenic can induce genetic alterations to human DNA.

The risks associated with arsenic are widely known not just in this country, but throughout the world. For that reason, the European Union and the World Health Organization have endorsed the 10 parts per billion standard.

Costs did not prevent the European Union or the World Health Organization from protecting their citizenry from the risks associated with arsenic. Costs should not prevent the United States either.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the tax reconciliation package we have passed today contains an amendment that I offered along with Senator LANDRIEU. That amendment is the text of the Hope for Children Act, which we introduced back in January as S. 148.

I greatly appreciate the consideration this amendment has received from Chairman GRASSLEY, who has long been a leader in the area of adoption and foster care. He and Senator BAUCUS, along with the staff of the Finance Committee, have been extremely responsive to me and my staff as we worked through this amendment, and I thank them for their support of America's adopting families.

As my colleagues know, this legislation will continue and improve on two current tax provisions that are helping so many Americans who seek to form families through adoption: the adoption tax credit and the exclusion for employer-provided adoption benefits. These provisions are due to expire at the end of this year, and the Hope for Children Act will remove that sunset. It will also double the basic tax credit and exclusion, to $10,000. For a family adopting a child with special needs, the current credit of $6,000 will rise to $10,000; perhaps more important to these families, their credit will no longer be tied to cumbersome and inflexible IRS regulations that exclude a wide range of legitimate adoption expenses related to children with special needs. Our legislation will also make it possible for more families to qualify for the full credit and exclusion, by lifting the cap on income eligibility.

These are sound, necessary measures that truly help families. The Senate should be proud they are a part of our tax reconciliation package, and I hope they will be preserved in the upcoming conference with the House of Representatives. It is important to note that just last week, the House unanimously passed its version of the Hope for Children Act, H.R. 622. While that action suggests there is a consensus supporting the adoption tax credit, I strongly believe the Senate's version of that language is preferable, and I encourage the Senate's conferees to work to keep the Senate language intact.

Mr. President, there are still hundreds of thousands of children in this country and around the world who are waiting for permanent, safe, loving families. It is these children who are the focus of the Hope for Children Act, and it is on behalf of these children that I thank all my colleagues for supporting an amendment that will help make the promise of adoption a reality. I look forward to seeing this language preserved by the conference, adopted by the House and Senate, and sent to President Bush to be signed into law.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I renew my request, Madam President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 789) was agreed to.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent no additional amendments to the pending reconciliation bill be in order other than consideration of the Collins-Warner amendment. I ask further consent that, following the disposition of the amendment described above, the bill be advanced to third reading, and a vote occur on passage, all without any intervening action, motion, or debate.

Finally, I ask, following the vote, the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate, those conferees being: Senators GRASSLEY, HATCH, MURKOWSKI, NICKLES, GRAMM, BAUCUS, ROCKEFELLER, DASCHLE, and BREAUX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. I have one more unanimous-consent request, Madam President. I ask unanimous consent that, following that, on Wednesday, following the passage of H.R. 1836, there be 1 hour of morning business equally divided between the two leaders or their designees. I further ask consent that, following that time, the Senate then proceed to executive session and the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from further consideration of the nomination of Senator Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan. I further ask consent that the Senate then proceed to its consideration and there then be up to 2 hours for debate on the nomination, to be equally divided between the chairman and ranking member of the committee.

Finally, following the use or yielding back of time, that the Senate proceed to a vote on the nomination and, following that vote, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and that the Senate then resume legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, reserving the right to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Did I understand the last request to be that the nomination of Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan take place tomorrow?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Today.

Mr. BYRD. Very well. I was going to make the recommendation it be done today.

I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

There are now 2 minutes evenly divided on the Collins-Warner amendment No. 675.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Maine.

AMENDMENT NO. 675, AS MODIFIED

Ms. COLLINS. Madam President, on behalf of Senator WARNER and myself, I send a modification of amendment No. 675 to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

Amendment No. 675, as modified, is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide an above-the-line deduction for qualified professional development expenses of elementary and secondary school teachers and to allow a credit against income tax to elementary and secondary school teachers who provide classroom materials)

At the end of title IV, add the following:

Subtitle E—Miscellaneous Education Provisions

SEC. 441. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Teacher Relief Act of 2001".

SEC. 442. ABOVE-THE-LINE DEDUCTION FOR QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES OF ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL TEACHERS.

(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 (relating to additional itemized deductions for individuals), as amended by section 431(a), is amended by redesignating section 223 as section 224 and by inserting after section 222 the following new section:

"SEC. 223. QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of an eligible educator, there shall be allowed as a deduction an amount equal to the qualified professional development expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

"(b) MAXIMUM DEDUCTION.—The deduction allowed under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed $500.

"(c) QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES OF ELIGIBLE EDUCATORS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified professional development expenses' means expenses for tuition, fees, books, supplies, equipment, and transportation required for the enrollment or attendance of an individual in a qualified course of instruction.

"(B) QUALIFIED COURSE OF INSTRUCTION.—The term 'qualified course of instruction' means a course of instruction which—

"(i) is—

"(I) directly related to the curriculum and academic subjects in which an eligible educator provides instruction,

"(II) designed to enhance the ability of an eligible educator to understand and use State standards for the academic subjects in which such educator provides instruction,

"(III) designed to provide instruction in how to teach children with different learning styles, particularly children with disabilities and children with special learning needs (including children who are gifted and talented), or

"(IV) designed to provide instruction in how best to discipline children in the classroom and identify early and appropriate interventions to help children described in subclause (III) to learn,

"(ii) is tied to—

"(I) challenging State or local content standards and student performance standards, or

"(II) strategies and programs that demonstrate effectiveness in increasing student academic achievement and student performance, or substantially increasing the knowledge and teaching skills of an eligible educator,

"(iii) is of sufficient intensity and duration to have a positive and lasting impact on the performance of an eligible educator in the classroom (which shall not include 1-day or short-term workshops and conferences), except that this clause shall not apply to an activity if such activity is 1 component described in a long-term comprehensive professional development plan established by an eligible educator and the educator's supervisor based upon an assessment of the needs of the educator, the students of the educator, and the local educational agency involved, and

"(iv) is part of a program of professional development which is approved and certified by the appropriate local educational agency as furthering the goals of the preceding clauses.

"(C) LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term 'local educational agency' has the meaning given such term by section 14101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section.

"(2) ELIGIBLE EDUCATOR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'eligible educator' means an individual who is a kindergarten through grade 12 teacher, instructor, counselor, principal, or aide in an elementary or secondary school for at least 900 hours during a school year.

"(B) ELEMENTARY OR SECONDARY SCHOOL.—The terms 'elementary school' and 'secondary school' have the meanings given such terms by section 14101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 8801), as so in effect.

"(d) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—No other deduction or credit shall be allowed under this chapter for any amount taken into account for which a deduction is allowed under this section.

"(2) COORDINATION WITH EXCLUSIONS.—A deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for qualified professional development expenses only to the extent the amount of such expenses exceeds the amount excludable under section 135, 529(c)(1), or 530(d)(2) for the taxable year."

(b) DEDUCTION ALLOWED IN COMPUTING ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—Section 62(a), as amended by section 431(b), is amended by inserting after paragraph (18) the following new paragraph:

"(19) QUALIFIED PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT EXPENSES.—The deduction allowed by section 223."

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Sections 86(b)(2), 135(c)(4), 137(b)(3), and 219(g)(3) are each amended by inserting "223," after "221."

(2) Section 221(b)(2)(C) is amended by inserting "223," before "911".

(3) Section 469(i)(3)(E) is amended by striking "and 221" and inserting ", 221, and 223".

(4) The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1, as amended by section 431(c), is amended by striking the item relating to section 223 and inserting the following new items:

"Sec. 223. Qualified professional development expenses.

"Sec. 224. Cross reference."

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, and shall expire on December 31, 2005.

SEC. 442. CREDIT TO ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL TEACHERS WHO PROVIDE CLASSROOM MATERIALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to other credits) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 30B. CREDIT TO ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL TEACHERS WHO PROVIDE CLASSROOM MATERIALS.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of an eligible educator, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 50 percent of the qualified elementary and secondary education expenses which are paid or incurred by the taxpayer during such taxable year.

"(b) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—The credit allowed by subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed $250.

"(c) DEFINITIONS.—

"(1) ELIGIBLE EDUCATOR.—The term 'eligible educator' has the same meaning given such term in section 223(c).

"(2) QUALIFIED ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION EXPENSES.—The term 'qualified elementary and secondary education expenses' means expenses for books, supplies (other than nonathletic supplies for courses of instruction in health or physical education), computer equipment (including related software and services) and other equipment, and supplementary materials used by an eligible educator in the classroom.

"(3) ELEMENTARY OR SECONDARY SCHOOL.—The term 'elementary or secondary school' means any school which provides elementary education or secondary education (through grade 12), as determined under State law.

"(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(1) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—No deduction shall be allowed under this chapter for any expense for which credit is allowed under this section.

"(2) APPLICATION WITH OTHER CREDITS.—The credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the regular tax for the taxable year, reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under subpart A and the preceding sections of this subpart, over

"(B) the tentative minimum tax for the taxable year.

"(e) ELECTION TO HAVE CREDIT NOT APPLY.—A taxpayer may elect to have this section not apply for any taxable year."

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart B of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"Sec. 30B. Credit to elementary and secondary school teachers who provide classroom materials."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, and shall expire on December 31, 2005.

Ms. COLLINS. The modifications have been agreed to by the amendment sponsors and the Chair and ranking member of the Committee on Finance, whom we thank for their valuable assistance. I understand there are now 2 minutes divided?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Ms. COLLINS. I would appreciate being notified when I have used 30 seconds, so Senator WARNER, the coauthor of this amendment, can have the remaining 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be notified.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, the Collins/Warner teacher relief amendment would support the expenditures of teachers who strive for excellence beyond the constraints of what their schools can provide. Our amendment enjoys the bipartisan support of several of our colleagues, including Senators LANDRIEU, COCHRAN, ALLEN, GORDON SMITH, HARKIN, MIKULSKI, JACK REED, DEWINE, HUTCHINSON, DODD, and ENZI as well as the endorsement of the National Education Association, American Federation of Teachers, American Association of School Administrators, National School Boards Association, National Association of State Boards of Education, Council for Exceptional Children, National Center for Learning Disabilities, and the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards support the Collins/Warner Teacher Relief Amendment of 2001. I ask unanimous consent these support letters be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 16, 2001.

Senator SUSAN COLLINS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: On behalf of the National Education Association's (NEA) 2.6 million members, we would like to express our support for your amendment to the Senate tax bill to provide tax benefits for educators' professional development and classroom supply expenses.

As you know, teacher quality is the single most critical factor in maximizing student achievement. Ongoing professional development is essential to ensure that teachers stay up-to-date on the skills and knowledge necessary to prepare students for the challenges of the 21st century. Your proposed tax deduction for professional development expenses will make a critical difference in helping educators access quality training.

We are also very pleased that your amendment would provide a tax credit for educators who reach into their own pockets to pay for necessary classroom materials, including books, pencils, paper, and art supplies. A 1996 NEA study found that the average K-12 teacher spent over $400 a year out of personal funds for classroom supplies. For teachers earning modest salaries, the purchase of classroom supplies represents a considerable expense for which they often must sacrifice other personal needs.

We thank you for your leadership in introducing this important amendment and look forward to continuing to work with you to support our nation's educators.

Sincerely,

MARY ELIZABETH TEASLEY,
Director of Government Relations.

NATIONAL BOARD FOR PROFESSIONAL TEACHING STANDARDS™,
Arlington, VA, May 21, 2001.

Hon. SUSAN COLLINS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: The National Board for Professional Teaching Standards (NBPTS) is pleased to lend its support to the Teacher Relief Act of 2001 as an amendment to H.R. 1836, the Tax Reconciliation Bill. As you know, National Board Certification is one of the most demanding and prestigious voluntary professional development programs available to our nation's teachers. The tax deductions proposed in the Teacher Support Act of 2001 would provide much needed financial relief to teachers seeking to improve their teaching practice.

National Board Certified Teachers (NBCTs) are the best example of quality teaching and National Board Certification reflects the highest standards in professional development and assessment. Allowing teachers to deduct professional development expenses, such as those associated with National Board Certification, is an important supplement to the policies and programs of states and school districts that support the mission of the NBPTS to establish high and rigorous standards for what accomplished teachers should know and be able to do.

We look forward to continuing our work with you in promoting the vital link between high quality professional development and higher student achievement.

Sincerely,

BETTY CASTOR,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE BOARDS OF EDUCATION,
Alexandria, VA, May 21, 2001.

Hon. SUSAN COLLINS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: We are writing to applaud your efforts to provide tax benefits for elementary and secondary school teachers through the Teacher Relief Act, which will be offered as an amendment to S. 1, the Better Education for Students and Teachers Act (BEST). Teachers are the most influential school-based factor in a student's academic success. Your legislation will not only facilitate better trained teachers, but reward teachers for their classroom investments.

Quality professional development activities can significantly increase student learning and improve teaching practice. Allowing

K-12 teachers a $500 annual tax deduction for professional development expenses is a straightforward solution to help promote ongoing teacher training that is individually directed and designed. It is one important element in realizing the ultimate goal of effective and comprehensive professional development programs.

In addition to their time, teachers also pay for a significant amount of their classroom and instructional materials out of their own pockets. Because these expenses are frequently not reimbursed, they constitute an educational donation that is too often overlooked. Your proposal addresses this fact by providing teachers with a 50% tax credit (up to $250 annually) for out of pocket classroom expenses that will financially reimburse teachers and enrich students' classroom settings.

We appreciate your efforts and attention to address this critical situation. NASBE looks forward to working with your office to enact federal initiatives benefitting the instructional needs of America's teachers.

Sincerely,

DAVID GRIFFITH,
Director of Governmental Affairs.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL ADMINISTRATORS,
May 17, 2001.

Senator SUSAN COLLINS,
*Russell Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.*

DEAR SENATOR COLLINS: On behalf of the American Association of School Administrators, representing more than 14,000 public school superintendents and school system leaders, we would like to express our strong support for the Collins/Warner/Landrieu teacher tax credit amendment (amendment #675).

Passage of the Teacher Relief Act would provide teachers with two well-deserved benefits: a tax deduction for professional development and a tax credit for out-of-pocket classroom expenses. Together with Senators John Warner and Mary Landrieu you have outlined a solution to a critical problem facing teachers and educational professionals: the lack of reimbursement for excess expenses incurred by teachers. All too often schools lack the funds to provide teachers with adequate classroom supplies or continuing education. Dedicated teachers frequently opt to pay for books, paper, supplies, and professional development with their own money. Ideally we should not be asking our teachers to make such a burdensome financial sacrifice; the least we can do is make sure that those teachers are partially reimbursed for their expenses.

The Collins/Warner/Landrieu amendment should not be thought of as a tax benefit for teachers; it should be thought of as educational reform. The Teacher Relief Act helps guarantee that America's children are taught by qualified professionals in well-equipped classrooms. Thank you for your continuing support of public education.

Sincerely,

JORDAN CROSS,
Legislative Specialist.

In fact, the tax deductions proposed in the Teacher Support Act of 2001 would provide much-needed financial relief to teachers seeking to improve their teaching practice through advanced course work, and assist those teachers seeking advanced certification, such as the National Board or additional educational endorsements.

In the midst of the education and tax debates, we are asking our colleagues in the Senate now to overlook the selfless efforts of teachers and the financial sacrifices they make to improve their instructional skills and the classrooms in which they teach.

Senator WARNER deserves enormous credit for focusing the Senate's attention, through a sense-of-the-Senate resolution to the education bill, on the need to provide tax relief for our teachers.

Senator WARNER's sense-of-the-Senate resolution which I was proud to cosponsor, passed by a vote of 95-3.

Our amendment would first allow teachers, teacher's aides, principals, and counselors to take an above-the-line tax deduction for their professional development expenses.

Second, the bill would grant educators a tax credit of up to $250 for books, supplies, and equipment they purchase for their students. The tax credit would be established at 50 percent of such expenditures, so for every dollar in supplies a teacher spent, the teacher would receive 50 cents of tax relief.

I greatly admire the many educators who have voluntarily reached deep into their pockets to pay for additional training and course work for themselves, and also to finance additional supplies and materials for their students. By enacting these modest changes to our Tax Code, we can encourage educators to continue to take the formal course work in the subject matter which they teach and to avail themselves of other professional development opportunities.

The relief that our Tax Code now provides to teachers is simply not sufficient. By and large, most teachers do not benefit from the current provisions that allow for limited deductibility of professional development and classroom expenses. Teachers, out of their own generosity, are reaching deep into their pockets to improve their teaching.

Now, under the current law, the problem is that teachers do not reach a sufficient level to be able to deduct the costs of their professional development and classroom supplies. By allowing teachers to take the above-the-line deduction for professional development expenses and a credit for classroom expenses paid out of pocket, our amendment takes a fair, progressive approach that will provide a modicum of relief to our Nation's schoolteachers.

I should note that most of our colleagues have already voted for very similar legislation. Last year, Senator KYL, Senator Coverdell, and I offered a similar amendment to the Affordable Education Act, which was adopted unanimously.

President Bush has eloquently stated: "Teachers sometimes lead with their hearts and pay with their wallets."

Our amendment makes it a priority to reimburse educators for just a small part of what they invest in the futures of our children.

I hope our colleagues will join us in support of this important legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. I join my distinguished colleague from Maine in a bipartisan effort with Senators DODD, MIKULSKI, HARKIN, and others. They have joined with us. This is not political. This is an amendment done for persons who teach our children. They simply take dollars out of their pocket and expend them for necessities in the classroom. All we are doing—it is not tax relief, a tax break—is returning those dollars to their pockets.

The education of our children can be no stronger than those to whom we entrust that educational responsibility. Let us recognize them with this very simple yet, I think, straightforward and heartfelt expression of the Senate.

I thank the managers. I believe they are about to say they are accepting the amendment. Could we have a rollcall vote for it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, Senators have modified their amendment considerably from its original language. We urge Members on both sides of the aisle to vote aye.

I yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 98, nays 2, as follows:

The amendment (No. 675), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. ENZI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARNER). The Senator from Montana is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 787

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator KERRY, I offer amendment No. 787. We neglected to put it in the package. It promotes tax simplification by expanding the current IRS demonstration project which combines State and Federal employment tax for reporting on a single form.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be taken up and adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS], for Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 787.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To permit the disclosure of certain tax information by the Secretary of the Treasury to facilitate combined Federal and State employment tax reporting, and for other purposes)

On page 314, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. ____ . DISCLOSURE OF TAX INFORMATION TO FACILITATE COMBINED EMPLOYMENT TAX REPORTING.

Section 6103(d)(5) is amended to read as follows:

“(5) DISCLOSURE FOR COMBINED EMPLOYMENT TAX REPORTING.—The Secretary may disclose taxpayer identity information and signatures to any agency, body, or commission of any State for the purpose of carrying out with such agency, body, or commission a combined Federal and State employment tax reporting program approved by the Secretary. Subsections (a)(2) and (p)(4) and sections 7213 and 7213A shall not apply with respect to disclosures or inspections made pursuant to this paragraph.”.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 787) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

THE EITC

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise to engage the chairman of the Finance Committee in a colloquy regarding the earned income tax credit otherwise known as the EITC. I thank the Chairman for including my provisions expanding the EITC in the tax bill. It has come to my attention, however, that the EITC has a detrimental impact on the small U.S. Territories that are subject to tax laws that automatically mirror our Federal tax laws. As a result, these small Territories, like the U.S. Virgin Islands, end up absorbing the entire cost of the EITC, which they can ill afford. The burden of this unfunded Federal mandate is exacerbated because these small Territories will also lose needed revenues as a result of the mirror effect of the income tax rate reductions mandated by this bill.

However, the problem can be mitigated by an agreement between the Treasury Department and the interested territorial governments to permit these governments to require that employers advance 60 percent of EITC payments to employees as currently permitted under Section 3507 of the Internal Revenue Code and the allow the employer to deduct these advance payments from FICA taxes the employer currently remits to the U.S. Treasury, as permitted by Section 3507, not from withholding taxes the employer remits to the territorial government. The remaining 40 percent of the EITC payments would continue to be paid by the territorial governments upon filing of an eligible employee's tax return. I believe that no substantive amendment to the Internal Revenue Code is necessary to allow for such an agreement.

I would like the chairman of the Finance Committee to include report language in the final tax conference report that directs the Treasury Department to enter into such an agreement with any territorial government that would like to do so.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I understand the concerns raised by the Senator from Arkansas and will attempt to address this issue in conference.

TAXATION OF SPECIAL NEEDS TRUSTS FOR THE DISABLED

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I had intended to introduce an amendment to modify the taxation of so-called “special needs trusts” for disabled persons. The problem that cries out for change was first brought to my attention by a Tennessee constituent who has been contributing funds annually to a special trust for a disabled child. Under current law, the income from such trusts is taxed at very high rates because the tax writers were concerned about possible abusive use of such trusts. After discussion with the two managers of the bill, I am persuaded that we can work together to craft a better solution to this problem than the one I was prepared to propose. Therefore, with the understanding that we can work together in coming months to develop a better answer, I will not seek a vote on my amendment at this time.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee for his willingness to work with us to craft a solution to a very real problem. He shares with the Ranking Member and I a long history of concern for American taxpayers struggling with the overwhelming expense and other demands of severely disabled relatives. As the Senator knows, Special Needs Trusts, also known as Supplemental Needs Trusts, are a common estate planning tool for assisting in the planning for the long-term financial needs of the disabled.

The Senator and others have helped bring to our attention the fact that these trusts are unduly burdened by the current trust tax requirements of Section 1(e) of the Internal Revenue Code. We recognize that these Special Needs Trusts will receive some relief under the Relief Act of 2001, but that more help is necessary. Therefore, I commit myself to the Senator from Tennessee to work with him and others to craft a solution to reduce the income tax burden imposed on special needs trusts and, simultaneously, to improve the lot of affected disabled Americans.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I look forward to joining my colleagues from Tennessee and Iowa in working on this matter. I also hope our effort will give us an opportunity to address the problem of structured settlements, which are also funding mechanisms for the disabled. As the chairman knows, I have been trying to fix the structured settlement problem for a long time, and I welcome this chance to fix the two matters together.

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise to bring my colleagues' attention to an important issue which affects the men and women who are charged with enforcing our nation's tax laws. While I am withdrawing my amendment to the tax reconciliation bill which affects Section 1203 of the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act, I hope that bringing this issue to the attention of the Senate, will allow us to address this important issue at a later time.

Section 1203 of the IRS Restructuring and Reform Act outlines 10 infractions for which IRS employees must be removed from employment. These areas of misconduct have become known as the “Ten Deadly Sins”. As of last year, a total of 109 violations of any of the ten infractions outlined in Section 1203 had been substantiated. Of those 109 infractions, 102 were of Section 1203(b)(8), which subjects employees to mandatory termination for failure to file their federal tax return on time.

I believe that all IRS employees should be required to file their tax returns on time and abide by the IRS Rules of Conduct. I also strongly believe that those who do not abide by the Rules of Conduct should be held accountable for their actions. However, it would seem that mandatory dismissal, rather than supervisory discretion in applying penalties for these infractions, is unduly harsh. This point becomes clear when we learn that IRS employees have been and continue to face the loss of their jobs for filing their income tax returns late, even when they have a tax refund coming to them. There are no other taxpayers who are subject to any penalty for the late filing of a tax return with a refund due.

Close to a thousand charges have been filed against IRS employees under section 1203(b)(6), which subjects employees to mandatory terminations for "harassment of, or retaliations against, a taxpayer." The latest data available shows that of the 830 investigations of these charges completed by the Inspector General for Tax Administration, none have been substantiated. Yet even though it appears that the overwhelming majority of these charges filed have been unfounded, the employees themselves must live under the constant fear of losing their jobs for sometimes more than a year, while the investigation of these charges goes on.

It would not be an overstatement to say that Section 1203 is having a chilling effect on the ability of employees at the IRS to perform their jobs. This notion is reflected in the fact that there has been a steadily declining audit-rate of non-compliant taxpayers. Making a minor change in the current law, as my amendment does, will do much to enable the overwhelming majority of honest, hardworking IRS agents to perform their duties in an efficient and professional manner.

I believe that my proposal strikes a reasonable balance which will permit IRS employees to do their jobs better, but will also maintain termination as a punishment for an employee who willfully harasses a taxpayer. As we continue to debate this reconciliation bill, which will make hundreds of changes to the tax code, I hope that we will make sure that the employees who we entrust to enforce these new laws are given the tools to do what they need to do.

While I now withdraw my amendment, I hope that this issue can be discussed by this chamber in the very near future.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I regret that I opposed a number of amendments to this legislation that I might otherwise support because they are not adequately offset.

The legislation before us already puts us at risk of raiding the Medicare and Social Security Trust Funds. We spent much of the past 8 years working to climb out of a deficit ditch, and this bill steers us right back toward it.

This is not authorizing legislation subject to the further scrutiny of an appropriations process. Unlike other measures that come before us, this bill and the amendments to it have a direct and immediate impact on our budget.

A number of amendments have been offered to this measure that, while laudatory in their goals, further aggravate the fiscal position in which the underlying bill puts us. Without language offsetting the cost of the proposal, the amendments only add to the already fiscally irresponsible cost of the bill.

For that reason, I have opposed many otherwise worthy amendments.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I was pleased to cosponsor Senator SCHUMER's amendment which was offered last week to help families with the cost of college tuition. Although the amendment did not pass, I wanted to state for the record the reasons for my support.

The decisions we make today must reflect the enduring values we hold as a society. Two of those values are the ideas of opportunity and equality for every citizen. In today's complicated society, opportunity and equality depend in large part upon the level of a person's education. In other words, the more and the better an education one gets, the greater the chances that person will succeed economically. The College Board tells us that "while the cost of college may be imposing to many families, the cost associated with not going to college is likely to be much greater." Indeed, over a lifetime, the gap in earning potential between a high school diploma and a college degree exceeds $1 million.

In addition, higher education is absolutely central to our ability to maintain our nation's global competitiveness. Highly trained, skilled workers making good wages are the engine that powers our economy, both because of the work they do and the revenue they generate as buyers and sellers of goods and services.

Yet, the cost of higher education is an increasing burden for American families. Since 1980, tuition at both public and private four-year colleges has increased on average more than 115 percent over inflation. A middle-income family spends an average of 17 percent of its annual income to send a child to a four-year public college today. If the family sends a child to a private college, the cost increases to an average of 44 percent of the family's income.

A family's financial status should not be the determining factor in whether a young person joins society with the advantages of higher education or not. Yet, families are understandably anxious about whether they will be able to provide their children with that educational advantage. They are similarly anxious about the debt burden their children may have to bear after graduation to pay off student loans.

America's families need help. This is why I introduced S. 888, the College Tuition Assistance Act of 2001, which is designed to provide tax relief to middle and lower income families who are struggling to pay these costs, both while a student is in school and after graduation when student loans come due.

Senator SCHUMER's amendment is an important step toward providing families with this type of help compared to what is now in the Finance Committee's bill. It increases the size of the tax deduction families may take to offset the burden of tuition payments. Senator SCHUMER's amendment also provides a larger tax credit for graduates paying interest on their student loans. Although the amendment failed, it recognized a critical issue.

Educational costs are difficult to bear, even for families who make a decent living. My bill would provide more relief to middle income families and would also extend a hand to lower income families, whose needs are far greater than the aid they receive to put their children through college. My bill also would provide relief sooner. So, I was pleased to support Senator SCHUMER's amendment and I intend to continue to fight for these provisions which would make a real difference for America's families.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. President, we have been down this road before. As a Congressman in 1981, I supported the Reagan tax cuts that were promoted as a cure-all for the economic ailments of that era. Instead, they led to year after year of increasing deficits, exploding national debt, and a series of tax increases enacted to stem the tide of red ink.

With fiscal discipline and a growing economy, we reversed that tide just 3 years ago. Since 1998, we have enjoyed surpluses instead of deficits. And we have been paying down the debt, reducing the massive interest costs that have burdened America's taxpayers.

But now the Government is about to dig into our pockets, pull out our credit cards again, and go stumbling down that road toward economic calamity. And—with smoke and mirrors—some are trying to hide the costs we'll incur along the way. By manipulating the starting and phase-in dates for the various tax cuts—and setting unlikely expiration dates on some of them—this bill is jury-rigged to fit within the $1.35 trillion allotted for tax cuts over 11 years in the Senate's budget resolution.

But, the fact is, it won't fit once we consider other tax breaks already in the pipeline and spending priorities such as defense, education and prescription drug benefits. And this bill does not guarantee to pay down the national debt.

Every Senator in this Chamber believes we will enact additional tax relief, and provide for our Nation's most pressing needs over the next decade. The additional untold story of this legislation is that—even if that were possible—the cost of this tax plan would triple in the next decade. Unless you believe we are simply going to take back the tax cuts we are promising today, you are talking about a price tag exceeding $4 trillion in the decade from 2012 to 2022—when the baby boomers will all be retired.

Is that how we are going to provide for prescription drugs under Medicare and shore up Social Security? By raiding their trust funds?

Is that how we are going to protect our environment, improve our Nation's schools and strengthen our military? By giving them fewer resources, instead of more, in the years to come?

And is that how we are going to keep our economy growing and prospering? By returning to deficit spending, ever-increasing national debt, and costly interest payments on that debt?

That is the road we are headed down. I have been down it before, and I'm convinced it's the wrong road. I am choosing instead to take the conservative road of fiscal responsibility.

I strongly support responsible tax cuts of nearly $1 trillion that would give Americans the relief they deserve. I voted for such cuts as some of us tried to amend both this bill and the earlier budget resolution. Specifically, I support tax cuts that meet four criteria—tax cuts that (1) do not raid Social Security; (2) do not raid Medicare; and (3) provide relief from the marriage tax penalty now, not later; and (4) pay down the national debt.

Instead we are left with a tax package that is fiscally irresponsible.

With all due respect to Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS, we are about to vote on a tax bill that largely promises future relief based on future surpluses that may not materialize. It poses a serious threat to our economy because it will use up what surplus there is so we cannot pay down the national debt. And it seriously threatens our Medicare and Social Security trust funds—not only in 2012 but beginning next year.

I promised the people of Florida I would do everything in my power to enact a substantial tax cut, which is balanced, in order to protect those trust funds and to continue paying down the national debt. I promised I would fight for a prescription drug benefit, and that I would work for better schools, a clean environment and a strong defense. I intend to keep those promises, and I must vote against this bill.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to the tax bill currently being debated on the floor today. Everybody agrees that we need tax relief. But we must do it in a way that is affordable, responsible, and ensures that we are on sound fiscal footing. Unfortunately, the Republican tax cut does none of these things. I will vote against this tax cut for three reasons: It is irresponsible, premature, and it does not meet the compelling needs of our Nation.

The Republican tax cut is irresponsible because it mortgages our future for lavish tax cuts. It is premature, there is no way to guarantee that the Republican tax cut will be here today and that the American people can count on it tomorrow.

Unfortunately, the size of this tax cut will put an extra strain on this country's cashflow just when we will need it the most, when baby boomers will retire.

Finally, this tax bill makes it impossible to meet the compelling needs of our Nation. It does not have an economic stimulus in 2001; the size of the tax cut will make it difficult to make balloon payments coming due on Social Security and Medicare; and it will be extremely unlikely that the money will be there to create a meaningful and reliable Medicare prescription drug benefit.

I support the Democratic alternative because it ensures that we are meeting the day to day needs of our constituents and the long range needs of our country. What does the democratic alternative provide? First, Democrats want to put $300 in your checkbook right away, today, this year. Or $600 per family. This would provide an immediate economic stimulus and help all Americans who are struggling to pay for skyrocketing gasoline and energy prices.

Democrats would also provide tax cuts for all income taxpayers by reducing the 15 percent tax bracket to 10 percent on the first $6,000 income. Additionally, we include significant marriage penalty and estate tax relief, we raise IRA and 401(k) contribution limits, double the child tax credit, make college tuition tax deductible and provide resources to schools and communities modernize and build new facilities. I am also pleased that our bill includes an extension of the adoption tax credit and makes permanent the Research and Development tax credit. The democratic plan is balanced, fiscally prudent, and leaves resources so we can continue to pay down our debt, and make the balloon payments coming due on Social Security and Medicare.

Unfortunately, the Republican tax plan papers over the fiscal realities of our country. We need to get back to basics, to save lives, save communities, and save America. What do I mean by this? Well, while we are in the midst of debating bloated tax cuts, we have Marines who are on food stamps. I don't see how we can meet our national security commitment, do a $1.35 trillion tax cut, and have Marines on food stamps. The Marines say "semper fi," "always faithful." They are faithful to the United States and we have to be always faithful to the Marine Corps and to the military. That's why we must ensure that we have the resources to invest in core infrastructure programs, like the military, that will pay dividends in the future.

Democrats want to put money in people's pocketbooks, but we want to do it is a way that it is here today and in people's checkbooks tomorrow. We believe we're on the side of people who are middle class and those who are working their heart out to be able to get there.

I hope that my colleagues will join me in opposing the Republican tax cut. We should do what's responsible, honest, and allows us to meet the compelling human need in our nation today. The democratic alternative will put us on the right track to doing just that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I had intended to offer an amendment to H.R. 1836, the Reconciliation Tax Act, that would have called for a $1.7 billion increase in veterans health care funding. Senators BINGAMAN, WELLSTONE, DURBIN, and DORGAN supported my amendment. While I will refrain from offering my amendment today, I will nonetheless continue to fight for improved health care for our Nation's heroes.

In a few short days, Members of Congress will return home to participate in Memorial Day services around the country. There is no shortage of rhetoric to go around Congress in support of veterans benefits and veterans health care.

However, when the time comes for real decisions to be made on the prioritization of veterans issues in the budget, too many Members of this body are missing in action. A case in point occurred during debate of the budget resolution. Despite bipartisan support for increased funding for veterans health care in both the House and the Senate, the budget conference report include funding levels below that proposed by the administration.

Last week, I spoke with veterans from South Dakota who expressed their concern that the current level of funding in the budget conference report could mean long waits for appointments and reductions or cuts in vital services. These situations are not unique to my State and affect every VA hospital and clinic in the country.

When the current level of funding in the budget conference, the VA could be forced to delay and even deny needed care and slash vital programs. Long term care and other provisions authorized under the Millennium Health Care Act must be fully funded in order to be carried out. The VA is faced with salary increases and inflation which alone consume over $1 billion of health care dollars.

The Paralyzed Veterans of America, PVA, noted that the budget conference report "pays a grave disservice to the sacrifice of the men and women who have served this Nation. By providing fewer resources than was provided in the House-passed version, or the Senate-passed version, the conference report breaks faith with veterans. By providing fewer dollars than even the Administration's inadequate request for health care and benefits delivery programs, the conference report calls into question the commitment of this Congress to sick and disabled veterans."

The Veterans of Foreign Wars, VFW, described the budget conference report as "sadly inadequate" and unable to cover "uncontrollable expenses such as health-care cost inflation, implementation of the congressionally mandated Millennium Health Care Act and other pressing initiatives." The Disabled American Veterans, DAV, and AMVETS noted that an additional $1.7 billion would provide necessary resources to meet the needs of the men and women who have served our nation and rely upon the VA for the health care they need.

With an additional $1.7 billion, we will have the resources for a VA veterans health care budget that can adequately offset years of underfunding, the higher costs of medical care caused by consumer inflation, medical care inflation, wage increases, and legislation passed by Congress. Only with this additional funding will the VA be able to address the treatment of Hepatitis C, emergency medical services, increased cost due to medical inflation, and long-term care initiatives.

The Independent Budget, coauthored by AMVETS, the DAV, PVA, and the VFW, highlights the need to increase funding in a number of important health care initiatives including: an additional $523 million needed for mental health care; and additional $848 million necessary for long-term care; and additional $25 million needed to restore the Spinal Cord Injury program; and an additional $75 million to help homeless veterans.

The budget conference report is clearly inadequate to meet the needs of sick and disabled veterans. It is unacceptable that while the House provided an increase, and the Senate truly met the needs of the VA, we are left with a figure that is below the amount found in either resolution, below the amount recommended by the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, below the amount initially requested by VA Secretary Principi, and far below the amount recommended by the Independent Budget.

The amount in the conference report fails to meet mandatory salary increases due to inflation, fails to meet medical care inflation, and returns us to the days of inadequate budgets to meet the needs of veterans. Our country's heroes deserve better, and I encourage my colleagues to honor their service by supporting increased funding for veterans health care.

I ask unanimous consent that letters of support for increased veterans health care be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, DC, May 17, 2001.

Hon. TIM JOHNSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: It is my understanding that you will be offering an amendment to secure an additional $1.7 billion in funding for Department of Veterans Affairs' Medical Programs. On behalf of the 2.7 million members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and our Ladies Auxiliary, I would like to take this opportunity to express our support for your amendment.

In partnership with other major Veterans Service Organizations, we produced the annual Independent Budget for VA where have identified the need for a minimum increase of $2.6 billion in VA's medical care account over FY 2001. The budget resolution for FY 2002 adopted by Congress has seen fit to prescribe a sadly inadequate $1 billion increase. If allowed to stand the VA medical care account would not even be able to cover uncontrollable expenses such as health-care cost inflation, implementation of the congressionally mandated Millennium Health Care Act and other pressing initiatives.

Your amendment would allow the VA to carry out its mission of providing timely access to quality healthy care for America's sick and disabled veterans.

We of the VFW, thank you for efforts on behalf of our nation's veterans.

Sincerely,

ROBERT E. WALLACE,
Executive Director.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,
Washington, DC, May 17, 2001.

Hon. TIM JOHNSON,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: On behalf of the more than one million members of the Disabled American Veterans (DAV), I am writing to you to express our support for your amendment that would increase Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) health care funding to the level recommended by the Independent Budget (IB) for fiscal year (FY) 2002.

The Congressional Budget Resolution, H. Con. Res. 83, provides a discretionary spending increase of $1 billion. This recommended amount would not even cover the costs of mandated salary increases and the effects of inflation. The IB has identified an increase for VA health care of $2.6 billion over the amount provided in FY 2001. This recommended increase would provide the resources necessary for the VA to meet the needs of the men and women who have served our nation, and rely upon the VA for the health care they need.

Thank you for your efforts on behalf of our nation's sick and disabled veterans. Again, we strongly support your amendment to increase the amount available for VA health care up to the level recommended in the IB.

Sincerely,

ARMANDO C. ALBARRAN,
National Commander.

AMERICAN VETERANS,
Lanham, MD, May 18, 2001.

Hon. TIM JOHNSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: AMVETS fully supports your proposed amendment to increase funding for veterans hospital care and medical services.

Your proposed amendment would increase the budget for veterans health care by $1.7 billion above the Fiscal Year 2002 Budget proposed by the administration. It meets the level of funding suggested by The Independent Budget as necessary for the VA to live up to our country's commitment to veterans and their families.

Without an increase in VA health care, resources will be insufficient to meet the needs of the men and women who have served our Nation, and rely upon the VA for the health care they need.

Thank you for your continuing efforts to support our nation's veterans. We believe the price is not too great for the value received.

Sincerely,

DAVID E. WOODBURY,
Executive Director.

PARALYZED VETERANS OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, May 18, 2001.

Hon. TIM JOHNSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: On behalf of the Paralyzed Veterans of America (PVA) I am writing to offer our support of your amendment to H.R. 1836 that would add $1.7 billion for veterans' health care. This amount, when added to the $1 billion provided in discretionary funding in the recently passed budget resolution, would bring veterans' funding close to the $2.7 billion recommended by the Independent Budget, which is co-authored by PVA.

The health care requirements of veterans were not met in the budget resolution. After realizing increases above the Administration's request in the House of Representatives, and achieving increases in the Senate that would have matched the Independent Budget's request, veterans' funding was cut back down to the level advocated by the Administration. This amount is simply not enough to meet the health care needs of sick and disabled veterans.

That is why your amendment is so essential—it would begin the process of meeting the true needs of the health care system dedicated to veterans. Again, PVA thanks you for offering this important amendment.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH L. FOX, Sr.,
National President.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am in strong opposition to the tax cut bill that the Senate has been considering over the past few days. I am sorry to say that this legislation fails the basic tests of responsible government. It is fiscally irresponsible to use $1.35 trillion of the surpluses projected over the next 10 years to pay for a tax cut, since these estimated surpluses may never materialize. Even the Congressional Budget Office, CBO, acknowledges that there is considerable uncertainty in their forecasts. In fact, within the CBO's estimates, they suggest that even a 1 percent per year slower growth in GDP would reduce the 10-year surplus by $2.4 trillion. With that much uncertainty, this tax cut is too large and risks squandering the fiscal discipline that has been so hard fought and earned over the past several years. With these excessive revenue losses, we will certainly sacrifice our ability to adequately provide for critical programs in the areas of health care, education, the environment, transportation infrastructure, defense and further paying down of the national debt. Now, many of the supporters of this legislation also tout the theory that government should be run like a business. However, no chief executive of a corporation would allow dividends to be locked in for 10 years, when earnings forecasts are so unclear. In addition, no corporation would ever submit a budget that would have critical elements missing, such as is the case with defense spending in this budget.

The tax cut also fails the test of responsible budgeting. The bill before the Senate is so backloaded that the full costs don't appear in the 10-year estimates provided by the Senate Finance Committee. Analysis by the CBO and the General Accounting Office, GAO, shows that the retirement of the baby boom generation will put enormous pressure on the budget starting a little over a decade from now. This is at the exact time when the full cost of the tax cut will be felt and will almost surely aggravate the deficits that many analysts expect to emerge at that point. Simply put, this bill is far more expensive than it appears. For example, 60 percent of the costs in the legislation don't occur until the second half of this decade. Some of the most expensive provisions, such as the full repeal of the estate tax, don't appear until the last year, so their real costs are truly masked. Other provisions expire in 5 years, such as Alternative Minimum Tax relief and tuition tax deduction, so their full cost is hidden. The effect of these sunset provisions also ensure that these issues will have to be considered again by a future Congress. Some analysts have also suggested that if all of the provisions in the bill were effective immediately, the full cost over 10 years would likely be over $2 trillion, while the costs in the next 10 years could exceed $4 trillion. Lastly, this legislation is a sham as it purports to include a complete tax package for the next decade, when realistically, many more tax items that are expiring shortly, otherwise known as "extenders," will have to be added down the road. Again, far too much money is in play here while budgetary gimmicks and tricks are dictating the process.

This tax cut is also markedly unfair. Cuts in marginal tax rates above the 15 percent bracket and repeal of the estate tax benefit a small group of taxpayers who have experienced remarkable growth in income and wealth over the past 5 years. However, the legislation appears to neglect one important group of people: those taxpayers in the 15 percent bracket. Although the proponents of this bill would suggest that most taxpayers are in the 28 percent bracket or higher, the facts are otherwise. Research by the Democratic staff of the Joint Economic Committee and the Budget Committee point out that an overwhelming majority of those who pay income tax are in the 15 percent bracket, close to 75 percent, and would get no benefit from the upper bracket rate cuts in this bill. Now, the bill does provide a tax cut for everyone who pays income tax by creating a new 10 percent tax bracket immediately, albeit a minuscule one for those in the lowest bracket. In addition, the bill makes the child credit refundable, and in a manner that reduces marginal tax rates for many working families with children. Both of those provisions are worthwhile and should in fact be expanded. Nonetheless, Citizens for Tax Justice, CTJ, has provided an analysis of the legislation's rate cuts, and many of its findings are disturbing, to say the least. Some of these include: the top one percent of all taxpayers, with income of $373,000 or more, would receive one-third of the entire tax cut; the top one percent would receive an average yearly tax cut of over $20,000, while the bottom 20 percent would receive an average yearly cut of $64; and the middle 20 percent of taxpayers, incomes ranging from $27,000 to $44,000, would receive 9 percent of the tax cut, an average of about $600 per year.

One prominent example of the unfairness in this tax bill is the repeal of the estate tax. Supporters of this legislation perpetuate the myth that the estate tax is a "death tax." The truth is that 98 percent of Americans face no tax liability under the estate tax when they die. In fact, the repeal of the estate tax takes away budget resources that could be used to pay down the debt and increase national saving, and it uses those resources to benefit a tiny group of very wealthy taxpayers. The effect on the Treasury will be astounding: although the Finance Committee estimates the estate tax portion of the bill to cost $146 billion over 10 years, because this provision is backloaded, the real costs will come after full repeal in 2011, costing almost $1 trillion over the next 10 years. The impact on states will also be overwhelming. A majority of the states use a "pickup" system for their estate tax, whereby they essentially receive a portion of the Federal estate tax receipts. I know that in my State of Rhode Island, the estate tax accounted for $34.2 million in state revenue for fiscal year 2000. What can $34.2 million pay for? In fact, it can pay for 681 more police officers, or 729 more firefighters, or 575 more elementary school teachers. If the estate tax is repealed, States like Rhode Island will no doubt have to make up the shortfall in revenue by raising State taxes or cutting their budgets. Total State revenue loss when the estate tax is fully repealed could exceed $9 billion. Toward what end is this repeal aimed? In 1999, Rhode Island had 134 estates that were subject to the estate tax, 15 of which were estates of $5 million or more. That is out of a total of about 486,000 taxpayers. Although the numbers for other States will fluctuate based on their size, we are again talking about a very small proportion of our whole population. That is why I have supported an alternative that would reform, rather than repeal the estate tax system. By raising the tax exemption levels to $4 million for individuals and $8 million for couples, almost all family-owned farms and businesses will be erased from the estate tax rolls. However, the tax would remain on the largest estates that have the ability, and the responsibility, to pay for the enormous wealth they have been fortunate enough to acquire.

To put things into perspective, the supporters of this bill and the Bush administration are hoping to pass a huge tax cut and increase military spending, while relying on rosy estimates of our economy 10 years down the line. Much of this debate recalls an earlier era during which Congress and the Reagan Administration attempted to do the same thing. Why are we rushing to pass a tax cut that is even more irresponsibly constructed than the 1981 tax cut; a tax cut which caused spiraling deficits and mounting debt in the 1980s and early 1990s? This bill takes the wrong approach and it is irresponsible. There is an approach we can take to provide meaningful and targeted tax relief to hard working American families, while ensuring that we have the resources to pay down the debt and invest more fully in our nation's environment, health care, education and other critical priorities. Sadly, the legislation before us rejects that balanced approach and embraces a policy which will threaten our prosperity and undermine our ability to respond to the needs of working American families.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise to support this tax cut bill, though not with great enthusiasm and not without great trepidation. It is clear that a balanced tax cut is justified given the massive budget surplus we are experiencing. Whether this is that tax cut is a different question.

We have heard much this week about not letting the perfect be the enemy of the good. We have gone beyond that point with this bill. The debate now is whether we will let the good be the enemy of the acceptable.

The booming economy of the last few years has resulted in exploding tax revenues and growing budget surpluses. These surpluses present great opportunity and great risk. There is the opportunity to invest in unmet national needs; education, health care, retirement security, agriculture, child care. And there is opportunity to return some tax dollars to the hard working families whose productivity has driven our solid economic performance. As Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has stated, a tax cut gets resources to those who know best how to take care of their families, the taxpayers themselves.

But with these opportunities come great risks. We are at risk of putting too much faith in multi-year projections of ever-growing surpluses. We are at risk of locking in revenue losses and deficits with which future Congresses and generations will have to grapple. The $1.35 trillion tax cut comes dangerously close to threatening the trust fund surpluses that protect Social Security and Medicare. That is why I cosponsored an amendment to put in place a "trigger" that would delay scheduled tax cuts if the trust fund surpluses were violated. That is also why I supported several attempts to bring the total tax cut number down and reserve some of those funds for spending priorities or debt reduction. Unfortunately, none of these amendments was accepted.

What was accepted, at the insistence of a groups of Democratic and Republican moderate Senators, was a sunset that ends all the tax cuts instituted in this bill after 10 years. At minimum, that will force Congress to reexamine the wisdom of the policies we put in place today and adjust them to fit with the economic and budget circumstances of tomorrow.

The other risk we face is passing a tax bill that tilts too much toward those who already have so much. I would have preferred a bill that included more relief for middle and lower income tax payers, and I supported numerous amendments to expand the tax benefits for these working families. None of those amendments passed.

That is not to say that this bill does not contain significant tax relief for these families. The provisions that expand and make refundable the child tax credit will make a real difference in the lives of millions of children struggling now in families living at or near the poverty line. These are gains that were not included in the House passed bill and that must be retained in the Conference Report to make the final bill acceptable. In addition, the Senate bill includes significant tax incentives for those who send their children to college and those trying to save for retirement. These too must be retained.

And finally, the bill contains a small provision on which I have worked for several years, the Child Care Infrastructure Tax Credit. This gives a modest tax incentive to employers who choose to invest in child care for their employees. This Nation clearly faces a crisis level shortage in quality child care—and quality child care is often the difference between work and welfare, between healthy children and struggling families. We win as a Nation and as an economy when we get employers involved in creating and supporting early childhood teachers and facilities.

These are all good reasons to vote for this bill. But there is another reason that overwhelms these all.

I am a Democrat who supports tax cuts. I am a moderate at a time when political power is wobbling from right to left. It is a certainty that a tax bill will be signed into law this year. If those like myself say "no" now, and push away from the table, we may be able to make some lofty political statements in time for the six o'clock news. But we take Democratic principles and the interests of working families with us. And I am not ready to do that.

So I vote in favor of this bill today with the hope and expectation that it remains a bill that benefits working families, students, retirees, and children tomorrow. And I commend Chairman GRASSLEY and the ranking member, Senator BAUCUS, for the clear effort and good faith with which they put together this bill.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I support a meaningful tax cut that provides all Americans with financial relief as quickly as possible, but I can not in good conscience support the bill before us today. The decision the Senate is faced with is not whether we should have a tax cut—no one can doubt that Democrats and Republicans alike want a tax cut. Rather, the question is how can we create a tax cut that is fair to the majority of working people and still have enough resources for other critical national priorities?

During the Senate's consideration of this bill, I supported a $900 million tax package that provides broad relief to all Americans—across the income spectrum—while ensuring sufficient funds for continued debt reduction and important programs like a Medicare prescription drug benefit. Unfortunately, the tax bill that we are on the brink of passing here today is significantly too large and is heavily skewed toward the most wealthy. If budget surpluses fail to materialize as projected, this bill will threaten our ability to fund urgent national priorities such as education and road construction, and could force us to dip into the Medicare and Social Security Trust Funds in the coming year just as the Baby Boomers begin to retire.

Mr. President, this bill is simply too large, given the enormous uncertainty of long-term budget projections. I believe that both President Bush's $1.6 trillion plan and this $1.35 trillion plan jeopardize our economic future and the long-term solvency of the Medicare and Social Security Trust Funds.

The facts are stark: Social Security payments will exceed income in 2015, and Medicare payments exceed income in 2010. We will be forced to tap into the Social Security Trust Fund principal in 2025 and the Medicare Trust Fund principal in 2017. In 2037, the Social Security Trust Fund will be exhausted, and the Medicare Trust fund will be exhausted even earlier, in 2025. I believe this tax bill jeopardizes the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare. These programs are fundamental for our seniors, and we have an obligation to ensure that both the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds are protected before enacting massive tax cuts.

This tax bill is even larger than it appears, because it is backloaded in order to keep the real cost of the overall package hidden. Estate tax repeal does not occur until 2011, so its full cost is not included in the Budget Resolution numbers. Marriage penalty relief—which to me should be a higher priority than estate tax repeal because it helps all married taxpayers across-the-board—does not begin to phase in until 2006. Because of these late phase-ins, the true cost of this tax plan will not be apparent until the second 10 years. While the cost of the tax plan in the first 10 years is an estimated $1.35 trillion, the cost explodes in the second 10 years to $4 trillion.

The simple question we must ask is this: If we cannot afford these tax cuts now, then how will we afford them in the following decade, just as the Baby Boomers enter their retirement years?

There are other gimmicks in the tax bill designed to make the tax cut's impact look smaller than it actually is. For example, the tuition deduction sunsets in 2005, in order to keep the cost of the overall bill within the $1.35 trillion limit. But we all know from experience that the Congress will certainly renew this popular deduction in 2005 when it expires, so the relatively limited price tag for this provision is intentionally misleading.

This bill also fails to address the need to reform the alternative minimum tax (AMT). AMT was designed to make sure the very richest people paid their fair share of taxes, but as a result of this bill, almost 40 million mostly middle income taxpayers will actually pay substantially more in AMT by the end of the decade. This is a problem that will have to be dealt with in the next few years, or much of the tax relief in this bill will be nullified. Real AMT reform will cost several hundred billion dollars—an expense which is not accounted for in this tax bill.

Further, the majority has already asserted that it intends to pass additional corporate tax cuts this session. As large as this tax package is, the final figure will surely grow.

Another fundamental problem with this bill is that the lion's share of the tax relief it contains goes to the wealthiest Americans. Estate tax repeal was included in the bill, despite the fact that 98 percent of Americans who die are not subject to the estate tax and pass their estate on to their heirs tax free. Indeed, only 47,000 taxpayers in the entire country even pay the estate tax each year, and half of all estate taxes are paid by the wealthiest 0.1 percent of Americans. According to Responsible Wealth, the estate tax is repealed under this bill in 2011 at a cost of $60 billion—which effectively means we will need to tap into the Medicare Trust Fund in order to meet our obligations.

State and local taxes may need to be raised to make up for the loss of state estate tax revenues, which are also eliminated by this tax bill. Under the federal estate tax, taxpayers are allowed a credit up to a certain amount for payment of estate taxes, and many states, like West Virginia, tax up to the amount of the credit. If the estate tax is repealed, the credit will be eliminated as well, and West Virginia would lose over $20 million in revenue a year that is being used to fund critical state programs.

Another way this tax bill benefits the very wealthy is the cut in the top rate from 39.6 percent to 36 percent. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the cost of this cut will be $114 billion. This is one of the more expensive provisions in the bill—but the top rate only takes effect at $297,000. So very few taxpayers, including only 0.3 percent of West Virginians, actually receive any benefit from it.

The Senate version of the tax plan does make some improvements in terms of fairness of the distribution of tax cuts. I strongly supported a provision to expand the Earned Income Tax Credit, so that families earning between $13,000–$16,000 a year will get the full EITC assistance. I also cosponsored Senator SNOWE's amendment to give partial refundability of the enhanced child credit so that families with children can benefit from this tax cut. The bill gives families earning over $10,000 a 15 percent child credit, making the child credit partially refundable.

Both of these provisions are improvements, but they do not make up for a tax package that is otherwise unfair to our state, and an unnecessary bonanza for only the wealthiest. The provisions for low-income families and children account for just 5 percent of the $1.35 trillion package.

In addition, the low income improvements of this bill don't even benefit all families with children. Nearly 68,000 children in West Virginia won't be helped by the partial refundability provision because with incomes of less than $10,000 their families still do not "earn enough."

West Virginia taxpayers without children would receive little tax relief under the tax bill, according to Citizens for Tax Justice. The bill does nothing to relieve the real federal tax burdens faced by average West Virginians, who pay not only income taxes, but high payroll taxes and federal excise taxes.

During the Senate consideration of this bill, I offered an amendment to put a Medicare prescription drug benefit on equal footing with the tax cut for the wealthiest Americans—those in the uppermost income bracket. My amendment required that we enact a universal and affordable Medicare outpatient prescription drug benefit before the income tax cuts for the very wealthiest go into effect. The amendment was defeated 48–51, on a mostly party-line vote.

I sincerely believe my amendment would have put positive pressure on Congress to enact the Medicare prescription drug benefit we all promised our constituents. The vote tells me that many Members understand very well that the size of this tax cut threatens our ability to pass a Medicare prescription drug benefit.

In sum, the overall size of this tax package jeopardizes our economic future and the future solvency of Society Security and Medicare for today's workers and for our children. While the Senate version of the tax bill is an improvement over the House and Bush plan, too much of the tax cut still goes to the wealthiest, while hardworking West Virginia taxpayers—seniors, families with children, married couples, and singles—receive little or virtually no benefit. For these reasons, I cannot support this legislation.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I will vote against this tax bill because it is not fiscally responsible. This enormous tax cut may end up raiding the Medicare and Social Security Trust Fund balances. It risks a return to the annual budget deficits Congress worked so hard to eliminate. It will cause our Nation to miss what may be a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to put our fiscal house in order by paying down debt, strengthening Social Security, and modernizing Medicare. And it does not fairly distribute its benefits. For these reasons, I must oppose it.

This is the most momentous budgetary vote in two decades. For with this vote, Congress appears poised to turn its back on 8 years of fiscal responsibility. With this vote, Congress appears willing to return to the deficit spending days of the 1980s.

I do believe that taxpayers deserve tax relief. With the favorable surpluses before us, we should cut taxes. I supported Senator CONRAD's proposal to cut taxes by $745 billion over the next 10 years. With its associated interest costs, that package would have devoted roughly $900 billion to tax relief.

But the tax cut in this conference report is too large relative to the surpluses that economists have projected. It seeks to devote $1.35 trillion to this one purpose. Interest costs could add another $400 billion to the cost.

We should not commit to tax cuts of this size before the projections of future surplus dollars have proved real, before we have ensured the long-term solvency of the vital Medicare system, before we have brought that program up-to-date with needed prescription drug and long-term-care benefits, and before we have done one single thing to prepare the vital Social Security safety net for the impending retirement of the baby boom generation.

With this bill, the Congress appears headed toward repeating the fiscal mistake it committed in 1981. Recall that back in 1981, they had surplus projections, too. In President Reagan's first budget, incorporating his major tax cut, the administration projected a $28 billion surplus in the fifth year, 1986. In the actual event, the Federal Government ran up a $221 billion deficit in 1986.

The 1980s saw the accumulation of more than $1.5 trillion in deficits and the tripling of the Federal debt held by the public. The Congress's decision to cut taxes too deeply in 1981 thus robbed the Nation of fiscal policy tools, and unduly constrained the Federal Reserve Bank in its monetary policy.

We risk committing that same error again today. As I have noted, the bill before us will cost at least $1.35 trillion in its first 10 years. And during this bill's second 10 years, the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities estimates that it will cost more than $4 trillion.

And those costs will come just as the Nation faces growing costs for Medicare and Social Security with the retirement of the baby boom generation. In their 2001 annual report, concluded under the Bush administration, the Trustees of the Medicare Hospital Insurance trust fund project that its costs will likely exceed projected revenues beginning in the year 2016. The Trustees say: "Over the long range, the HI Trust Fund fails by a wide margin to meet our test of financial balance. The sooner reforms are made the smaller and less abrupt they will have to be in order to achieve solvency through 2075."

Similarly, Social Security's Trustees remind us again this year that when the baby-boom generation begins to retire around 2010, "financial pressure on the Social Security trust funds will rise rapidly." The Trustees project that, as with Medicare, Social Security revenues will fall short of outlays beginning in 2016. The Trustees conclude: "We should be prepared to take action to address the OASDI financial shortfall in a timely way because, as with Medicare, the sooner adjustments are made the smaller and less abrupt they will have to be."

This bill robs the nation of resources to deal with these important challenges.

As well, the bill before us is tilted heavily toward high-income taxpayers. According to Citizens for Tax Justice, when this bill's tax cuts are fully phased in, the highest-income one percent of taxpayers would receive 35 percent of the benefits of the bill. The majority of taxpayers in the bottom three-fifths of the population would get only a little more than 15 percent of the bill's benefits.

When this bill's tax cuts are fully phased in, the one percent of taxpayers with the highest incomes would receive an average tax cut of more than $44,000, while taxpayers in the middle fifth of the population would receive an average tax cut of less than $600.

This is not a balanced bill. It is not balanced fiscally. And it is not fairly balanced in its benefits. I will therefore vote against it, and I urge my colleagues to vote against it as well.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, as we near completion of debate over this tax bill, I want to commend the Chairman of Finance Committee, Senator GRASSLEY, and the Ranking Democrat, Senator BAUCUS, for their good faith efforts to craft a tax bill and move it through the Finance Committee, that is no easy task, and I have enormous respect for their hard work and the extent to which they each listened to members from both sides of the aisle. I am particularly grateful to see that the Finance Committee included a proposal advocated by myself, Senator SNOWE, and Senator LINCOLN which would extend the child tax credit to perhaps as many as an additional 16 million children. The legislation's new child credit refundability provision amounts to nearly $70 billion in expanded relief for working families with children. That is truly an accomplishment.

Nevertheless, today we are considering more than a tax bill—and much more than a number of individual tax pieces. What we do here has consequence. Nothing happens in a policy vacuum, nothing happens that doesn't affect everything else we do for this economy, the choices we can and can not make for this country. This is more than just a tax bill. It is a blueprint for the next several years, and, as such, I am sorry to say it is a blueprint that jeopardizes the fiscal discipline that has been the foundation of the long-term economic growth our country has enjoyed in recent years.

This tax cut is one of the great lost opportunities of the last twenty years in American politics. I want a broad-based tax cut that reaches every American and I want it done in a way that's fiscally responsible. I'm not alone. We could have had that, instead, we have a tax cut that's based on projections that won't hold up and which I fear will, as a consequence, bring us back to deficit economics again in this country. It didn't have to be this way. No business in America pays out dividends to shareholders based on ten year profit projections—neither should the government.

As someone who worked hard to put the budget in the black, from Gramm-Rudman Hollings deficit reduction in 1986 when “balanced budget” was a dirty word for Democrats, to the tough vote in 1993, to the balanced budget in 1997, I can't stress enough how this vote takes the country in the wrong direction on the question of fiscal discipline.

President Bush has said over and over, it's your money, not the government's money. It's also your debt. Under the tax cut that's about to be sent to the floor all it takes is one dip in the economy, one blip in surplus projections, and we've returned to the days of deficit economics, and that means higher interest rates on student loans, on car loans, and on mortgages. It means we slow the economy. That's not fiscally responsible policy-making, and it's a departure from the course of fiscal conservatism that brought us the growth and prosperity of the last eight years.

We could have made a different choice. We could have had a one, a two, or a three year tax cut. We could have stimulated growth. If surpluses were here after that, we could have cut taxes again, and I've never seen a Congress that didn't like to cut taxes. But that's not what's happening here. Tax politics is trumping fiscal discipline and honest economic policy.

We know the history here, and we know what a departure this represents. In 1993, the Senate cast a difficult vote to commit the Congress and the country to getting the deficit under control. This tax bill, if passed, could well be the vote that casts away that fiscal discipline.

Last week, we voted on a budget resolution. That budget resolution is non-binding. But it gives us a framework for understanding how all the different pieces—the tax bill, discretionary spending, Social Security, Medicare, and debt reduction, will fit together. In so doing, the budget resolution made certain assumptions, assumptions regarding the economy and assumptions regarding spending.

First, the budget resolution is based on CBO's ten-year economic projections which are, overly optimistic and, by definition, hopelessly unreliable, as I will explain. Second, it assumes that nondefense spending will be held slightly below the rate of inflation for the next 10 years. We have not held spending to that level in decades. Third, it assumes that no additional funds will be needed for Social Security reform. I have yet to see a viable Social Security reform plan which did not need additional funds to address transitional costs. Fourth, although it did assume certain funds for Medicare, funding for a prescription drug benefit will have to compete with funding for overall Medicare reform. Finally, although it created a defense reserve fund, there was no money in the budget allocated for this purpose. It will have to compete with all other spending priorities.

Clearly, each of these assumptions deserves close scrutiny because they are the foundation for the tax cut we are considering.

A little over three years ago, in January of 1998, the Congressional Budget Office projected that the federal government would accumulate a 10-year unified surplus of $660 billion. While the January CBO report appeared only a few short months after the Asian financial crisis of 1997, its authors were careful to note that their ten-year projections were based not on cyclical effects, but rather on certain beliefs regarding the long-term prospects for the United States economy. The surplus estimates were driven by trends in underlying factors—important issues such as the demographics of the labor force, the rate of national savings, and growth of productivity levels in output per worker.

This January, once again, our Congressional Budget Office produced new estimates on what to expect over the next ten years. The economists projected the economy would grow at a rate of 2.4 percent in 2001, a full half a point higher than CBO had anticipated for 2001 in its budget outlook written only three years ago. Nevertheless, we find ourselves dealing with ten-year surplus projections not of $600 billion, but $5.6 trillion. From 1998 to 2001, the Congressional Budget Office increased its ten-year surplus projections by 5 trillion dollars. Allow me to repeat that statement. In three short years, the Congressional Budget Office has increased its ten-year surplus projections by 5 trillion dollars.

It begs the question, what has led the Congressional Budget Office to increase surplus projections by such a tremendous amount over the last three years? Is it the result of deficit reduction measures? Absolutely not. Over the past three years, discretionary spending has grown by an average rate of well over 4 percent. The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 slowed the growth of Medicare, but Social Security and Medicaid spending continue to increase.

Today, the same economists that predicted a 10-year surplus of $600 billion in 1998 have changed their assumptions regarding the economy's ability to grow. They assume that productivity growth will continue at levels far exceeding levels attained from the mid-1970s through the mid-1990s. They assume that productivity growth will be well above its average over the last 50 years.

Yet, productivity levels already show signs of weakening. Productivity has dropped steadily since last summer. In the first quarter of this year, productivity recorded its first decline since 1995.

A surplus projection centered on an assumption that productivity growth will hold at the levels achieved over the last five years is not a conservative projection, and it is certainly not the stone on which Congress should engrave the largest nominal tax cut it has ever contemplated and bet the future of the US economy.

Indeed, the Congressional Budget Office acknowledges as much in their report. Their economists go to great lengths to warn of the pitfalls and dangers of budget forecasting. The January report devotes 24 pages to this very topic. Under one specific scenario modeled by CBO, their economists examine what would happen if the economy reverted to pre-1996 conditions, specifically, if: (1) productivity growth averages its historical rate of 1.5 percent, (2) Medicare and Medicaid spending grow a mere 1 percent faster than the baseline, and (3) increases in personal tax liabilities from phenomena such as recent capital gains realizations gradually fall to historical levels. In this instance, they estimate the budget surplus would fall from $5.6 trillion to $1.6 trillion. A full, four trillion dollars would be eliminated.

That scenario is far from a "doomsday" scenario. It simply assumes that productivity growth falls to historic levels, Medicare and Medicaid spending increase 1 percent, and capital gains realizations fall to historic levels. And it reduces the surplus by four trillion dollars.

Now I say to my colleagues, there is another piece of the surplus puzzle that just doesn't fit and that is the spending assumptions. Over the past 20 years, the difference in projected spending in the Congressional budget resolution for the next fiscal year and the actual amount of spending for the next fiscal year has averaged 3.3 percent. In other words, spending for fiscal year 2002 will probably be off by about 3.3 percent from the level anticipated in the budget resolution. Thus, with a $1.9 trillion budget, we're likely to be off by about $60 billion. And that's just next year.

Looking at the out-years, spending assumptions can be wildly inaccurate. Medicare spending is rising again, it increased by 3 percent in 2000. According to CBO, "Historically, Medicare's growth rate has varied widely, and such fluctuations are likely to continue." In 2000, Medicaid grew 2 percent faster than CBO projected. In addition, minor upturns in inflation can result in major spending increases because many mandatory program benefits, such as Social Security, are linked to the consumer price index. And we have yet to adequately address all of the problems the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 created for Medicare.

On the discretionary side, since the end of President Reagan's last term, domestic nondefense outlays have increased at a rate of 6 percent a year, those are our investments in education, the environment, transportation, children and other priorities. Much of that increase was balanced by declining defense expenditures. That's about to change. Does anyone really believe that a budget resolution which assumes that discretionary spending will rise at the rate of inflation over the next ten years is honest budgeting? Judging by the votes during Senate floor consideration of the budget resolution, it's not about to begin today.

Now let's take a look at what happens to the surplus if we make a much more realistic assumption about spending. For example, maybe we will lower nondefense spending growth from the 6 percent averaged since the end of Reagan's term to 5 percent. Let's give ourselves the benefit of the doubt and assume that the defense build-up leads to increases in defense of only 5 percent per year. Thus, discretionary spending increases 5 percent a year over the next 10 years. In effect, with lost interest savings, we would wipe out more than $1.1 trillion of the projected surplus.

So first we have a potential situation in which our 10-year surplus, due to faulty economic assumptions, has fallen from $5.6 trillion to $1.6 trillion. When we then figure in honest and realistic projections regarding spending growth, our actual 10-year surplus has now been reduced from 5.6 trillion to $500 billion. We have wiped out all of the Medicare surplus and we have wiped out about 80 percent of the Social Security surplus, and we still have not calculated the cost of the tax cut or Social Security reform.

Now combine that scenario with the tax cut before us. We are about to enact a $1.35 trillion tax cut and at the same time, we have done nothing to deal with fundamental issues resulting from mandatory spending and the retirement of the Baby Boom generation. Moreover, there exists the very real possibility that we will return to the days of deficit spending and ballooning federal debt.

And while it may make a nice sound bite to say that if we don't send the surplus back to the American people in a tax cut, Congress will waste it, no one can make that argument with a straight face unless they are willing to set forth a real plan to deal with the fundamental issues facing Social Security and Medicare. Our President has yet to submit a Social Security or Medicare reform plan and I don't see one on the schedule in the Ways and Means Committee or the Finance Committee.

Social Security's trustees reported in March that Social Security's tax income will fall short of Social Security's benefit payments beginning in 2016. Medicare's tax income will fall short of Medicare spending the same year. Social Security and Medicare's problems are related to the aging of the labor force. In the not-to-distant future, there will be too few workers in the workforce to maintain Social Security and Medicare as pay-as-you-go programs. These are not small problems.

In the case of Social Security, Congress will have to either reduce Social Security benefits, raise Social Security taxes, or find a third alternative. Individual accounts, partial privatization, or investment of Social Security funds in the stock market, even under the best of circumstances, regardless of how they are structured, will require use of large-scale additional funds to ensure that current and near retirees will not be penalized. But under the scenario I have outlined, there would be no General Treasury funds available and Social Security surpluses over the next ten years would be eliminated.

The same issues apply to Medicare. The Congressional budget resolution sets aside $300 billion in a Medicare Reserve Fund. However, that $300 billion is needed just to finance a decent prescription drug benefit. In addition, there will be substantial costs associated with reforming Medicare. This year's Trustees' Report showed that health care costs per capita will rise. But as I have demonstrated, the tax cut would place Medicare surpluses in jeopardy.

Dealing with the Social Security and Medicare's financial problems sooner rather than later minimizes the pain for beneficiaries and workers by allowing the government to address transitional costs before the problem reaches the breaking point.

Congress should be acting in a fiscally responsible way by addressing Social Security and Medicare's long-term problems while we have the opportunity, while the Federal government is operating under surpluses and not deficits.

Turning to the actual tax cut before us, regardless of how you feel about the bill's specific provisions, one glaring problem flows from the fact that most of the bill's provisions will not take effect for several years.

According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, the cost of the bill in 2011 will exceed the cost of the tax bill in the first three years combined. By the time we reach 2011, the cost of the Chairman's proposed tax cut will approach nearly $200 billion per year.

The most obvious example is the bill's estate tax relief provisions. Over the next five years, the bill would provide a total of $36 billion in estate tax relief. However, the bill does not actually repeal the estate tax until the year 2011, and, therefore, the revenue hit resulting from repeal of the estate tax will not actually occur until 2012, so its impact does not even appear in the revenue tables.

Thus, the bill repeals the estate tax in the same year that the Baby Boom generation will begin retire. Is that fiscal responsibility? The stark reality is that the cost of the tax cut will arrive just when we are least able to afford it.

The same problem applies throughout the legislation.

To make matters worse, because many of the bill's provisions will not take effect until the second five years, the costs of the tax bill escalates at a time when surplus estimates are the most unreliable, towards the end. And by back-loading the bill, we are ensuring that the costs of the tax cut will rise just when surpluses are most unreliable and our fiscal problems related to the aging of the population are truly emerging.

Finally, I say to my colleague, by passing this tax cut, we are effectively ensuring that the Federal debt will stop falling and start rising again. Under the Congressional Budget Office's January baseline, Federal debt, i.e., debt held by the public as well as debt owed to Federal trust funds such as Social Security and Medicare, will fall in each of the next five years. However, under the budget resolution Congress passed last week, Federal debt would soon be on the rise again. Even if you accept their assumptions about spending and the economy, after five years, Federal debt will be $600 billion higher than the CBO baseline. Over the full ten years of the budget resolution, Federal debt would increase by over $1 trillion, from $5.6 trillion in 2001 to $6.7 trillion in 2011.

And by using unrealistic economic and spending assumptions, as I have shown, they are ensuring that debt held by the public will rise. From 1969 to 1997, debt held by the public increased every year. Over the past three years, we reversed that trend. From 1997 through 2000, the Federal government retired $360 billion of debt held by the public. In the early 1990s, by enacting a real deficit reduction program, we were able to completely change the course of interest rates, inflation, and the economy.

Reducing publicly held debt means the government is buying back bonds, thereby freeing capital in private sector financial markets. As Federal Reserve Chairman Greenspan noted in Congressional testimony earlier this year, "a declining level of Federal debt is desirable because it holds down long-term real interest rates, thereby lowering the cost of capital and elevating private investment." Paying down publicly held debt results in lower interest rates and lower inflation. The result is lower home mortgage rates and lower auto loan rates for every American.

Paying down debt has also helped finance a high level of private sector investment at a time when personal savings rates are declining. By buying back bonds, more capital is available in domestic markets. It is that simple.

But under the tax cut we have before us today, the ability to reduce publicly held debt will be strained. Their numbers make unrealistic assumptions about the economy and unrealistic assumptions about spending. While only time will tell, I fear we are moving down the wrong path, one that reverses the progress made over the last eight years.

I acknowledge that the Chairman and Ranking Member have made great strides to ensure that their bill will benefit a broad spectrum of Americans. I particularly appreciate the fact that they included a $70 billion provision that Senators SNOWE, LINCOLN and I requested which will ensure that an additional 16 million children benefit from the expanded child credit.

Nevertheless, for all of the reasons I have outlined, I believe the evidence is clear, the long-term consequences of the proposed tax reduction will set back our economy and our nation. I want tax relief, but I don't believe in doing it at the expense of fiscal discipline. And that is why I would urge my colleagues to vote against this agreement, we can and should do better.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to the tax reconciliation legislation pending before the Senate. Unfortunately, this tax bill spends vast sums of money, based on shaky economic forecasts, and disguises its true cost by phasing in most of its tax relief far into the future. As a result, this legislation poses a real risk to our Nation's fiscal health without providing the tax relief Americans have been promised for years to come.

Let me begin by clearly stating that I am not opposed to responsible tax relief. I believe we can craft a fiscally responsible tax cut that does not endanger our economy and provides meaningful tax relief, including targeted measures, a component of across-the-board reductions, and an economic stimulus package.

That being said, I must oppose the massive tax bill before the Senate today for several reasons. Foremost among them is my deep concern that, if we pass this legislation, we will be repeating the mistake we made in 1981 and squandering the fiscal security we have worked so hard to achieve. In 1981, Congress complied with the President's request for a large tax cut. The Nation felt the negative effects of that tax cut for more than a decade, as Federal deficits grew and the national debt exploded. It took the country nearly 20 years to recover from that tax cut, and move from a period of record budget deficits, to economic prosperity and budget surpluses.

Today, we again have an opportunity to shape the course of our country for the better, and part of that course should include responsible tax cuts. I have supported proposals to devote a full third of our projected non-Social Security surplus, approximately $900 billion, to tax relief. It is my strong belief that we should devote a full third of the surplus to paying down our national debt. Simply put, if we don't take measures to reduce the debt in times of surplus, when will we? The remaining third of the surplus is needed to address the priorities I hear from the Marylanders I meet every day, access to healthcare, education, a prescription drug benefit in Medicare, protecting Social Security, enforcing our Nation's laws, addressing rising energy costs, and on and on.

A $1.35 trillion tax cut will not allow us to act on these crucial areas, particularly when it is based on a highly speculative ten-year forecast of our Nation's future revenues. This bill is based on economic projections of a $2.6 trillion non-Social Security surplus. That surplus is not cash-in-hand being held by the Federal Government, it is a prediction that in the future this money will materialize. Based on that prediction, the tax bill would spend $1.35 trillion over the next ten years, despite a national debt of more than $5.6 trillion, or $20,227.19 for every man, woman, and child in our country.

I believe it is unwise to base such a massive tax cut on projected income that may never come to pass. The serious limitations of economic projections are clearly illustrated by recent experience: just six years ago, in January 1995, the Congressional Budget Office projected that we would finish the year 2000 with a $342 billion deficit. Instead, we saw a surplus of $236 billion, a swing of $578 billion. In fact, most of the projected surplus over the next 10 years is expected to occur in the out-years, when projections are the most uncertain: Almost 70 percent of the non-Social Security surplus is projected to occur in 2007-2011, the last 5 years of the projection period. I believe it would be the height of folly to commit these uncertain surpluses to large, permanent tax cuts, as this tax bill does.

While I am concerned about tax reductions amounting to $1.35 trillion, the cost of the tax bill this decade, I am even more disturbed by the exploding cost of these tax measures in years to come. The authors of this legislation have employed a variety of tactics to disguise the true cost of the bill. Most significantly, the various tax cuts provided by this legislation are slowly phased in over ten years to keep costs under the $1.35 trillion maximum dictated by the budget resolution. Other provisions granting tax relief actually expire in the middle of the ten-year period covered by the bill.

I am opposed to such shell games that hide the true cost of this legislation for two reasons. First, the American public is being promised tax relief and likely doesn't understand that the changes which may benefit them the most will not arrive for years to come. Whatever your own tax cut priority, odds are it will not be realized for a long time. Marriage penalty relief does not begin until the year 2005. The final rate cut in the upper income tax brackets does not occur until 2007. The increase in the child credit to $1,000 does not take effect until 2011. The full increase in IRA contribution limits and the repeal of the estate tax do not take effect until 2011.

In addition to this extreme backloading of costs, this tax legislation actually "sunsets" several important provisions in order to hold down costs. Most of the alternative minimum tax, or "AMT", relief provided in the bill is actually eliminated in 2006. As a result, the number of taxpayers affected by the AMT would explode this decade to nearly 40 million taxpayers by 2011, more than 25 times the number of Americans now affected by the AMT. Provisions aimed at encouraging small businesses to fund employee pensions expire in 2006. And deductions for education expenses end in 2005.

The American people have been sold this bill as providing all of this relief, and have not been told how long they are going to have to wait to get it, and that it is not actually permanent relief. Even more importantly, such accounting gimmicks disguise the real cost that this legislation will impose on our Nation. The true cost of this package will rise to anywhere from $3.5 trillion to $4 trillion over ten years once it is fully implemented, which coincidentally occurs right at the time the baby boomers retire. If we enact this drastic cut, where will we find the resources to meet the needs of an aging population? How will we invest in national priorities like education, a well-prepared military, and a prescription drug benefit in Medicare? I strongly believe that we cannot enact such a huge tax cut, based on shaky economic forecasts, that will consume such a vast amount of resources just as our Nation's need is the greatest.

Finally, I believe it is worth noting who receives the benefits of this tax reconciliation bill. As I have said before, I am not opposed to a component of across-the-board tax relief. For example, the new 10 percent tax bracket created in this bill would benefit all Americans who pay taxes, including those with the highest incomes in our country. I would also support legislation to ease the marriage penalty and significantly increase the estate tax exemption so that our families can pass on more to future generations.

However, a disproportionate percentage of the benefits of this legislation is given to the wealthiest in our country. According to Citizens for Tax Justice, thirty-five percent of the benefits of this tax bill goes to the richest one percent of taxpayers—who have an average income of $1,117,000. While they get 35 percent of the benefits of this bill, that top one percent of taxpayers pays only 20 percent of all Federal taxes.

In contrast, this legislation fails to provide tax relief for many of our Nation's hardest-working taxpayers. The tax bill we are considering today provides no tax relief to the many American families who pay no income taxes, but who pay substantial payroll taxes. These low-income workers have not benefitted from our Nation's booming economy in recent years. Between 1992 and 1998, the bottom 95 percent of Americans experienced an eight percent rise in their after-tax incomes, while the top one percent of taxpayers saw their after-tax income increase by 47 percent. We should find some way to give those workers who have not participated in our recent economic prosperity, but still pay substantial payroll taxes, the relief they so desperately need.

Nonetheless, some will argue that wealthy Americans pay more taxes and, therefore, deserve a larger tax cut. That may be true if only the dollar amount of the tax cut is considered, but the tax bill we are debating gives a larger percentage of its tax cuts to high-income Americans. According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, this tax bill, when fully phased in, will increase the after-tax income of the richest one percent of Americans by an average of five percent. In contrast, the bill will increase the after-tax income of the middle fifth of American taxpayers by only 2.2 percent, and the poorest 20 percent of families in our country will see their income increase by only 0.8 percent. Therefore, this legislation would increase the after-tax income of our richest Americans more than twice as fast as those in the middle class, and six times faster than families in the bottom 20 percent of the income scale. Clearly, this bill denies middle-class and lower-income Americans tax relief in order to benefit the wealthiest in our country.

I believe that by passing this tax bill we will throw away an unprecedented opportunity to develop a sound fiscal policy for our Nation. We have an unparalleled opportunity to pay down the Nation's debt, to invest in our future, and to shore up vital programs. If we act prudently, we can ensure that the Federal government will have the resources to meet our obligations after the baby boomers retire and beyond. We can do a reasonable tax cut in response to the problems confronting working families all across the Nation, and we can do all this in a very balanced way. Because this legislation would squander our best chance for investing in America's future, lifting the debt burden off the next generation, and providing a reasonable tax cut for our working families, I strongly oppose this excessive tax bill and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the tax reconciliation bill being considered by the Senate today. I believe Vermonters and all Americans deserve tax relief, but we need to have a fiscally responsible tax package that benefits everyone. We do not need one that is so large, so likely to result once again in budget deficits, so full of budgetary gimmicks, and so skewed toward the wealthy.

If we are serious about passing a tax cut bill to provide needed relief to all Americans we should be lowering the tax rate for low- and medium-income people, making the child tax credit fully refundable, eliminating the marriage penalty tax immediately, creating an R&D tax credit, increasing IRA and pension contributions, and allowing for greater college tuition credits. Unfortunately, we are delaying all of these important tax relief components in order to shoehorn a massive rate reduction for the wealthiest Americans into this bill. It also pays for this massive tax plan at the expense of needed investments in Social Security, Medicare, education, the environment, and paying off the national debt.

I am one of five Senators still in the Senate who voted against the Reagan tax plan in 1981. We saw what happened there: We had a huge tax cut, defense spending boomed, and the national debt quadrupled. The tax plan was popular but it was wrong. America should not move backward in that direction.

This tax plan is too large. I voted for a responsible tax cut plan targeted to help the low- and medium-income people of this country who need tax relief the most. The $900 billion alternative I supported offered immediate tax refund checks to help boost the economy and help Americans pay for higher gasoline and energy prices, rate reductions for all income taxpayers, marriage penalty relief to start immediately, a partially refundable child tax credit, tuition tax deductibility to make college more affordable for middle class families and a major effort to modernize our public schools, a comprehensive package of retirement savings incentives to increase IRA and pension contributions and encourage small business to set up pension funds for their employees, a permanent extension of the $10,000 adoption tax credit, health insurance deduction for the self-employed, responsible estate tax relief, a permanent R&D tax credit, and elimination of the alternative minimum tax, AMT, for people with income up to $80,000. Unfortunately, the majority refused to seriously consider this offer to provide reasonable tax relief to working men and women and their families.

This tax plan is not fiscally responsible. We should keep in mind the inherent risks of forecasting budget surpluses ten years into the future. The President has argued that the surplus will be around $1.6 trillion and that all of that should go toward tax cuts. And most of the tax cuts in this bill come in the second 5 years of the 10-year plan. Setting aside the argument of how to spend that much money, is it really available? The predictions used to calculate $1.6 trillion were based on the U.S. economy expanding at an annual rate of 4 percent from 2000–2010. I think we know from the current economic slowdown that our economy is growing nowhere near 4 percent, if at all, right now. That is a big yellow flag that these assumptions are wrong. Focusing on budget predictions 10 years in the future is exceptionally risky and does not allow businesses and individuals to properly plan long-term.

This tax plan does not address our enormous Federal debt. Whatever surplus our Nation now enjoys should be used to pay down the $5.7 trillion gross Federal debt burden our country still carries. The Federal Government has to pay almost $900 million in interest every working day on this national debt. Paying off our debt will help sustain our sound economy by keeping interest rates low. I want to leave a legacy for our children and grandchildren of a debt-free Nation.

This tax plan is slanted toward the wealthiest among us. The original tax plan proposed by the President provides nearly half of that $1.6 trillion tax cut to the wealthiest in our country. We are sacrificing real tax relief to working families in this country for rate reductions to the wealthy. We should focus on enacting a responsible plan that will benefit the broadest number of people by reducing taxes to low- and medium-income people. By focusing only on income tax rate reductions, this tax cut plan leaves out millions of taxpayers who do not pay Federal income taxes but who do pay payroll taxes. In Vermont, there are 23,000 families who do not pay Federal income taxes. But 82 percent of those families do pay payroll taxes. For the vast majority of taxpayers, payroll taxes generate the largest tax burden, and yet this plan does not touch payroll taxes.

This tax plan has not been thoroughly reviewed and is full of budgetary gimmicks designed to mask the true effects of the bill. There are many unforeseen consequences of this tax bill that we should take into account before enacting this massive tax cut. However, with Republicans pushing to get this bill done by Memorial Day, there is great pressure to ram through a $1.35 trillion tax cut without a full review of all the proposals.

The New York Times has reported that one unanticipated effect of full repeal of estate tax may be greater capital gains taxes for most estates. After 2011, when the estate tax will be repealed, capital gains taxes would be owed on everything inherited above $1.3 million. As the Times reporter said:

Presumably, the drafters of the legislation did not worry if all the pieces did not fit together in a coherent package because they were primarily interested in getting a bill on the table for debate.

States that tie their State tax returns to Federal returns are going to be hurt by the lost Federal revenues. Vermont's tax system is one of three in the nation in which taxpayers use their Federal tax bill to calculate their State income taxes. It is a simple system, but it is affected by every little tax change at the Federal level. In effect, a massive Federal tax cut leads to a massive State tax cut. According to Vermont State economists, the State stands to lose $506 million over the next ten years because of this tax bill. In FY 2002 alone, Vermont will lose $35.7 million. The conservative Heritage Foundation has estimated that Vermont may lose up to $1.5 billion because of this huge tax cut. This is a very large amount of money for a State whose population is only 609,000. How will the State make up these lost revenues?

Vermont was hurt 20 years ago when Congress last considered a massive tax cut. Those rewrites to the Federal Tax Code put the State in red ink for years. As the red ink grew, an emergency tax study group assembled by the Governor found that between 1982 and 1987 the State stood to lose $300 million because of the Reagan tax cut. Now we will be putting Vermont back in a similar situation. As our Governor has already warned, without raising State taxes to make up for Federal losses, Vermont will once again see major deficits.

This tax bill also asks States to pay for repealing the Federal estate tax by abruptly ending payments from Federal estate tax revenue that are now shared with the States. This bill will cut by half the Federal credit that States receive for the Federal estate taxes that are collected and will deny States between $50 billion and $100 billion over 10 years, or as much as two-thirds of the cost of the estate tax repeal in the bill.

Another anomaly of this bill is the way the AMT is calculated. While Democrats hoped to exempt people who make under $100,000 from AMT permanently, Republicans only want to slightly increase the exemption for 4 years from 2002 to 2006. The Republican plan would cause 39.6 million taxpayers to be subject to the AMT by 2011. Clearly this flies in the face of the original intent of the AMT, which was to ensure that wealthy taxpayers cannot make use of tax breaks to eliminate much or all of their tax liability.

The tax bill will force more and more middle-class taxpayers to pay a tax that was meant to reach very few, well-off taxpayers.

I do not like the marriage penalty and think it is poor public policy. While this bill does contain two provisions designed to provide marriage penalty relief, it makes couples wait 5 years for that relief. While the rate cuts in upper-income tax brackets take effect next year, married couples will have to wait until 2005 to get relief and until 2010 until full repeal is fully phased in. This is 3 years after the upper income bracket rate cuts are fully effective.

After years of hard choices, we have balanced the budget and started building surpluses. Now we must make responsible choices for the future. Our top priorities should be paying off the national debt, saving Social Security, creating a real Medicare prescription drug benefit, protecting domestic spending programs, and passing a fair and responsible tax cut.

This tax bill falls far short of these priorities. It uses gimmicks to hide the bill's true costs. It provides no marriage penalty relief for five years. It contains no immediate tax refund to stimulate the economy. It has a hidden tax increase on the middle-class through the AMT. And its costs explode after 10 years, just as the baby boom generation begins to retire. For the sake of our economy and the working families of America, I will vote against this tax cut bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the budget resolution, including the tax bill which has passed the Senate, will almost surely push us back into the deficit ditch. The tax bill was rushed through before the President makes his request for additional defense funds, before the tax writing committees adopt additional provisions which we all know are forthcoming to extend current tax provisions, before the tax writing committees act to avoid the calamity which will befall 40 million people who will be forced to pay an alternative minimum tax as a result of this tax bill. That's twice the number that will be paying alternative minimum taxes by 2011 under current law. This fiscally irresponsible tax bill was pushed through before the review of the projected surplus which is due in August, and also before the appropriations bills are reported, which everyone here knows will exceed the domestic discretionary spending cap provided for in the budget resolution. The final result of all this fiscal irresponsibility will almost surely be the raiding of the Medicare surplus and a return to the deficit days of the 1980s.

Our future economic health took a blow today.

I support a tax cut, a reduction in taxes which is modest enough to be fiscally responsible, swift enough to provide an economic stimulus, and fair to all Americans, including working families who are so shortchanged by the Republican proposal. The bill passed today is the opposite. Its large size makes it fiscally irresponsible, it actually delays tax relief, and it provides most of its benefit to the upper income Americans. It is based on long-term surplus projections which history shows to be highly speculative making this bill dangerous to our economic future. Finally, it is being catapulted through the Senate, exploiting a process which severely limits debate and which was never intended for tax reduction legislation of this size.

Although this bill is advertised as a $1.35 trillion tax bill, its true cost is closer to $2 trillion. It fails to account for the cost of real Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) reform. In fact, under this legislation, by 2011, nearly 40 million taxpayers will have to pay the AMT, including many middle income taxpayers. It ignores the fact that tens and perhaps hundreds of billions of dollars worth of additional spending, over ten years, will be required to live up to the President's goals for defense and education, and to provide for urgent domestic needs this Senate knows it is going to support.

This tax bill takes us back to the bad old days of backloaded tax breaks whose real costs explode several years after enactment. Although it technically sunsets its provisions in 2011 to meet the requirements of the Byrd Rule, the changes in the tax code which it makes, such as the repeal of the estate tax, are clearly intended to be permanent. The cost of these changes explode immediately beyond the ten-year "window". In fact, the bill's claimed $1.35 trillion price tag could triple in the second ten years. This budgetary time bomb is set to go off at roughly the same time as the bill begins to come due for Medicare and Social Security. That is the time the "baby boomers" begin to retire and we must begin to draw down the Social Security Trust fund.

This tax bill is based on highly speculative long-term projections. Projections are always risky. We have seen many Federal budget estimates, and we know well that as quickly as these surpluses appeared, they could disappear. This bill is based on projections of surpluses for ten years downstream. History has shown that CBO projections for even five years into the future have been off over the past decade by an average of more than 100 percent.

The massive tax cut which the Senate has passed threatens to lead us back into the deficit ditch. We just climbed out of that ditch. And we shouldn't head there again, particularly when the country is saddled with a national debt that resulted from the last binge of deficits. The current national debt is $5.6 trillion. Based on the Budget Resolution which the Senate recently adopted and based on this tax cut, the national debt at the end of the next ten years will have increased to $6.7 trillion. If the projected surpluses do in fact materialize, we should be using them mainly to pay down the national debt instead of increasing that debt with a big tax cut.

In 1981, President Ronald Reagan introduced his Economic Recovery Tax Act which included huge tax cuts and predictions that the budget would be balanced by 1984. In 1981, I opposed that supply side economic approach because I was convinced that it would lead to huge deficits. We did indeed pay dearly for the debt which resulted from that legislation. In 1992, the annual deficit in the federal budget had reached $290 billion. The remarkable progress which since then has brought us to our current surpluses came about in large part as a result of the deficit reduction package which President Clinton presented in 1993, and which the Senate and House each passed by a margin of one vote. We should not now be passing an imprudent tax bill like the one before us, and head back toward new future deficits.

Although the tax cut is irresponsibly large, the economic impact will be remarkably small, because the bill before us does not contain the $85 billion economic stimulus adopted in the Senate-passed budget resolution. Only $33 billion is allocated for tax relief this year. The bill is extensively back-loaded: it doesn't start marriage penalty relief—the doubling of the standard deduction and the expansion of the 15 percent bracket—until 2006. IRA contribution limits aren't fully phased in until 2011. The Child Credit isn't fully phased in until 2011. The delay in relief actually shifts the responsibility of paying for our excess onto the next generation.

The relief provided in the bill isn't equitable. There is no tax relief for the 25 million taxpaying Americans that pay their federal taxes through the payroll tax. And it means too little to taxpayers in the 15 percent bracket, who will see no reduction in their marginal tax rate, while those in the top 1 percent receive nearly $40,000 worth of relief. In fact overall, the top 1 percent, earning an average of more than a million dollars a year, will receive about 35 percent of the benefits under this tax legislation.

I am also deeply troubled by the process which has brought us to this point. We considered this legislation under special rules contained in the Budget Act for a process called "reconciliation". This process is being misused to steamroll this bill through the Senate. By restricting a Senator's right to fully debate and amend this bill—no more than twenty hours of debate is permitted and the amendment process is severely constrained—the majority puts the Senate in a straight-jacket. A similar oppressive tactic was used earlier when the majority bypassed the Budget Committee to bring the Budget Resolution to the Senate floor and when they excluded Democrats from the Conference Committee in order to write the reconciliation instructions which are being used to shield this legislation from full debate and amendment. This process is a rush to judgment which does damage to the institution of the Senate and its reputation for deliberation. And, it does this damage to promote a massive tax bill which will negatively affect the economic well-being of Americans for decades to come.

This Administration argues that the projected surplus should be returned to the tax payers because it is their money. Of course it is their money. But the economy is all of ours too. Social Security belongs to all of us. The Medicare program belongs to all of us. Our education program and helping people through college, belongs to all of us. And, of course, the national debt belongs to all of us as well. We owe it to the American people to reject this imprudent tax cut in order to pay down that national debt and to strengthen our commitment to those programs that the American people want. We can do that consistent with a targeted, modest, prudent tax cut. Unless it is improved in the Conference with the House, which is not likely, we should defeat this massive, unfair, imprudent tax cut bill when it returns to the Senate.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is unfortunate that the Republican leadership has interrupted the Senate's action on landmark education reform legislation in order to expedite action on their massive tax cut bill. It demonstrates once more that education is not a real priority for our Republican colleagues. Their only priority is tax cuts, tax cuts and more tax cuts.

The Republican position could not be clearer: Education can wait while we rush to give away hundreds of billions of dollars in tax breaks for the wealthy. In Republican priorities, the needs of the wealthiest taxpayers for new tax breaks rank far higher than the needs of America's school children.

Across America, 12 million children are disadvantaged in our education system, but we currently provide the full range of title I Federal education services to only one in three of these children. The rest are left to fend for themselves, with the most overcrowded classrooms, the least amount of quality teacher time, the most outdated textbooks and learning tools, and the most inadequate facilities.

Students with disabilities suffer from the same federal neglect. The Federal Government has long promised to fund 40 percent of special education. Yet it still only funds 17 percent, less than half of what was promised. Parents of millions of disabled children are forced to struggle in the States every year for the education that their children deserve. For years, states have called on the Federal Government to live up to its commitment to students with special needs. Yet the Republican budget, and the tax cut that follows from it, say no.

Instead, one of every three dollars of the tax breaks in the bill before us will go to the wealthiest 1 percent of taxpayers. Once the tax breaks are fully implemented, the richest 1 percent will receive an average tax cut of $37,000 each year—more than most families take home from work in an entire year.

Mr. President, $37,000 a year could pay the salary of a new teacher in most school districts. But if this tax bill passes, there won't be funds for new teachers. Our Republican colleagues in Congress have decided that wealthy taxpayers need the money more.

The tax cut is clearly excessive. It is neither fair nor affordable. No wonder the Republican leadership is attempting to force a final vote in Congress as soon as possible, before public outrage builds.

Through the use of smoke and mirrors and budget gimmicks, the bill technically complies with the mandate of the budget resolution to report a tax bill costing $1.35 trillion over eleven years. But the real costs are far higher. The real costs of this bill explode in the outyears. It does not conform with the clear intent expressed by a majority of Senators to substantially reduce the size of the Bush tax cut.

Most disturbing of all is the extreme use of backloading to conceal the enormous cost of these tax cuts when they take full effect. The rate reduction is not fully implemented until the year 2007. Marriage penalty tax relief does not even begin until the year 2005. The amount of the child credit does not reach the full $1000 until the year 2011. The estate tax is not repealed until the year 2011 as well, so that almost none of the cost of the repeal shows up until the year 2012.

These tactics are the height of fiscal irresponsibility. The excessive cost of the tax breaks in the first 10 years is bad enough. But that cost will triple in the following 10 years. A $1.35 trillion tax cut in the first 10 years will mushroom to more than $4 trillion in the next 10 years, precisely when the Nation will confront unprecedented additional costs for Medicare and Social Security because of the retirement of the baby boom generation. Funds urgently needed to strengthen these basic programs are being denied by these reckless tax cuts.

Democrats support a substantial tax cut, one that would cost nearly a trillion dollars over the next 10 years, and that would give working families a fair share of the tax benefits. But this Republican bill does not deserve to be enacted. It is far too costly, and it fails to provide significant tax relief to those who need help the most.

It is clear that the nation cannot afford this tax cut without seriously neglecting America's most important priorities, including education. To meet our basic education needs, I will propose an amendment making reduction in the top marginal income tax rate contingent upon funding education at the levels that the Senate has already voted to support during our consideration of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. If we do not have adequate resources to provide all students with a quality education, then we certainly do not have the resources needed to provide new tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans.

Fewer than 1 percent of taxpayers have incomes high enough to be affected by the top income bracket. These are the richest men and women in America. The $120 billion in tax breaks contained exclusively for them in this misguided bill should not take priority over the support for education that the Senate has already agreed is necessary. Support for basic education deserves higher priority than lavish new tax breaks for the wealthiest citizens.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, Americans deserve a tax cut. They deserve a large tax cut. And in this time of budget surpluses, we can afford hundreds of billions of dollars of tax relief.

But Americans deserve other things at least as much. They deserve honesty in budgeting. They deserve a government that will face up to the fundamental choices that have to be made in writing a ten-year budget plan.

Americans deserve a strong national defense, safe streets, effective schools, world-class health care, clean air and water, a safe and efficient transportation system.

I must vote against this tax bill because it does not honestly face the serious choices that still confront us in this era of surpluses, because it sacrifices virtually all other priorities—and some of our fundamental values—to the single-minded pursuit of cutting taxes.

Despite what some would have us believe, we cannot afford to do everything for everybody all at the same time. We cannot cut taxes by nearly 2 trillion dollars in the next ten years—a number that actually doubles in the following decade—and continue to provide the fundamental governmental functions that Americans need and deserve.

If we are honest about the real costs of this tax cut, Mr. President, we would admit that on top of the $1.35 trillion sticker cost, we have to add $300 billion in additional interest payments that come from not paying down the national debt.

If we admit that we will have to reform the Alternative Minimum Tax that will soon hit millions of Americans, we have to add another $300 billion to its cost. Because history shows that we will extend the Research and Development tax credit and other popular and useful breaks that we have always supported in the past, we can add another $100 billion to the size of the tax cut.

Those calculations put the full cost of the tax cut and the real, foreseeable, inevitable tax issues that will face us in the next decade at over $2 trillion.

Two trillion—again, a number that will at least double in the ten years after the coming decade.

But we are told that there is a surplus that will cover the costs of this and all of the other things we will want and need. Money in the bank. Not to worry.

There is an old saying to the effect that something that sounds too good to be true, probably is too good to be true. This big tax cut certainly sounds good. It certainly would be appealing to go along and vote for it.

But that would not be honest because the numbers that we have in front of us right now tell us that we simply can't afford it.

The surpluses available to us in the next decade, if we agree not to spend money from the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds, is supposed to be about $2.5 trillion. That sounds like a lot of money, and it would be, if it were real.

But it is not real for two reasons.

First, it is based on some assumptions we all know are just not true. If we can, let's just leave aside for a moment how well we can project the future of this economy—that problem alone has proved every other long-term surplus projection we have ever made wrong by hundreds of billions of dollars.

But even if we could know for sure that the economy will continue to grow at the high rates of investment and productivity we need to match the forecasts behind those projections—which we don't—those projections simply ignore some basic facts.

Only if we ignore those facts can we believe that the tax cuts in this bill make sense.

Here are some of the facts that make those surplus forecasts more likely wrong than right. They assume we will have no wars, no hurricanes, no floods, no earthquakes—no national security emergencies or natural disasters that would subtract billions of dollars from the projected surpluses.

The second reason the projections have to be wrong is that they assume we will cut the size of government in our country by 25 percent over the next ten years. As a share of the economy, our federal government is already the lowest it has been since 1960. There are plenty of reasons to believe that we will not be able to cut it by another 25 percent.

Our surplus projections do not account for increases in our population or increases in the cost of living over the next decade—incredible as it may sound, they do not. If we put those two basic budgeting concepts back into our assumptions, that subtracts as much as $640 billion from the surpluses.

Subtract that $640 billion from the $2.5 trillion estimated surplus, the tax cut is greater than the surplus remaining. Basic honesty in budgeting shows that we cannot afford a tax cut this big.

And the surplus projections ignore new spending priorities that everyone wants to address, on top of just keeping up with current levels.

The Administration has called for both a radical overhaul of our national defenses, and a new anti-ballistic missile program. We have no clear idea what those programs might cost, but I have added up just the six best known weapons modernization programs, and they add up to over $380 billion.

The new defense plan could add perhaps $250 billion, and a full-blown missile defense plan that covered every option the President has expressed an interest in covering could be another $100 billion. So prudence suggests we should show some of those costs in the budgets for the next ten years.

But we don't. That is hundreds of billions of dollars that will have to come out of the supposed surpluses, but we have no place for them in our discussions of this tax bill or in our budget calculations.

The President says that he wants to spend more for education, even though his budget includes no new spending for it. So far here in the Senate, we have passed $150 billion in new education spending, on a priority that all Americans share.

With just the spending that we know about in defense and education, virtually all of the non-Social Security, non-Medicare surplus is gone—and then some—with nothing left for improvements to our aging roads, bridges, sewers, dams, or docks.

No money for additional air traffic controllers or airports, no money to break the gridlock on our highways with a national high-speed passenger rail system.

No money for new policemen on the beat, for after-school programs to prevent juvenile crime, no money for drug interdiction or drug treatment programs.

With the huge additional burdens on Social Security and Medicare coming in the years just beyond the decade covered by this tax plan, there is no money left for the fundamental reforms of those programs. If we follow the Administration's approach to Social Security reform, we will need an additional trillion dollars. But there will be no money left.

Why are we left with so little for so many of our fundamental needs? Why, when we have finally brought our budgets into balance after years of deficits, can we not afford to pay for these essential priorities that we all agree deserve our support?

Because this tax cut was not designed as part of a comprehensive budget plan. If it becomes law for the next decade, it will be the only real priority in our budget. Every other priority, from defense to education—and even, I am afraid, balanced budgets—will be only an afterthought.

That is why I will vote against this tax bill. It costs too much; it depends too much on wishful thinking; it ignores realities that are staring us in the face over the next ten years.

We tried to amend this bill to fix the problems I have discussed. Senator McCain offered an amendment to scale back the size of the tax cut to make room in our budget for the projected increases in defense spending. That prudent statement of our national priorities was voted down.

Senator Harkin offered an amendment to simply hold off on a piece of the tax cut until we could certify that we can meet the long-term obligations of Social Security and Medicare. Once we could make that certification, every bit of the tax cut would go forward. That basic commitment to the promises we have made was voted down.

I offered an amendment to scale back the size of the tax cut to make room for a tuition tax deduction to help pay for college. That important priority of middle-class families was voted down.

Senator Rockefeller offered an amendment to make sure we can afford to provide a prescription drug benefit for seniors before we cut taxes. It would not prevent a cent of the tax cut from going out—as long as we could pay for a prescription drug benefit. That bipartisan priority, shared by the President, was voted down.

Senator Feingold offered an amendment to scale back the size of the tax cut so that surviving spouses will not have to give up their earthly possessions to pay for nursing home care received by deceased Medicaid patients. That small gesture toward fairness was voted down.

In every case the tax cut came first; every other priority—every other value—was left behind.

We can afford major tax relief for all Americans. And we can afford to provide the national security, the world-class education, the health care and the other priorities Americans have a right to expect. We can even afford a little fairness in the distribution of the many blessings we enjoy. We can afford to act on our values.

But not if we pass this tax bill.

We are indeed a blessed nation, at an historic peak in our prosperity and in our influence in the world. We have the resources to prudently manage the challenges and opportunities before us. But we are not immune to the basic laws of budgeting—we have to make choices.

This tax cut, by its sheer size—a size selected without consideration of any other priority—refuses to face honestly those fundamental choices. It refuses to recognize any other values.

I cannot support it.

Mr. McCain. Mr. President, I commend Senators Grassley and Baucus for their dedication and hard work in completing this Reconciliation bill.

During the debate on the tax reconciliation bill, I have had serious reservations about some of the priorities contained in this bill.

First, after years of neglect, our military forces need to be significantly strengthened and it won't be cheap. But in the wake of large tax cuts, non-defense spending initiatives, and uncertain surplus projections, we cannot be sure how much money will remain to fund such defense priorities as National Missile Defense, force modernization, spare parts, flight hours, overdue facility maintenance, training programs, and the care of our service members. As of yet, we have not received from the Administration a request for defense spending increases. I hope their request, when it comes, is adequate to meet the needs of our national security, which, as I observed, are many and serious. If that request is not adequate to our needs, I will fight as hard as I can to increase it.

With the adoption of the Reconciliation bill both the Administration and Congress are going to have to make some very hard choices to find the resources to fund our national defense priorities. There's no way around it. We cannot take money from the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds, so that means we will have to cut other spending programs or adjust the tax cuts to support our military forces. Those are very hard choices, indeed, and we don't like to make hard choices in Congress very often.

But, Mr. President, we are going to have to make them because our first duty, is and always will be the nation's security, and the defense of American interests and values in the world. And those members who believe we have been derelict in our duty lately, will have to take our case to the public, inform them of the hard choices before us and urge them to urge us to do the right and necessary thing, even if it requires us to take on a few sacred cows around here.

Mr. President, while I hoped for even more tax relief to middle income Americans, I do want to commend Senate Grassley for moving in that direction by insisting that the top rate should be cut to only 36 percent. I wish we could have made even greater progress by increasing the 15 percent bracket to include more middle class taxpayers. But the Senate has decided otherwise, and, recognizing what progress has been made by Senator GRASSLEY, I will not register my disappointment by voting against the bill. Neither do I wish to vote against the President's first, important success in the Senate. But I do want to make clear my firm opposition to any increases in benefits to the top tax rate payers at the expense of the majority of Americans who are in much greater need of tax relief. Should further reductions in the top tax rates be made in conference, I will vote against the conference report without hesitation.

Mr. NELSON of Nebraska. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for the tax cut bill. Simply stated, the time has come for a sensible tax cut. The American people deserve it; the budget can support it. Now, it's time for Congress to authorize it.

I sincerely believe this legislation will serve as an efficient delivery vehicle for responsible tax relief that will benefit all Americans. While I support this tax cut plan for several reasons, the most concise justification for my position is that the $1.35 trillion in tax cuts over 11 years provided in the bill will cut taxes without cutting hope.

Since the beginning of this debate, I have repeatedly and consistently voiced my support for a substantial tax cut, as long as it would not interfere with our ability to fund our domestic budgetary priorities. I am pleased that this tax cut plan will not sap our resources for important obligations like agriculture and defense. It is reassuring to know that implementation of this plan will not be at the expense of our critical responsibilities. This legislation will provide across-the-board tax relief for the people of Nebraska, as well as all Americans, without interfering with Social Security and Medicare or hampering our efforts to pay down the national debt. Clearly, the cornerstone of this bill is responsible tax relief.

Perhaps even more significant in this bill's eleven-year, $1.35 billion tax cut package is the inclusion of a $100 billion up-front stimulus package. This two-year economic stimulus package will have an immediate impact on our economy, which has been showing all the symptoms of a slow-down. Such tangible, instant relief is precisely what is needed to counteract the threat of an economic recession.

While the reduction of personal income tax rates and the economic stimulus package are the highlights of this bill, I would like to emphasize the fact that there are several other components of this legislation contributing to its overall efficacy. This bill includes raising the exemption for estate tax relief followed by a gradual repeal of the estate tax, a doubling of the childcare tax credit by 2010, the dissolution of the so-called marriage penalty tax, and pension reform that will allow larger contributions to IRAs and 401(k) plans. I know Nebraskans have supported these initiatives for quite some time, so it brings me great satisfaction to know that they will soon be implemented.

I commend Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS for their efforts to achieve substantial bipartisan support for this tax cut bill. Their work has resulted in legislation that skillfully and responsibly addresses many of the major points of contention among the members of the Senate. It is in that same spirit of bipartisanship that I hope the Conference Report will be crafted. If the Conference Committee will follow the Senate Finance Committee's lead and work to build bipartisan support for the Conference Report, I am confident that the American people will finally receive the tax relief they deserve.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I rise today to support the Restoring Earnings to Lift Individuals and Empower Families Act of 2001. This tax package provides some needed tax relief to the people of Louisiana. In addition, it represents a bipartisan compromise by the committee members. I would like to thank the chairman of the committee, the distinguished Senator from Iowa, and the ranking member, from Montana, for their hard work in developing a tax relief package that tries to address the concerns and priorities of the people of our Nation.

While there is not a consensus on how to provide tax relief, there is consensus that the American people deserve a tax cut in the face of large projected surpluses. This package provides marginal income tax rate reductions, marriage penalty and estate tax relief, expands provisions for the child tax credit, encourages savings, and rewards adoption. The benefits of these provisions are not balanced in the way that I would like to see, but, of course, that is the nature of compromise. However, some of the tax cut initiatives included provide real relief to people who really need it, working families, struggling to make ends meet.

Louisianians work hard to provide for their families. Our State has an average income of $30,000 a year. In addition, 90 percent of all Louisiana households earn less than $75,000. I believe that the proposal before us now, the Senate RELIEF package, distributes benefits more fairly to the average taxpayer and middle-income families than the tax plan initially proposed by President Bush, and far better than the bills supported by the House Leadership.

This bill has many of the elements that will make a real difference to many Americans and Louisianians. Among these compromise elements are marriage penalty relief, and reform and eventual repeal of the estate tax, which I have voted for in the past and continue to support. In addition, this package provides necessary broad-based income rate reductions including the creation of a new 10 percent rate, and a doubling of the child tax credit to $1,000, to strengthen families.

When fully phased-in, the average Louisianian can expect to receive a tax cut anywhere from $300 to $500 a year. But more importantly, the effect of the new refundable child credit could offset much of the payroll and excise taxes that affect many Louisiana families. For example, a married couple with two children earning $20,000 could receive a tax benefit of as much as $2,000. That is a real saving that could make a substantial difference for many families.

In representing the people of Louisiana, my commitment has been to fiscal discipline, tax code fairness, debt reduction, and tax relief. Louisianians and Americans of all income levels deserve the significant tax relief included in the $1.35 trillion tax cut package now being considered by Congress. So, while I support tax cuts, I also support an amendment that provides an insurance policy against returning to deficit spending, a trigger mechanism. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan repeatedly has stated in recent months his support for a trigger mechanism.

Through this trigger mechanism, the goal is to enact tax relief in a fiscally responsible way that protects against the depletion of the Social Security and Medicare surpluses, and allows for true debt reduction. The trigger creates a safety mechanism to address the possibility of either fiscally irresponsible tax cuts or "budget busting" Federal spending increases that would lead the nation back to a period of budget deficits and mounting public debt. Under such a trigger, tax relief would continue to be phased-in while specified debt reduction targets are met. If Congress falls short of those targets, the trigger would delay the implementation of new spending and tax reduction proposals until those debt reduction targets are back on schedule. The trigger mechanism will not cancel out or hamper the $1.35 trillion tax cut package. It will instead strengthen and increase the certainty of the tax relief by ensuring fiscal discipline.

I have also offered an amendment on behalf of myself and Senator CRAIG. The adoption tax credit amendment will truly encourage parenthood through adoption, and in the long run, reduce the costs to taxpayers. It provides a permanent expansion of the credit to $10,000 for both special needs and non-special needs adoptions for families with incomes up to $190,000. Removing children from long term foster care is a great benefit to society because it reduces the possibility that these children will develop costly social problems; such as drug dependence or criminal involvement. This delinquency comes at a high cost to the taxpayer. Our amendment enjoys wide bipartisan support, and should be included in the final package passed by the Senate.

While I support many of the measures in this tax relief package, I should add that there are provisions that I find very troubling. This tax cut is back loaded, with many of the costs exploding after the 10-year budget window. The repeal of the estate tax, only one provision of this tax bill, has been estimated to cost at least $145 billion in the eleventh year alone. In the long run, over the next 15 to 20 years, the revenue cost of the total tax package could be as high as $5 trillion. This is an enormous drain on Federal revenues, greatly reducing our ability to pay down our debt and provide strategic investments necessary for our economic growth.

Another concern is the lack of immediate marriage penalty relief, a provision that would benefit many families in Louisiana. This is unfortunate, because married couples treated unfairly by the tax code deserve a speedy remedy. In addition, Education Savings Accounts established in the tax bill are costly and, in my opinion, are an inefficient use of these funds given the great need of new investments necessary to support essential education reform efforts underway in Louisiana and across the Nation. We need to target more of our federal revenue to poorer, moderate-income, and disadvantaged school districts to the level the playing field of opportunity and to truly ensure that no child is left behind.

Despite these concerns, the package does provide tax relief that is warranted due to the large projected surplus. That is why I rise to support this compromise tax relief package.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to support the reconciliation bill currently pending before the Senate.

Although this bill is far from perfect, I do not think there is a member of the Senate who would not have drafted a different bill giving different weight to different provisions if given the opportunity. It represents a compromise on a very difficult set of issues and does, in some areas, make progress.

While it does not provide the immediate economic stimulus I would like, for example, it does afford a wage earner providing for his or her family who makes less than $45,000 a tax cut of $300 this year, and $600 next year. Additionally, although not phased-in as fast as I would like, the changes this bill makes to the marriage penalty and the child tax credit provisions will allow a working couple to avoid paying the marriage penalty simply for getting married, and provide them with child tax credits when they have children.

The President requested a $1.6 trillion tax cut over ten years. This reconciliation bill will cost $1.35 trillion, still a sizable amount, over 11 years, including $100 billion for economic stimulus.

This bill contains several provisions which I believe are important to assure the continued long-term economic health of the American economy and which will benefit many hard-working American families: It contains the creation of a new, retroactive, 10-percent tax bracket which has the effect of benefitting every single American who pays income taxes. Most of the benefit of the 10 percent bracket goes to people who earn less than $75,000 a year. It contains an across-the-board tax cut, including reductions in the upper brackets. Significantly, this legislation does not go as far as the President's proposal. The 39.6 percent bracket, for example, will fall only to 36 percent, not the 33 percent the President wanted. This is a fair compromise. It provides significant marriage penalty relief although that does not go into effect until 2005. Marriage penalty makes sense for social reasons: It reinforces the important institutions of family and marriage. It eliminates what many of us see as a vast inconsistency in our tax law. The marriage penalty simply makes no sense: Two people should not find that they pay more in taxes if they are married than if they stay single. Although not phased-in as quickly as many of us would like, this bill will eliminate this problem for many couples who now find they face a marriage penalty. I hope that the Conference Committee would find a way to implement this reform earlier than 2005.

It provides significant estate tax reform and repeal. I have long held that people should not be forced to pay a tax simply because of the death of a parent or spouse. In all too many instances under the current estate tax families are forced to sell a primary residence or go deeply into debt to hold on to a family farm or business simply because of the estate tax triggered by the death of a loved one. This legislation will first raise the unified credit to $4 million and lower estate tax rates and, then, in 2011, repeal the estate tax. Estate assets will not escape taxation under this approach. Rather they will be taxed at a stepped-up capital gains rate of 20 percent if and when a family chooses to sell them. This will allow families to keep the family home, business, or farm and, I believe, represents real progress on this issue.

This is especially important for California because of high land and property costs. Under the present estate tax, the heir of a $3 million estate which includes a home or business or farm could pay $700,000, or 45 percent of the taxable estate value of $1.7 million in estate taxes, due immediately. In future years, because of astronomic increases in land and property values, this will affect many more Californians than in the past. A child who does not have the cash to pay the tax may be forced to sell the family home, business, or farm. I cannot support a tax where rates are so high that they force an heir to sell their inheritance simply to pay the tax on it, especially in the case of farms or businesses where taxes have already been paid on the income which was used to purchase the asset.

This reconciliation bill expands the tax credit for families with children from $500 to $1,000 per child; increases the amount of the credit that is partly refundable so lower income families can benefit; and it expands and simplifies the earned-income tax credit so it is available to many more low-income working families than it is today. For example, under the current rules a family with one child would have to earn at least $14,000 to have a fully refundable credit of $600. This bill will extend the credit to families with incomes of $10,000.

It provides incentives for parents to set aside money for their children's future education by expanding the education savings accounts contribution limit from $500 to $2,000; extends the employer-provided tuition assistance credit to encourage employers to help employees continue their education; and helps college students pay off their student loans by eliminating the 60-month limit on deductibility of student loan interest.

It includes pension provisions to provide an incentive for people to save for their retirement, including increasing the contribution limits for IRAs from $2,000 to $5,000 by 2011; increasing 401(k) contribution limits from $10,500 to $15,000 in 2010; and includes provisions to help provide retirement fairness for women, including allowing "catch up" contributions to retirement plans for individuals over age 50.

It includes a down payment towards fixing the Alternative Minimum Tax, AMT, problem, an issue that is projected to mushroom by 2010. More needs to be done to make sure that middle class families do not find that because of the AMT they do not receive the benefits promised under this tax cut package. But I am pleased that in taking this first step the Senate has recognized that this is a big problem, especially for states like California, and I look forward to continuing to work with my colleagues in the years ahead to fix this problem before it develops into a genuine crisis.

I have had two concerns about this approach taken in this legislation, however. First, that the costs of this tax bill after 2011 may be quite high—as much as $3 to $4 trillion by some estimates.

That is why it was critical, for me to be able to support this legislation, that the "sunset" provisions remained in place and that the provisions included in this bill expire in 2011.

Although I fully expect that Congress will extend many, if not all, of these provisions, this provides us a critical opportunity to make a mid-course correction if, 10 years from now, a different approach on these issues is called for.

Second, I want to make sure that the tax cuts we are considering here today will not endanger the projected surpluses or undo the hard work and hard choices of the past decade which have allowed us to eliminate deficits and pay down the debt.

That is why I supported the amendment offered by Senators BAYH and SNOWE to create a "trigger mechanism" which will allow us to slow-down the phase in of some of these tax provisions should we not meet our debt reduction goals. Although this bipartisan amendment narrowly failed, I think that it sends an important message about our commitment to fiscal responsibility.

On the whole I think that the bill pending before the Senate today represents a fair compromise on a most contentious issue.

Today we are voting on a $1.35 trillion package, some $150 billion more than the Senate approved in the budget amendment last month with 65 votes, but still a fair package with many positive elements. So let there be no mistake: This is a large bill, and represents a major change in the tax system. As this reconciliation bill goes to conference, it is my sincere hope that the conferees understand that for myself, and, I believe, many of my colleagues, the package that we are voting on here today represents what we consider to be fair and balanced, and that we would have considerable difficulty supporting any changes which may threaten to upset this balance.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this reconciliation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. President, I rise to speak about the Holocaust Victims Tax Fairness amendment, No. 670, to H.R. 1836, which I offered last Thursday, and which was approved by the Senate yesterday by voice vote.

I would like to thank Senators SCHUMER, JEFFORDS, CLINTON, MCCAIN, TORRICELLI, DOMENICI, ALLEN, DURBIN, GORDON SMITH, SPECTER, BILL NELSON, BINGAMAN, CORZINE, DEWINE, LEAHY, COLLINS, and FEINSTEIN for cosponsoring my amendment.

This year we mark the 56th anniversary of the end of the Holocaust. There are as many as 10,000 Holocaust survivors in my home state of Illinois, and over 100,000 in the entire United States, with an average age over 80. It is imperative that Congress act as soon as possible to prevent the federal government from attempting to tax any restitution obtained by Holocaust survivors and their families because of their persecution by the Nazis.

Holocaust survivors and their families have lived through unspeakable horrors. Three weeks ago, I attended a Holocaust Memorial Service at a synagogue in Skokie, Illinois. After the formal proceedings were over, I spoke with a number of survivors of concentration camps, and heard what they were able to tell me about their dreadful experiences. One survivor of Auschwitz told me things she had never told her children. Why? Because I was a United States Senator, and she felt she had to tell me so that the Holocaust would never be forgotten, even though remembering these horrors caused her indescribable pain.

The accounts of these survivors remind all of us that America has an obligation to continue to pursue justice and compensation for Holocaust victims and their families.

My amendment, the Holocaust Victims Tax Fairness Act of 2001, would prevent the Federal Government from imposing the Federal income tax on Holocaust restitution or compensation payments that victims or their heirs may receive.

The IRS has indicated in various private letter rulings that certain restitution money is exempt from the Federal income tax, but these rulings apply only to the specific individuals who received them, or to specific settlement funds, not to all recipients of compensation and restitution.

The U.S. Treasury Department has made clear that Federal legislation is needed to ensure that all compensation and restitution payments are protected from unfair taxation. In fact, the Bush Administration Treasury Department supports my legislation, as did the Clinton Administration last year. The Holocaust Victims Tax Fairness Act of 2001 will provide certainty for elderly Holocaust survivors, thereby sparing them from having to navigate complex legal and bureaucratic processes.

More than 50 years after the end of World War II, many banks and companies in Europe are beginning to return stolen assets to survivors of the Holocaust and their heirs. In August of 1998, two of the largest banks in Switzerland agreed to distribute $1.25 billion as restitution for assets wrongfully withheld during the Nazi reign. And in February of 1999, the German government agreed to establish a fund to compensate victims of the Holocaust.

This amendment ensures that the beneficiaries of these settlements and other Holocaust restitution or compensation arrangements can exclude the proceeds from taxable income on their Federal income tax forms. The measure also ensures that survivors and their families do not lose their eligibility for federal or federally assisted need-based programs when they receive Holocaust-related restitution or compensation payments.

Those of us too young to have lived in those times can never know the pain of the survivors. But we must learn from them. We who were born after the war must commit ourselves to try our best to shoulder the responsibility the survivors have carried for so long. While the restitution settlements pale in comparison to what they have lost, this legislation ensures that survivors and their families can keep all that is returned to them without being unnecessarily burdened by taxes or excluded from need-based programs.

The Congress must send a clear message that to allow the federal government to tax away any reparations obtained by Holocaust survivors or their families because of their persecution by the Nazis or their sympathizers is simply unacceptable. Given that the average age of Holocaust survivors now exceeds 80 years of age, we believe it is imperative that the Congress act now to prevent the Federal Government from attempting to tax this money.

Similar legislation was agreed to by the Senate as an amendment to the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999. The provision was retained in conference, but the final bill was vetoed, preventing this important measure regarding Holocaust restitution from becoming law.

My amendment improves significantly upon bills on this issue that were introduced in the 106th Congress. For example, this amendment is more carefully crafted to encompass all possible types of restitution and compensation that Holocaust survivors or their heirs may receive in the coming years.

Furthermore, unlike previous versions, my legislation ensures that survivors and their families do not lose their eligibility for Federal or federally assisted need-based programs when they receive Holocaust-related restitution or compensation payments; this provision expands upon a 1994 law that protected only victims, not their heirs, from losing benefits from need-based programs because of restitution payments. My legislation corrects this unfortunate omission in the 1994 law.

Finally, unlike previous versions, my amendment provides that the initial tax basis of property returned to Holocaust victims or their heirs will be the fair market value of the property on the date of recovery. This provision ensures that Holocaust survivors who receive in-kind, rather than cash, restitution do not have to pay tax on capital gains if they immediately sell the property. Survivors should not be unfairly penalized because they receive in-kind restitution; and the Federal Government should not make one dime on Holocaust restitution, whether the restitution is in cash or in kind.

This legislation has strong bipartisan support in Congress. Twenty Senators have already cosponsored S. 749, a bill I introduced last month that is identical to this amendment.

Many organizations that work to assist Holocaust survivors have endorsed the Holocaust Victims Tax Fairness Act of 2001, including the Conference on Jewish Material Claims, the Anti-Defamation League, B'nai B'rith International, the American Jewish Committee, and the American Gathering of Jewish Holocaust Survivors—the largest organization of American Holocaust survivors.

After over 50 years of injustice, Holocaust survivors and their families are reclaiming what is rightfully theirs. Even as we support these efforts to reclaim stolen property, we must do our part in protecting the proceeds. I thank my colleagues in joining me in supporting this amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I express my support for H.R. 1836, the Tax Reconciliation Act of 2001. This bill is the largest income tax relief bill in 20 years and I believe the American taxpayers deserve and desire this legislation.

The Tax Reconciliation Act goes a long way to relieve taxpayers of an unfair tax burden. This bill provides: broad-based tax relief by reducing tax rates; family tax relief by addressing the Marriage Penalty Tax and by immediately increasing the Child Credit to $600; $150 billion to Estate Tax Relief and by repealing the Estate Tax by 2011; $30 billion in education benefits and $40 billion in retirement and pension benefits, and by extending the availability of the child credit under the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) and by increasing the AMT exemption amount.

I am particularly interested in the estate tax relief because again this year I introduced the Estate and Gift Tax Rate Reduction Act of 2001, S. 31. Estate and gift taxes remain an unfair burden on American families, particularly those who pursue the American dream of owning their own business. Why should family-owned businesses and farms be hit with the highest tax rate when they are handed down to descendants—often immediately following the death of a loved one? These taxes, and the financial burdens and difficulties they create come at the worst possible time. Making a terrible situation worse is the fact that the rate of this estate tax is crushing, reaching as high as 55 percent for the highest bracket. That is higher than even the highest income tax rate bracket of 39 percent.

Furthermore, the tax is due as soon as the business is turned over to the heir, allowing little time for financial planning or the setting aside of money to pay unscheduled tax bills. Estate and gift taxes right now are one of the leading reasons why the number of family-owned farms and businesses are declining. Quite simply, the burden of this tax is just too much.

This tax sends the troubling message that families should either sell the business while they are still alive in order to spare their descendants this huge tax after their passing, or allow the value of the business to decline, so that it won't make it into their higher tax brackets. Whichever the case may be, it hardly seems to encourage private investment and initiative, which have always been such a strong part of our American heritage.

I am pleased that the bill before us takes the important step of addressing this unfair burden. I will continue to work with my colleagues for the complete elimination of the death tax.

I have heard people say that the cost of this bill is too great—that we can't afford it at this time. But I think since we now have a balanced budget and a significant surplus, then the American people deserve this tax relief and they deserve it now. The American people have earned this tax relief.

I know that $1.35 trillion is a lot of money, but we have over a $3 trillion surplus and one reason we have a $3 trillion surplus is the taxpayers got their taxes raised too much. If the American people overpaid, then the American people should get their money back—that is just fair.

The Tax Reconciliation Act of 2001 is the largest middle-class tax relief in twenty years and I think it is high time the hard-working taxpayer get this relief. I support this legislation and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, we have engaged in a very hard-fought battle on the Senate floor since last Thursday. Some would say that this has been a partisan battle, and in many ways it has been a good partisan battle. If you look at the series of amendments that we have considered these past few days, you will see a fundamental philosophical division between the majority of both parties in the Senate.

The Republicans have stood firmly for the proposition that the American people have been overtaxed and deserve a partial refund of the huge $5.6 trillion surplus that is expected to accumulate over the next 10 years. We are not saying all of the surplus should be returned to the American taxpayer, but a modest portion—25 percent deservedly belongs to hard working American families. The remainder will be used to preserve and protect Social Security; enhance Medicare and pay down the national debt.

On the other hand, the Democrats have come up with dozens of amendments that reduce the size and scope of tax cut in order to promote more federal spending. In fact, I think one amendment offered by the senior Senator from Michigan, Mr. LEVIN, pretty much sums up the philosophy of the Democratic Party. That amendment provided that if Government discretionary spending went beyond the amounts set forth in the budget resolution, then the Secretary of the Treasury would be required to raise the top marginal rates paid by individuals.

In other words, let the Congress spend as much of the taxpayers' money as it pleases, with no discipline, no limits and then pay for that spending with administrative tax increases. Thus if Congress spends $200 billion more than budgeted, the Treasury Secretary simply can push a button and the top marginal rate could be 50 percent or 60 percent of whatever it takes to pay for wasteful spending.

Fortunately, that unconstitutional amendment was defeated, though 41 of the 50 Democrats supported the concept of this unconstitutional delegation of taxing authority and the lifting of all discipline or spending.

That said, the final bill before us is a bipartisan measure that will bring much needed tax relief to nearly every taxpayer in the country. And for more than 10 million individuals and families with no income tax liability, they will receive a rebate of payroll taxes; 19 million of the 64 million individuals and families with a top income tax rate of 15 percent will now have a top rate of 10 percent. And that tax cut is immediate and retroactive to January 1, of this year.

More than 30 million families will benefit from the increased child credit, 10 million of whom will receive a refundable child credit. Over more than 40 million couples will benefit from the marriage penalty relief contained in the bill and small businesses, the engine of growth in this country, will now be able to preserve their family assets without the threat that the government will force the business' breakup because of the punitive death tax.

For Alaska Natives, the bill contains a provision that will allow Alaska Native Corporations to establish settlement trusts. This is only fair. These tribal corporations, unlike lower-48 tribes, are required to pay income taxes. Settlement trusts will allow them to invest some of their earnings for the future social benefit of their members.

And for the many employees who work in the building and construction trades, the bill includes a provision that will allow them to receive pensions that better reflect the pension agreements their unions negotiated as part of multi-employer agreements.

This is a fair and balanced tax cut. I would have preferred we would have cut taxes even more, as the President proposed. But the step we take tonight marks the first major tax cut for all Americans in 20 years. I commend the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator GRASSLEY, and the ranking member, Senator BAUCUS, for their diligence and hard work in achieving this important relief for the American taxpayer.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 896, the Restoring Earnings to Lift Individuals and Empower Families, or RELIEF Act of 2001. It is time we ease the tax burden on all American taxpayers and return part of the surplus to the people who created it.

The legislation before us will benefit American taxpayers and improve our Nation's economy. The provisions of the RELIEF Act of 2001 include across-the-board rate reductions for all Americans, repeal of the death tax, reduction of the marriage penalty, doubling of the child credit, and increased incentives for retirement savings and education. This legislation incorporates some good principles of tax policy, such as encouraging investment, strengthening families, and rewarding savings. It takes an important step in the right direction toward a tax policy more worthy of a great nation.

The RELIEF Act of 2001 will encourage economic growth and productivity by strengthening America's small businesses. Small businesses are the backbone of the American economy. They represent over 99 percent of all employers in America and employ half of America's private workforce.

Small business creates 80 percent of all new jobs in America and accounts for about 38 percent of the gross domestic product and half of the gross business product. Because of their ability to adapt quickly to changing market conditions, small businesses are nearly the sole source of job growth during times of economic recession. In short, if we want to provide a stimulus to the present economy, we should do all we can as soon as we can to help America's small businesses.

The legislation before us will greatly help small businesses. First, it kills the death tax. It should come as no surprise to anyone that the death tax is one of the most destructive taxes to small businesses. In one foul swoop, this tax can demolish the work of several generations of entrepreneurs.

The death tax rewards savings and investment with crippling tax rates that all too often force families to sell off their businesses just to pay their bill to the IRS. The death tax is a punitive tax on families by penalizing them for trying to pass on their life's labor to their children. I am pleased that this legislation axes the death tax and sends it to its grave where it belongs.

Secondly, the RELIEF Act of 2001 will help stimulate the economy by empowering small businesses in their effort to provide more jobs, invest in their physical facilities, and develop new products that will benefit American consumers and our Nation as a whole. It is important for everyone to understand that most small business owners file their taxes as individuals. Most do not file as traditional C-corporations, but rather organize as sole proprietorships, partnerships, S-corporations or some other structure that allows them to file their taxes using the tax rates for individuals. Each and every one of these "flow through" businesses that has positive income will benefit from the tax relief before us.

I would like to give my colleagues and the American people an idea of the number of small-business owners who would benefit under the rate reductions in the legislation before us.

There are nearly 17½ million individuals who had income from sole proprietorships in 1999, the last year for which we have complete data. Each one of these 17½ million people will receive tax relief under this legislation. These might be retailers, dentists, general contractors, accountants, or people employed in any other number of occupations that provide the goods and services that we use every day.

I should mention that these numbers only include taxpayers who had income from non-farm sole proprietorships and does not include business owners who may organize using other business entities, such as partnerships or S-Corporations. If we added in the people who file the schedule F for farm income and those who file schedule E for partnership income, the total would probably be in the neighborhood of 24 million. Since we don't have that data broken down by States, we will consider those small business owners who file as sole proprietorships. Keep in mind that the 17½ million is really the floor rather than the ceiling of small business owners who will benefit from the rate reductions in this bill.

To give people an idea of how this tax bill will benefit their constituents, I would like to share some of the numbers from individual States. In my home State of Wyoming, there were 38,000 people with small business income in 1999. By passing this tax relief, each and every one of these business owners would have more money to put into their businesses and benefit the economy as a whole.

Here is how this often works in the real world. Many of these businesses have a profit on paper which effectively puts these business owners into the highest tax bracket for any given year. If they didn't have to pay 40 percent of their income to the Federal Government, they would use this investment money into their business by buying more inventory, building, remodeling, or re-tooling their physical facilities.

Many of these businesses would use this money for testing, research and development of new products and technology which would in time greatly benefit the economy as a whole. In my home State of Wyoming, each of our 38,000 business owners are making a great contribution to our local communities and it is time we let them keep a little more of their own money so they can grow their businesses rather than grow the pork in the Federal budget.

If you look at the other States, you will find that they also have significant number of small business owners who will benefit under the tax relief before us.

Montana has 76,000 business owners who would benefit from this tax relief. Like Wyoming, many of these are Main Street businesses which form the backbone of the economy in our small towns and help perpetuate the western way of life.

Colorado has 329,000 business owners who would benefit from this tax relief. Nebraska has 117,000 small business owners who would see their incomes rise from this tax relief. When you include the number of small business owners who operate farms, I expect this number would be considerable higher.

Similarly, 486,000 small business owners in Georgia would find more money in their pockets if we pass the RELIEF Act of 2001.

I have heard the criticism from some on the other side of the aisle that this tax cut is too tilted toward the rich. Some have said that the President's proposal would give millionaires the money to buy a new Lexus while it would only allow middle income people money to buy a new muffler. I really don't know what world they are living in, but I find it interesting that most of the people who are making these claims don't have any experience owning or operating a small business.

I have heard a number of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle express great concern about the number of mega-mergers between multinational corporations over the past several years. They have argued that these businesses continue to swallow up their smaller competitors in many of our communities and all too often have the effect of eliminating any real local competition. As a former small business owner, I am very sympathetic to these concerns.

My experience has taught me that the small, locally owned family businesses are much more likely to be active in their community. These are the businesses that constantly donate their goods and services to local charities, schools, and civic organizations in an effort to make their towns better places to live. Small business owners live in the same communities where they sell their products or offer their services and this is generally not true of the large, multinational corporations. Since most small businesses pay taxes under the individual rates, this legislation takes an important step in leveling the playing field with their large competitors.

In short, if members of the U.S. Senate want to take one action this year that can greatly aid in the survival of America's more than 17½ million small businesses, they should vote for this tax relief legislation. Members will not have a better opportunity this year to register their support for America's Main Street business owners than the RELIEF Act of 2001.

It is important to understand that we need to lower all the marginal rates to benefit our small businesses. According to treasury data, nearly two-thirds of the taxpayers who would benefit from lowering the top income tax rate are small business owners and entrepreneurs. Contrary to the stereotypes too often painted by the far left, most of the taxpayers in the top income tax bracket are not the idle rich.

Now I have a little experience in owning and operating a small business. I owned operated a Main Street shoe store in Gillette, WY, for 26 years with my wife and our three children. Let me tell you, when I got a tax cut, I did not go out and buy a Lexus. I would take that money and make improvements to my store so that my business would be more successful in the future and I would be better able to provide the services and products that would benefit my family and my community.

I wonder how these 17½ million small-business owners would feel if we told them "you can't have a tax cut, because we don't trust you to spend your own money. You might just waste that tax cut on a luxury car. You better let us keep that money in Washington so we can continue to increase the size and scope of the Federal Government and have a little more control over every aspect of your lives." I don't know who my colleagues are talking with, but I trust the more than 38,000 small-business owners in my State to use their own money as they see fit.

America's taxpayers are long overdue for a return of their surplus. Americans are shouldering the highest peacetime tax burden in our Nation's history. Both the level of taxation and our underlying tax policy are unjust and in desperate need of reform. For too long, we have punished marriage and savings, discouraged innovation and job growth, and punished the same small business owners that deserve much of the credit for our economic success over the past decade.

It is time we listen to the more than 17½ million small business owners spread throughout our States, and our communities. It is they who will benefit from the RELIEF Act of 2001, and they in turn will help us by providing many of the goods and services that we will use every day.

The RELIEF Act of 2001, will benefit every American taxpayer by allowing them to keep some of their own money. It will stimulate the American economy by rewarding entrepreneurship and job creation. It respects marriage and the family. It encourages savings and investment. It gives Americans greater freedom over their incomes and their futures. I applaud Chairman GRASSLEY and Senator BAUCUS for their hard work in writing this legislation and bringing it before the Senate today. We should enact this legislation with all deliberate speed. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the RELIEF Act of 2001.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise in support of the bipartisan tax cut package which passed the Finance Committee on Tuesday.

I first want to thank and commend Chairman GRASSLEY and Ranking Member BAUCUS for working so closely together to build a principled consensus, one that not only brings this pressing issue to the floor in a timely fashion, but will also ultimately benefit the people of this nation. They have worked tirelessly for a fair and balanced tax cut bill, and I believe they have achieved that goal.

Inevitably, none of us will agree with everything in this bill. Some will wish we had done more, some less. But that is the sign of true compromise.

It is not about any one of us getting everything we would like. It's about making a judgment as to whether the preponderance of the measures in a given bill works for the good of the country. That is how the process should function—however difficult that process may be, and however much it may require us as individuals to compromise on facets of the bill we would prefer to be different.

We cannot allow the gears of the deliberative process to become jammed with the monkey-wrench of absolutism. This is not the time to retreat into the false haven of ideological absolutes. Especially in these perilous economic times, we cannot let personal or partisan differences get in the way of passing a fair and meaningful tax cut. Of course we have an obligation to speak our minds and to make changes where and when we can. But we also have an obligation to heed the warning signs our economy is sending.

I think everyone has probably had the opportunity to read at least a number of the myriad articles on the state of the economy. One Business Week article spoke of a terrible first quarter, stating that "the earnings of the 900 companies on Business Week's Corporate Scoreboard plummeted 25 percent from a year earlier . . . The first quarter profit plunge was the Scoreboard's sharpest quarterly drop since the 1990-91 recession."

Productivity fell at a 0.1 percent annual rate in the first quarter—the first quarterly drop in 6 years. And layoffs are at their highest levels since they were first tracked in 1993, with major corporations announcing more than 572,000 job cuts this year. Little wonder, then, that the unemployment rate has risen to 4.5 percent, with April's job loss the largest since February 1991.

Even more ominous is Business Week's recent observation that if wide layoffs of high wage earners continue, the likelihood of recession becomes even greater.

And the Washington Post noted recently that Federal Reserve cuts in interest rates have been the most aggressive since the second quarter of 1982—the worst recession since the Great Depression—and that observation came before the most recent half-percent rate cut. We cannot ignore these economic storm clouds that may portend negative consequences for American workers as well as our economic future.

And while it is true that a tax cut may not actually prevent a recession, if one is in the offing, I well remember the words of Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, who came before the Finance Committee in January.

Chairman Greenspan stated that tax cuts, while perhaps not having an immediate effect, could act as "insurance" should our recent downturn prove to be more than an inventory correction . . . that it could soften the landing and shorten the duration of any recession should it occur. Again, there are ominous clouds on the horizon, and let's keep this in mind as well—"blue chip" economists have indicated just this week that they are factoring the tax cut in their projections.

In fact, if there is one concern I have with this package, it's that, given our growing economic uncertainty and the grim repercussions it could have, we need to do even more this year to get money into the hands of taxpayers and to get the economy back on track.

I know there is an ongoing discussion about whether the best way to do this is to adjust the withholding tables as this bill envisions, or to issue checks directly to taxpayers. In the end, I think that whatever method best gets this into taxpayers hands—be it accelerated withholding, sending checks, or a combination of the two—is an imperative and I would urge the conferees to develop such a plan as they craft the conference report.

The fact of the matter is, the case for cuts has never been more compelling—it's an issue of our economic health and well-being, and it's an issue of fairness for the American taxpayer—who shouldered the burden of the debt and created the surplus in the first place.

As a percent of GDP, Federal taxes are at their highest level, 20.6 percent, since 1944—and all previous record levels occurred during time of war or during the devastating recession of the early-1980s, when interest rates exceeded 20 percent and the highest marginal tax rate was 70 percent.

The fact of the matter is, it would be irresponsible not to return a reasonable portion of the surplus—which is really just an overpayment in the form of taxes—to the American taxpayer. And there should be no mistake—if we fail to pass a meaningful relief package, we will fail both working families and the economy upon which their work depends.

And let us not forget that this package is nearly 25 percent smaller than was proposed by President Bush in his budget. Let us not forget that it will utilize less than one-half of the projected surplus over the coming 10 years, 45.7 percent, excluding both Social Security and Medicare surpluses.

In fact, even with a $1.25 trillion tax cut over the coming ten years, we will still have about $1.5 trillion available for other priorities, including the funding of a new prescription drug benefit and additional debt reduction. Mr. President, this package is neither unreasonable nor irresponsible.

As to the issue that's been raised of "backloading" the tax cuts in this bill, as the chart behind me demonstrates, the structure of the tax package is phased-in to reflect the flow of surpluses projected to accrue over the coming ten years.

Specifically, during the first 5 years, when the non-Social Security and non-Medicare surpluses are smaller, the tax cut is also smaller. In later years, as the surpluses grow, the tax cut grows as well. The alternative is to phase-in the tax cuts more rapidly and dip into the Social Security and Medicare surpluses—not an option at all in my book.

Just as importantly, many of us fought hard to ensure that the benefits of this tax cut package will be weighted toward those who need relief the most—middle and lower-income taxpayers.

We have before us a thoughtful proposal that addresses concerns I, myself, had with the distributional effects of the original package. And it does so in a variety of meaningful ways—retroactively creating a new "10 percent" bracket . . . providing much-needed AMT relief for middle-income families . . . and ensuring marriage penalty relief for all couples while bolstering the Earned Income Tax Credit program by providing $22.5 billion over the duration of the package.

And we didn't stop there. The bipartisan education package that the Finance Committee reported in March is included in this bill, along with a new deduction of up to $5,000 for higher education tuition paid, and a new credit of up to $500 for interest paid on student loans—provisions that I have sought along with Senators TORRICELLI and SCHUMER.

With the cost of college quadrupling over the past 20 years—a rate nearly twice as fast as inflation—and with students borrowing as much during the 1990s as during the 1960s, 1970s, and 1980s combined, these provisions will provide critical assistance to individuals and families grappling with higher education costs.

It also includes the bipartisan IRA and pension package—introduced separately by Senators GRASSLEY and BAUCUS that will not only strengthen and improve access to pensions and IRAs, but also enhance fairness for women who frequently leave the workforce during prime earnings years, and suffer from reduced retirement savings accordingly.

And finally, no package could truly be said to produce fairness without including a refundable child tax credit. That is why I worked with Senators LINCOLN, JEFFORDS, KERRY, and BREAUX—as well as both the chairman and ranking member—to include a provision that builds on the President's proposal to double the $500 per child tax credit by making it refundable to those earning $10,000 or more, retroactive to the beginning of this year.

This is introducing a wholly new concept with respect to that child tax credit, and one that is most assuredly warranted. For the first time we will provide and expand benefits to minimum wage earners.

How will this help? In its original form, the tax relief plan would not have reached all full-time workers—the tax reduction would have disappeared for wage-earners with net incomes of less than about $22,000. Indeed, without refundability, there are almost 16 million children whose families would not benefit from the doubling of the Child Tax Credit. To give an idea of how many children we're really talking about, that is about twice the population of New York City or about 13 times the entire population of my home state of Maine.

Thanks to the changes we have made, the bill now provides a substantial tax credit to a total of 37 million families and 55 million children nationwide who might otherwise have gained no benefit from the proposal to simply double the per-child credit.

Many of these are families earning minimum wage, struggling to make ends meet in addition to paying their share of State and local taxes, payroll taxes, gasoline taxes, phone taxes, sales taxes, and property taxes. All told, the average full-time worker earning the minimum wage pays more than $1,530 in payroll taxes, and more than $300 in Federal excise taxes.

This is no small burden to working families already living on the fiscal edge. In fact, despite America's strong economy, one in six children live in poverty, and the number of low-income children living with a working parent continues to climb. My provision that is included in this bill to make the child tax credit refundable will give these families a hand up as they strive for self-sufficiency, and give these kids the hope of a childhood without poverty.

The partially refundable credit will provide a benefit of up to 15 cents for every dollar earned above a $10,000 per year threshold. In real terms, this year, a working family with one child and an income of $13,000 would be eligible for a refundable credit of $450; and a family with an income of $14,000 would qualify for the full $600 credit.

As tax reductions and the child tax credit are phased in over 10 years, the maximum allowable refundable credit will rise from $500 to $600 this year, increasing to $1,000 by 2011. Families with more than one child would also receive a refundable credit based on their income.

Will this tax relief solve all the financial problems faced by eligible families? No. But it will help to purchase essentials, like groceries, heating fuel, or electricity. And it sends an important message of encouragement that we want those who work hard and strive to improve their lives to succeed. Refundability shows that tax relief is for all full-time working families.

With these kinds of adjustments, we take a critical first step in ensuring that the balance of this package in its totality will help lower and middle income taxpayers.

In fact, in looking at the various analyses of the changes we made to the package, the Joint Tax Committee estimates that those earning less than $50,000 will see their share of Federal taxes drop from 14.3 percent under current law to 13.8 percent in 2006.

Indeed, the largest reductions in the effective tax rates will apply to those in the $20,000 to $40,000 range. Conversely, in 2006—the fifth year of implementation—the share of federal taxes paid by those with incomes of $100,000 or more will increase from 58.4 percent to 59 percent.

Moreover, as a result of the refundability of the child tax credit, according to Joint Tax, those in the $10,000 to $20,000 income range will see their share of federal taxes reduced from 1.5 percent to 1.3 percent—a reduction of $3 billion. And by 2006, this level is down to 1.1 percent.

If you look at upper income brackets, and I know there are those who still have concerns with the top one percent, according to Citizens for Tax Justice, this gives 19 percent of tax cuts to the top one percent who pay 37 percent of taxes, as opposed to 31 percent in the President's original package.

And in terms of the overall package, it is worth noting that creation of the new 10 percent bracket alone accounts for $438.6 billion, while reductions in all other brackets amount to $397.3 billion—that's 52 percent of the cuts going to the lowest bracket, with 48 percent going to all others.

At the same time, the share of federal taxes paid by those with incomes of $50,000 to $100,000 will fall from 27.3 percent to 27.1 percent—and from 14.3 percent to 13.8 percent for those earning under $50,000. So yet again we've seen a shift in the weighting of the bill away from benefits for the higher income brackets.

As for the compromise we developed that results in a reduction of the uppermost bracket from 39.6 to 36 percent, it is worth noting that many individuals in that bracket are small business owners whose business-related income is taxed as personal income.

According to the Treasury Department, in 2006, 63 percent of the tax returns that would benefit from reducing marginal rates in the top two brackets would be reporting some income or loss from a business. And in my home state of Maine, for example, about 97 percent of all businesses are small business.

The reality is, small businesses have played a central role in our nation's economic expansion. From 1992 to 1996, for example, small firms created 75 percent of new jobs—up 10.5 percent—while large-company employment grew by 3.7 percent. So why—when we're talking about such a tremendous impact on individuals and the economy . . . when the top corporate tax rate is 35 percent—why should we continue making small business men and women pay so much more?

I think the American public often thinks about tax cuts the way they would think of winning the lottery it would be great if it really happened, but it in reality it really only happens for "the other guy" . . . that tax cuts will only apply to someone else . . . and if they do happen, they'll be so small as to have no appreciable effect on everyday life.

Well, the American people should know that this tax cut applies to everyone, and especially those who could use the break the most. And that's true not just on paper, but in reality—in the real world.

For example, a married couple with two children and $15,000 in income will pay no income tax. They will receive $4,008 from the earned income tax credit—an increase of $402—and a benefit from the expanded per-child tax credit of $600. That is over $1,000 extra in their pocket—that's going to mean a lot to that family making $15,000 a year.

The point is, this is no phantom tax cut—this is real, this is balanced, and this is fair. And what this all comes down to is, if you are really serious about cutting taxes, you should support this package that begins the process of providing some relief given, once again, the status of our economy and the tax burden on the American people.

We know we are never going to get unanimity on an issue of this magnitude. But we can have progress and we can come to some kind of consensus. This package represents a bipartisan effort that, in the aggregate, is good for our future and good for the American taxpayer today. And it deserves our support.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CRAIG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 38, as follows:

The bill (H.R. 1836), as amended, was passed.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider that vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry: Do we have an agreement to be in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes. If the leader will permit, under the previous order, the Senate insists on its amendments and requests a conference with the House of Representatives.

Under the previous order, the Chair now appoints Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. GRAMM of Texas, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BREAUX conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, even though the distinguished managers of this legislation have just left the Chamber, I want to say once again, as I have earlier, I think we should congratulate our two managers, the chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator GRASSLEY, and the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, MAX BAUCUS. They have done yeoman's work. There are a lot of us who say that the chairman and ranking member of committees should always reach out and try to work together and find a way to have a bipartisan agreement. In this case, these two gentlemen have done it.

Perhaps there is not a total happiness with their agreement on either side. But this is the way it should work. I think they have come up with a good package and they should be commended. We didn't set a record with a number of votes on a package of this nature, but we did do 54 votes on amendments. We went through a lot of hours, having votes basically every 15 minutes. We stayed right with it. They are exhausted, but they are also exhilarated, as they should be, because this is a real good day's work.

I know this legislation is going to be good for America, good for job security, and economic growth for working families of America and for their children. It does have the core components the President asked for but also other areas, such as education, pension savings, and the alternative minimum tax.

So they have done good work, and I am glad we have passed this tax relief package. They now have to go to conference and that, too, will be a challenge. I am sure they are up to it, and they are going to work to make sure the interested parties in the House and the Senate, on both sides of the aisle, are included.

So this has been a real lift to get it completed. I know it has been difficult on both sides of the aisle. I know Senator REID has been here through the long hours—12 hours, I believe, yesterday alone. Senator DASCHLE and I talked many times to try to find a way to bring it to a conclusion. We have been able to achieve that.

The vote speaks for itself; 62 Senators voted aye for tax relief for America. I am very happy that this hurdle has been jumped and now we go to the final stage.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use my leader time to make a few comments about the tax bill. Let me first begin by congratulating the distinguished chairman and the ranking member. While I differ with the outcome, I certainly do not differ with the manner in which they worked together. I appreciate the bipartisan spirit in which they worked, and I hope we can see more of that in the future.

I do hope we can see a different result in the future as we face these critical questions. I believe with all my heart that we will regret the day this passes and is sent to the President for his signature. I think we will regret it, in part, because it is based on projections that are very faulty. We will not realize a $5.7 trillion surplus. I think we can predict that safely. We also recognize that, with the uncertainty of the budget and all of the economic conditions that we will face, to commit to a tax cut of more than $4 trillion in its entirety over a 10-year period of time is not in keeping with the fiscal responsibility that we have all said we are so proud of—the fiscal responsibility that actually brought about surpluses over the course of the last 3 years.

So our first concern has been, and continues to be, that it is based on faulty projections. Our second concern is that it will crowd out all other priorities that we hold, in some cases, in both parties. We say we are for reducing the public debt. I believe that as a result of the passage of this legislation there will be no further reduction of public debt. We all have indicated a willingness to support prescription drug benefits. I predict that as a result of this we will be told we can't afford prescription drug benefits.

We all indicated that we advocate strongly protecting Medicare and Social Security. This bill will force us to tap into the Medicare fund, the Social Security fund, and deny the protection and the kind of viability in those trust funds that we have counted on these last several years. This bill will not allow us to provide the kind of resources for investment in education that we have all said is important to both parties and this country. So across the board, this legislation crowds out and, in some cases, eliminates our opportunity to address America's priorities in a balanced and meaningful way.

The third concern I have is one of fairness. We can do better than this. We ought to do better than this. When we provide a third of a $4 trillion tax cut to the top 1 percent, a third to the next 19 percent, and a third to the bottom 80 percent, that doesn't say much about the balance and our sensitivity and empathy for working families all across this country.

There is only one group of taxpayers who will not receive any marginal rate reduction in this bill, and that is the 72 million taxpayers who will still pay the 15-percent rate. That is wrong. We ought to do better than that. We ought to be sending a clear message that we understand they deserve a tax rate cut like everybody else. But that is not what this bill says. So I am concerned about the fairness. I am concerned about the imbalance that this legislation represents.

Mr. President, for all of those reasons, I regret the fact that we passed this legislation today with the vote that we did. I suspect we will be back addressing budgetary and other implications for many years to come. I hope in the future we will remember our promise, our commitment to fiscal responsibility, our commitment to the other issues that we have all said are important not only to us, but to the country. I hope, in a bipartisan way, our judgment in the future will reflect those commitments more accurately than the one we have just made today.

I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

A PROCEDURAL TRAVESTY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina is recognized.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, just a couple words. The fact is, Mr. President—and I speak advisedly—this is a travesty; it is a travesty economically and, more than that, a travesty procedurally with respect to the Senate. I speak as having served on the Budget Committee since its institution—and as having been its chairman—and I have never seen such a gross abuse of the process.

Specifically, Mr. President, in 1993, which has been compared by the present chairman of the Budget Committee to the action just recently on the floor, in 1993, President Clinton presented his budget. We had hearings on that budget, and we had a markup within the Budget Committee under the rules. There were some 30 votes—and 1 more vote for final passage. Thereafter, when we brought it to the floor of the Senate, we had an additional 52 votes on amendments. Compare this with the majority leader's bragging now about 54 votes—like that was really a task.

The truth of the matter is we didn't get to reconciliation until August. At that particular time, they were really gloating with glee at the passage of the bill and reconciliation, stating that when we increased taxes on Social Security, they were going to hunt us down in the street like dogs and shoot us. They said, when we passed that bill, it was going to cause a depression. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator Packwood, said if this procedure worked back in 1993, which we voted for without a single Republican vote either in the House or in the Senate, that he would give us his home downtown here in the District. And Congressman Kasich, later chairman of the Budget Committee on the House side said, if this thing worked, he would change parties. I want to be a good memory.

I will never forget a conversation once with Bernie Baruch, when he talked about President Truman. He said Truman had a good memory, but he said he had a good, bad memory. That crowd over there has a good, bad memory for the simple reason that they know it is an abuse. They rammed it. Instead of the President presenting a budget, we in the Budget Committee went through make-work hearings—just blather. They could not hear on the President's budget because the President would not submit it.

Of course, when we debated the so-called budget on the floor of the Senate, it was merely a tax cut. It wasn't a budget. The President had yet to submit his budget. It had not been submitted when they voted on it in the House; it had not been submitted when they voted on it in the Senate.

Then, of all things, we did get appointed to the conference committee—only to be told: Get out, we are not going to confer. So we got out.

Then, of all things, they abused the reconciliation process, bringing the tax bill to the floor—not to reconcile, not to lower the deficit, as was intended—and I know because I helped write it—the reconciliation process was used as an abuse to ram it. I know of one Parliamentarian who said it could not be used that way, and then I know of that same Parliamentarian who changed his mind. Oh, yes. Anything to go along and ram it through and give us the bum's rush, and then have the unmitigated gall to call us bums. They have been putting it out that we are just delaying and delaying. But we're not delaying. This is our first opportunity on this bill to financially discuss education, housing, defense, which are all important matters; we are trying to get some break in this bum's rush from leadership.

When I turned on the Republican Policy Committee's channel, channel 2, they said, "Votes will continue ad nauseam." The votes were just nauseous. I have never seen such arrogance. I have been here 34 years, and it is the worst that we have ever experienced. I can tell you that.

But, more importantly, Mr. President, this is a travesty economically. Of course, they make no bones about it. When we did increase Social Security taxes, they complained, but you don't find a decrease of Social Security taxes now. When we increased the gasoline tax, they complained, but you don't find a decrease of the gasoline tax now.

You do not find anything in this bill for working Americans only paying payroll taxes. Instead, they are indirectly increasing the burden on these people by giving everyone but them relief and taking away Government resources.

We approached the budget process in 1993 in a very deliberate fashion. We said: Look at these rising deficits in the national debt and the interest costs on the debt. In 1992, President Bush ran a $403.6 billion deficit. Ergo, the Government was spending over $400 billion more than it was taking in, and, yes, we are for tax cuts.

I have been in politics for a long time, and I have not found a politician yet who was not for tax cuts. But we said the way to give a better tax cut was to lower these long-term interest payments. Alan Greenspan can play around with the short-term, but only the fiscal policy of this Senate can change the long term.

In the 1993 package, we downsized the Government by reducing the federal workforce by almost 300,000; we cut spending by $250 billion; and we increased taxes by slightly less than $250 billion—and it resulted in the greatest prosperity in the history of the entire Nation for an 8-year period.

The reason why the present President Bush cannot sell tax cuts—he has been to over half of the States in America trying to sell them and giving us the bum's rush—is because the people know, the financial markets know, the bankers know, the automobile salesmen know that government borrowing will explode, and everybody is uptight.

This is not a wonderful thing that has occurred in this Chamber and to be congratulated. Economically, it is a travesty. We did it before in 1981. Yes, we picked up 38 votes today. We only had 11 votes then. We had one Republican, Mack Mathias of Maryland, but we did have, as they call now with even one vote—we had a bipartisan opposition. I say that with tongue in cheek, but that was all, just 11 votes, against so-called Reaganomics which the first President Bush called voodoo. Now, Mr. President, you have voodoo II.

There is no education in the second kick of a mule. That first kick within 4½ years put the economy into the dumps. That is when we had no resources and we were trying to hold on, and we were cutting spending under President Reagan.

I know, yes, during the Reagan administration we increased defense, and I supported those increases. But after eight years of Reagan's domestic cuts and four years of cuts under President Bush, we ran enormous deficits because of the $750 billion revenue loss from the Reagan tax cut.

Now we are on course for at least a $1.35 trillion tax cut, but they say after the alternative minimum tax, after the interest costs, that this ought to be in excess of $2 trillion, compared to $750 billion.

There it is. We passed the bill and everybody is going to champion it. We have agreed on this side that it will be conferenced and it will go to the President, but let's not have a third kick of the mule, with more of these coming across the deck as if we had the resources.

Look at the public debt to the penny today on the Treasury Web site and you'll see that currently we are running a $19 billion surplus. However, this tax cut means at least $10 billion in lost revenues this year—with defense, under Secretary Rumsfeld, asking for an additional $10 billion, and agriculture, $10 billion. Then, June comes and we make the big interest payments to the trust funds, the likes of $79 billion. Instead of bringing Government back down to the black, like under the Democrats with President Clinton for 8 years, we are now starting back up today with this vote. Somewhere in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD there ought to be registered that what we have done, in essence, is increased taxes and not lowered them because we are going to increase the debt and we are going to increase the interest costs, already at $366 billion, which are taxes for nothing.

If I pay a gas tax, I get a highway. If I pay a sales tax, I get a schoolhouse. If I pay interest taxes, just profligacy, absolute waste.

I will never forget last year when President Clinton was giving his State of the Union Address, the distinguished majority leader remarked: That man is costing us a billion dollars a minute. He talked for an hour-and-a-half. That was $90 billion.

President Bush wants to cut taxes $90 billion a year. We can pay for the Clinton and the Bush programs, $180 billion, and still have $186 billion left over to increase defense, to increase research at the National Institutes of Health.

We are spending the money, and no one is talking about it. We are not getting anything for it.

In 1968-1969, when we balanced the budget last under President Lyndon Johnson, the interest cost was only $16 billion. We have increased the interest costs without the cost of a war incidentally—$350 billion a year. We cannot afford it.

When the Budget Committee meets, first, before we tackle defense and anything else in the budget, we have to immediately spend $366 billion. The economy is cool, people are not going to be able to save enough money to send their kids to college, they are not going to make their house payments, and we in the Government are thinking that what we have done is really good—the Government is too big, the money belongs to the people and all that childish gibber.

Come on. What we have done has, by gosh, sidelined the people and sidelined this Government and, in essence, politically bought the vote. I do not know where my friend Senator MCCAIN is, but he ought to hasten to the Chamber because the biggest campaign finance abuse has just been voted through the Senate. The majority has bought the people's vote because they would not go back home and explain to the people what is going on here. They went along with the singsong—the money belongs to the people, surplus, surplus, surplus.

We cannot find a surplus. We have not had one in 40 years, and we will not have one this year, and if anybody believes differently, tell them to come see me and we will make the bet and give them the odds. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Oregon). The Senator from Florida.

THE RELIEF ACT

Mr. GRAHAM. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I voted no on the tax bill that passed the Senate. I recognize there are some positive provisions in that legislation. I will speak to two of them. One was in the area of education. There were a number of features which will make it easier for families to send their children to college, the provisions which will make it easier for local school districts to finance the construction of new and to rehabilitate older school buildings. Those are positive features. I also had supported the provisions that dealt with estate tax reform by raising the level of the exemption; that is, the amount of dollars one can exclude before a person calculates the estate tax obligations. By raising those exemptions, we have substantially diminished the number of Americans who will pay any estate tax.

On the whole, I found much more that was disturbing, much more that I considered to be a failure of vision, than I found to be worthy in this legislation. I hope I am wrong. I hope the comments I am going to make prove to be inaccurate in the history we will write in the aftermath of this legislation. Frankly, my experience leads me to doubt that I will be wrong.

I believe in life we are constantly forced to make choices. Those in politics like to avoid making choices. We are very good at telling people what we think they want to hear, even if the cumulative effect of all the things we have told the people we want is incompatible.

For instance, most Members have told the people we want to strengthen Social Security. Most Members have told the people we want to strengthen, reform, and add a prescription drug benefit to Medicare. The fact is, I believe what we have just done is going to make it impossible to deliver on either of those commitments. I hope I am wrong, but I doubt it.

I believe while what we say is not necessarily a true reflection of our choices, how we spend our money is a true reflection of how we will make our choices. I believe there was a metaphor earlier this morning. We had before the Senate legislation that would have provided substantial assistance to individual Americans and American families in dealing with the reality of the aging of our population. One of the lessons of many that we learned from the 2000 census is that America is getting older. I know that well from my own State where almost 19 percent of our population is over the age of 65 and where an increasing percentage of our population is over the age of 85.

Florida is a State of the future. The United States of America will be like Florida in another generation. Yet with the legislation that would have provided immediate assistance to families that were rendering care to an elderly grandparent, an elderly uncle or aunt, some loved one in the family, or to those Americans who are thinking about their own future and are considering the purchase of long-term care insurance so they will not be a burden on their children and grandchildren when they reach advanced age, we had a choice: We could have voted for an amendment that would have made a substantial commitment of the Federal Government to encourage and recognize those kinds of sacrifices, or we could have maintained for a 3-year period the structure of the bill which provides one-third of the tax benefits to 1 percent of the American people.

We would have been asking the 1 percent of the most affluent Americans to have slightly deferred a portion of the benefits from this legislation in order to have been able to pay for substantial incentives for tens of millions of Americans to prepare for their today or future consequences of aging.

I regret to say we chose when we made a decision today. The decision was, it was more important to provide that benefit for the 1 percent of the most wealthy Americans than it was to assist tens of millions of Americans to prepare for their aging families and for their own future. I think that is a real choice that demonstrates real values. Frankly, I am disappointed the Senate made such a selection of values.

Analyzing this bill, I say it fails on three counts, which can all be denominated through the calendar. It failed on a long-term basis; it failed on a short-term basis; and it failed today.

On a long-term basis, there is no greater challenge facing this Nation than the one which that amendment to which I just alluded represents; that is, the aging of America. When Social Security was established in the 1930s, for every person who was in retirement in the United States or was of retirement age, we had some 15 to 20 active people in the labor force, people who were providing the means by which those older Americans of the 1930s could be supported. In just a few years, when the large number of Americans born immediately after World War II reach retirement age, we will be down to fewer than four working Americans for every person retiring.

We have contracts outstanding called Social Security and Medicare Part A hospitalization. These are contracts for which Americans are paying every time they get their paycheck. They look down at the allocation of the dollars they have just worked hard to earn and they see the subtractions. A big part of those subtractions of the dollars is taken out of every paycheck for Social Security. Another part of those subtractions is the part taken out of every paycheck for the hospitalization component of Medicare.

Why are Americans tolerating this reduction from their immediate income? They are tolerating it because they have confidence in the contract which exists between them and the U.S. Government. That contract is that once they reach the age of eligibility for Social Security and Medicare, the services for which they are paying every paycheck are going to be delivered. It is going to be our challenge to see that those contracts are maintained.

Today we are not in a position to say with confidence that those contracts will be able to be honored because both the Social Security trust fund and the Medicare hospitalization trust fund, by any actuarial standard, are seriously under water.

We had an opportunity this year, an opportunity unique in the history of this country with the enormous economic growth and surpluses it has brought, to be able to say to the American people that for the next three generations we will place ourselves in a position to honor those contracts. From now until the year 2075, we will be in a position to say we have the resources, we have made the proper preparations to honor our contractual responsibilities. We would have started that by an aggressive program to pay down the national debt so that as we entered the period of greater demands on Social Security and Medicare, we would have been in the best possible national financial position. We would have done it by supplementing the funds going into the Social Security and Medicare trust funds with a portion of the savings in national interest, about which Senator HOLLINGS spoke so eloquently, that we are going to gain because we are paying down the national debt. A portion of those savings should have gone to strengthen the Social Security and the Medicare trust funds.

The decision we made a few minutes ago by passing what I consider to be an engorged, excessive tax bill will deny us the opportunity to pay down the national debt as fully as we should. We will miss the mark by approximately $750 billion to $1 trillion in the next 10 years—what we could have done to have strengthened our Nation's finances. We are not going to be in the position to make the kind of investments for these trust funds for Social Security and Medicare that we should have made.

I hope I am wrong. I hope I am unduly pessimistic. But, frankly, I doubt that I am.

So we have failed the calendar in the long run. We have also failed the calendar in the short run.

If there is a phrase we have heard too much of in the last few months and have honored too little, it is the phrase "economic stimulus." What would happen if the economy, after a long run of booming, expanding economic growth, suddenly began to turn soft and unemployment levels reached a level we had not seen since the early 1990s?

We all read about substantial layoffs in companies that we thought were invulnerable to those kinds of economic reversals. We have seen the stock market first decline, then come back, then generate a level of uncertainty, unpredictability. All those things were signals of an uncertain but potentially seriously declining economy. So we said: Let's buy an economic insurance policy. Let's not just rely on what the Federal Reserve Board can do with short-term interest rates. Let's adopt a fiscal policy that will help stimulate the economy.

We turned to some of the best experts in the country. They said what the Congress could do would be to give an immediate tax cut to the American people, target that tax cut at those Americans who were most likely to spend it because the essential diagnosis of this economic softening is on the demand side. People are losing confidence in their own economic futures and therefore are less willing to make that downpayment for a new refrigerator, are less willing to buy a new pair of shoes for the children, less willing to plan for a vacation in Florida.

We want to reverse those senses of insecurity and give them an immediate sense of confidence, both by putting more dollars in their pockets as well as giving them a sense that they will have a greater stream of funds available to them to meet their family needs into the future.

So plans were developed for a serious economic stimulus right here on the Senate floor. We will all recall it was not very many days ago that we voted for an $85 billion economic stimulus in the year 2001—$85 billion. What was the economic stimulus in the bill we just passed? Less than $10 billion—anemic, pathetic, not worthy of the phrase "economic stimulus."

So I hope I am wrong. I hope some of the signs we have seen in recent days that maybe the economy is turning around will prove to be a harbinger of a bright summer for America. We all hope so. But just as a person might hope their house doesn't burn down, that still doesn't keep them from buying fire insurance so, in the unlikely event it does burn down, they will have some dollars to start the rebuilding process.

Mr. President, I ask for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. We should be buying an economic insurance policy against the possibility that the bright summer may turn into an arid fall. In the short term, on the No. 1 economic issue facing America, in my judgment we have failed. I hope I am wrong but I doubt that I am.

On the calendar, we failed in the long run; we failed in the short run; we have even failed today. This bill has too much of what I would call bait and switch, where you say this is what you are going to get done. Then when the actual product arrives it is something different.

We have said $1.35 trillion is going to be the outer limits, outer perimeters of tax cuts—not for May of 2001, not even for the year 2001, but for the next 11 years. We have just committed the totality of what we have said is a prudent amount of tax cuts for the next 11 years. Yet at the same time we said that, we had over half of our Members willing to vote to add $50 billion more, beyond the $1.35 trillion, in a debate earlier this morning.

We know we are soon going to get a recommendation from the President and the Secretary of Defense for substantial increases in what it will cost to defend America. Senator McCAIN of Arizona spoke fulsomely about that yesterday. Yet no dollars are in our economic plan for that assured request for additional spending on national defense.

We know we are going to have to spend some more money on Social Security, either the way I suggested, by paying down the debt and putting some of the savings of interest costs directly into the Social Security trust fund, or even a way I do not happen to support but at least it is a way, and that is to begin the process of partial privatization of Social Security. There is a $1 trillion cost over the next 10 years to implement that plan. There is no money in the budget plan to do either of those.

We have had a number of areas in the Tax Code where it is clear we are going to have to have some additional funds. If we do nothing but pass the bill that has just left the Senate, we are going to increase the number of Americans who have to pay the alternative minimum tax from today's approximately 1.5 million to almost 40 million 10 years from now. That is not going to happen. We are going to find some way to moderate the effect of the alternative minimum tax, and that is likely to have a price tag of $200 to $300 billion. Not a penny of that is provided for.

We also know there are going to be a number of extenders required. Extenders are tax provisions that are in the code but only for a short period of time. One of those we passed today, which was to provide an expanded deductibility for families who pay tuition for their child to go to college. We start it in a couple of years and then end it 3 or 4 years later. The reality is we are not going to end it 3 or 4 years later. Once we commence this program of allowing deductibility of the cost of college tuition, which is a good idea, we are going to continue it. Yet we do not have the resources in this budget for that known reality with which we are going to contend.

Today we are poking a very sharp stick in the eye of our fellow Members of this federalist system. Without any consultation, without any consideration of the impact that it will have on their ability to meet basic obligations such as to educate our children, we have just taken $10 billion a year out of the budgets of our 50 State partners in this American system of federalism. Half of that money is going to come out approximately beginning the first of January of the year 2002, well into the budget year that most States will start as of July 1 of this year, running until June 30 of 2002. In the case of my State, our Governor has indicated he is going to have to find somewhere in the range of $150 to $200 billion in the next period to pay for the hole we have just created in his budget beginning in January of 2002.

So by the long-term calendar, the short-term calendar, or today's watch, this is a deficient tax bill. It is a deficient fiscal plan. I hope I am wrong. I hope America will be strong enough, resilient enough to avoid the kind of difficulties we have just given them as our legacy of action today.

I hope I am wrong. But, frankly, I doubt that I am.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, we have just passed a massive tax cut bill. I opposed that legislation. I opposed it because I believe it is fiscally irresponsible. It is not just a conclusion that I reach, but the New York Times said that overall it amounts to another gross abdication of fiscal responsibility. I wish that were not the case. I wish we could have passed a tax cut that I could have supported.

I proposed a tax cut of $900 billion in the context of a budget resolution that would have preserved every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security, every penny of the Medicare trust fund for Medicare, that would have taken the remainder and divided it in thirds: One-third for a tax cut; one-third for high-priority domestic needs, including a prescription drug benefit, money to strengthen our national defense, and resources to improve education. And even with that additional funding for domestic priorities, we would have continued to reduce the role of the Federal Government.

This $900 billion plan was not a tax-and-spend proposal. It would have continued to take down the role of the Federal Government from 18 percent of our national income to 16.5 percent of our national income—the lowest level of Federal spending as a share of our national income since 1951.

Then, with the final third, we would have used that money to strengthen Social Security for the future because we know it is not enough just to save the Social Security trust fund money for Social Security. We also need additional resources to strengthen Social Security for what is to come because every Member in this Chamber knows, when the baby boomers start to retire, the story changes from surpluses to deficits.

One reason I believe this bill is fiscally irresponsible is that it is back-end loaded. It goes from a $1.35 trillion tax cut in this decade to a $4 trillion tax reduction in the second decade, right at the time the baby boomers begin to retire.

I predict now that what we have put in place today will not stand. It will not stand because it is part of an overall budget approach that does not add up. It is going to have to be changed.

I opposed this bill not only because it is fiscally irresponsible, but because it is fundamentally unfair. The top 1 percent of income earners in this country, people who, on average, earn $1.1 million a year, get 33 percent of the benefits. Contrast that with the bottom 60 percent of American taxpayers who get half as much. That does not strike me as fair.

Additional evidence of unfairness is contained in what was done in the rate reductions that are part of this legislation.

We have five income tax brackets in current law. This bill would reduce the rates for four of the five brackets. The one bracket that would get no rate relief is the bracket that applies to the vast majority of the American taxpayers. Seventy percent of the American taxpayers are in the 15-percent bracket, and they get no rate relief, none. I do not know how one justifies that.

In addition to that—in addition to being fiscally irresponsible, in addition to being unfair—this bill flunks the test of stimulus. The senior Senator from Florida made the case, I think, very powerfully and very persuasively. We know the economy is weak now. We ought to provide fiscal stimulus now. Fiscal stimulus can be in the form of either tax reduction or expenditure. But what did we do? We have only $10 billion of fiscal stimulus in this year. In the Senate, we passed $85 billion of fiscal stimulus for this year. Somewhere the vast majority of it got left on the cutting room floor. It makes no economic sense. You provide fiscal stimulus when the economy is weak.

And the economy is weak now. We ought to provide fiscal stimulus now. This bill does not do it.

The final point I want to make is on the alternative minimum tax because currently only 1.5 million—actually somewhat less than 1.5 million—taxpayers are affected by the alternative minimum tax. That is something we passed years ago to make certain the super rich did not avoid taxes altogether. Now we are going to see, under this legislation, nearly 40 million people affected by the alternative minimum tax.

As I have said before, boy, are these people in for a surprise. They thought they were getting a tax reduction, and they are going to wake up and find that not only do they not get a tax reduction, they are getting a tax increase. Under the bill passed today more than 1 in every 4 taxpayers in America are going to be swept up into the alternative minimum tax.

This is not going to happen. It is not going to happen because it cannot happen, just like much of the rest of this bill is not going to happen. It is not going to happen because it is part of an overall budget that does not add up. That is the unfortunate reality of what has happened today. It is part of an overall budget plan that simply does not pass the fiscal responsibility test. I regret that.

I think we could have passed responsible tax reduction, tax reduction that is fair, that is weighted more toward middle-income people in this country than toward the wealthiest among us. And I want to be quick to say, I have nothing against those with great wealth. That is a great opportunity that exists in America. That is part of what makes this country economically strong. But when we are taking the people's money, we have to make judgments about where it should go.

I do not think it is fair to take the people's money and give a third of what is provided for in this tax cut to people who, on average, are earning $1.1 million a year. That is not fair. That is not right. I especially do not think it is fiscally responsible to put in place a tax cut of this magnitude in light of the obvious flaws in the budget that serves as a basis for it.

That basis is a 10-year forecast, a 10-year projection that everybody in this Chamber knows is not going to come true. Even the people who made the forecast say it is not going to come true. They wrote an entire chapter in the book saying there is only a 10-percent chance it is going to come true; a 45-percent chance it is going to be less money. That forecast was written 10 weeks ago, and since then the economy has weakened.

This is unwise. This is not the way we ought to do business. We ought not to lock in a 10-year plan based on a 10-year projection whose makers tell us is highly unlikely to occur. It makes no sense.

This Congress meets every year. We should have passed a more modest tax cut and reserved more money for long-term and short-term debt reduction, so we could be certain we are keeping on course to reduce this national debt.

Unfortunately, the gross national debt of the United States will not be reduced at the end of this 10-year period. It will not be. According to the Congressional Budget Office, the gross debt of the United States is going to be increased under this 10-year plan, from $5.6 trillion today to $6.7 trillion 10 years from now.

That is an increase in the gross indebtedness of the United States. That is not the direction we should be taking.

We ought to have embarked on a policy not only to pay down our short-term debt, the publicly held debt that is paid down under this scenario, but to pay down our long-term debt, our gross debt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank all Senators for their patience and for their goodwill. This has not been easy. This has been a debate that has been conducted under difficult circumstances. I thank Senators. I commend them. Some were justifiably frustrated, as I was, at the short time constraints of this process. But I think, by and large, we have conducted this debate in a dignified way, and I deeply appreciate that.

I most especially thank our chairman, Senator GRASSLEY. He has reached out with me to craft a very fair, bipartisan compromise. He has made all the difference in the world.

I especially thank the assistant Democratic leader, Senator REID. He has been at his post throughout the debate, keeping us on track. I deeply appreciate his fairness, his ability. We were able to pass this bill fairly expeditiously in large part because of the efforts of the Senator from Nevada.

Let me turn to the bill and make the case one more time. Some Senators might say—and they have said—that the tax cut is too large. With deepest respect, I say to those Senators that that issue has been decided in the budget resolution. I also note that we have added a “circuit breaker” to this bill. This provision allows us to make changes to the tax cut if our budget targets are not met.

Some will say the tax cut is unfair. I disagree. This tax cut is very fair. I take issue with many of the statements made on the floor. Some are not entirely accurate.

In the first place, our tax cut is much more fair on a distributional basis than the President's proposal. But forget about the President's proposal for a minute and compare it with current law. If you set aside changes to the estate tax, which virtually every Senator supports, this bill is significantly more progressive than current law. Taxpayers earning less than $100,000 will pay a smaller share of the overall tax burden. Taxpayers earning more than $100,000 will pay a larger share of the overall tax burden. In other words, we make the income tax more progressive, not less. Our income tax system is made more progressive compared with current law, not less.

Let me also remind Senators of some provisions of the bill that are very important. We create a new 10-percent bracket that replaces part of the 15-percent bracket in current law—the single largest piece of the bill. It cuts income taxes for every American who pays income taxes, including everyone in the 15-percent bracket, and it reduces the marginal rate from 15 percent to 10 percent for 19 million low-income taxpayers. That is a rate reduction of one-third.

We double the child credit, and we make it partly refundable. Thirty million families get a higher child tax credit. For 10 million, the credit is refundable.

We expand and simplify the earned income credit. This will help 4 million low-income working families. We include a $35 billion package of education incentives, including a new provision that makes up to $5,000 worth of tuition payments deductible. We expand IRAs; we expand 401(k)s. We create new incentives to help low-income earners save for retirement. We reduce the marriage penalty to the benefit of 40 million couples and, of course, we address the estate tax.

Of course, this bill is not perfect, but it is balanced. It is bipartisan. It is good for taxpayers. It is good for working families, and it is good for the economy. It is good for the country.

Now comes the conference. That is going to be difficult. We want to come back with a bill that is balanced and that is fair; that is, a bill very close to the Senate position. After all, the Senate is 50/50, and it is going to be difficult to come back with a conference report that gets at least 51 votes in the Senate. We will be more likely to attain that the more it adheres to the Senate position. A strong vote for final passage will certainly strengthen our hand, and we did receive a strong vote of 62 Senators.

I respectfully ask my colleagues, especially on this side of the aisle, for their forbearance and for their help as we work on, and work to adopt, the conference report.

I add my deepest thanks and gratitude to the people who did the real work; that is, our staff.

I will begin with John Angell, who is the Democratic staff director, Mr. Calm and Collected, keeping things all nice and even when otherwise people are frenetically running here and there. That is what a good staff director does. Democratic staff director John Angell filled that bill. Mike Evans, deputy staff director, he is our "points of order" guy. He knows more about Senate rules or at least as much as the Parliamentarian. I might say, I deeply relied on him as we worked out points of order. Then there is Mr. Everything, Mr. Russ Sullivan, chief tax counsel. Russ knows this Code as well as anybody I can think of. He is out negotiating. He is advising me. He is helping put amendments together. He has done a heck of a job.

Cary Pugh is our amendments maven. She was making sure all the amendments were worked out and in order. Pat Heck is Mr. R&D and knows that subject more than I care to admit. Maria Freese handled our estate tax matters as well as pension provisions. Mitchell Kent really has helped so much in crafting the child care provisions of the bill, one heck of a job.

We have our Brookings fellows: Luis Rivera and Frank Rodriguez, my thanks to them. Our law clerks: Jonathan Selib and Todd Smith. Jonathan came to work for us last Monday—his baptism by fire. He has worked so hard, such late nights, as has everyone. My deepest thanks to them. They are not getting paid.

Our office manager, Josh LeVasseur, has done a heck of a job. Josh is sort of our home base manager. He keeps our office organized. Our office assistant, Jewel Harper, is always upbeat, always cheerful. And our interns: Lindsay Crawford; Emilie Klein; and Annabelle Bartsch, who has been a numbers cruncher; she did one great job. Our "budgeteer," Alan Cohen. Alan knows more about debts and budgets than I care to admit. Liz Fowler, our chief health counsel, has helped so much with health matters. Tom Klouda, who works on Social Security. And then, of course, Michael Siegel in my personal office has done a super job dealing with the press, and many others in my personal office.

I also commend Senator CONRAD's Budget Committee staff. Senator CONRAD has had about six or seven staff on the floor at all times, probably to carry all those charts he brings over here. I don't know anybody who has more charts than the Senator from North Dakota. They have been very instructive, very helpful.

There is the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. They are the ones who really are not honored enough and do so much work. And I thank the entire floor staff and all the pages.

On the other side of the aisle, I thank Kolan Davis, Mark Prater, Dean Zerbe, Elizabeth Paris, Ed McClellan, Diann

Howland, Brig Pari, Leah Shimp, Jeanne Haggerty, and Gina Falconio.

I save my greatest thanks to those who really have the hardest job of all; that is, our leader, Senator DASCHLE, Democratic leader. Senators from both sides of the aisle pummel him with their requests, with their demands, with what they want. It is an impossible job to be leader in this body. I thank Senator LOTT as well. I have the highest regard and respect for the Senator from South Dakota as well as the Senator from Mississippi. They have done one heck of a job. I wish more Americans knew how hard they tried to corral and herd 100 Senators together to reach a result that is good for our country.

In summary, my heartfelt thanks and gratitude for all the people who have worked so hard. We have other issues ahead of us, more amendments, more bills, but thus far, they have been just great.

I thank, finally, my good friend from Iowa, CHUCK GRASSLEY. Many times I have told the world of the high regard I have for him. It is pretty hard to say much more. He is such a great guy. Deep down, nobody is more salt of the earth, a straight shooter who tells it like it is and is dependable, honest, and direct—making him very popular—my good friend, CHUCK GRASSLEY.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Montana for his kind remarks. More important, I thank him for the cooperation that has been going on since day 1 of this year that we have been working together, bringing to culmination this vote and, eventually, a conference report that we hope will successfully pass the Senate a second time and go to the President with the largest tax cut for working men and women in our country.

In addition to that, this is within the tradition of how the Senate Finance Committee works. I think I have served in the Senate when we had as many as 55 Republicans and as little as 42 Republicans; and in any of those circumstances, the products of the Senate Finance Committee, whatever party controlled it, for the most part, were overwhelmingly bipartisan. On the other hand, if it were not that way, there would not be much chance of getting a bill through this body with 100 Members of the Senate.

I thank the number of people who voted for this bill on final passage. I am not sure I expected that large a number of votes. I expected a sizable number of Democrats, but many more voted than I anticipated. Quite frankly, I didn't expect to get every Republican vote, which we did in the final analysis. I thank all of my colleagues who voted for the bill. Those who didn't vote for it, I thank them very much for their cooperation in letting this come to final passage, even though they did not like it.

So with passage of the RELIEF Act, I feel that struggling families will have more money to make ends meet. Parents and students will be able to more easily afford the cost of a college education. A successful businesswoman will be able to expand and hire more people. A father finally getting a good paycheck after years of work will be able to provide for his aging mother. A farmer won't have to worry about passing on to his children the family farm without selling half of the land, maybe, for estate taxes. The examples are endless, but the great benefits that we realize when we give tax relief to working men and women are great.

I thank many members of the committee staff, both Republican and Democrat. Most of all, I think we have to thank the members of the Finance Committee—each one—for sitting through 10 hours of debate. Roughly a week ago now, we worked day and night to get that bill through. I thank my Finance Committee staff, Mark Prater, with me here, our chief tax counsel; and other tax counsels, including Ed McClellan, Brig Pari, Elizabeth Paris, who is here with me; Dean Zerbe, as well as Diann Howland. These individuals have been the workhorses of the committee, keeping the lights burning long into the night to make this final product the statutory language that it is and the perfection that statutory language must have.

I also thank the entire staff support, particularly Gina Falconio, Leah Shimp, Jeanne Haggerty, and Carla Martin. Lastly, on my side, I thank Kolan Davis and Ted Totman, the committee staff director and deputy staff director, for riding herd on all of this work.

This is a bipartisan bill. It would not have been possible without the close work and cooperation at the staff level. So as chairman of the committee, I have to appreciate and thank the minority staff for their good work, particularly Russ Sullivan, chief tax counsel; as well as Cary Pugh, Pat Heck, Maria Freese, Frank Rodriguez, and Mitchell Kent. In addition, I thank John Angell and Mike Evans for their time and hard work as leaders of the staff for the Democrats.

Let me extend my thanks as well to a person who is not very public—Lindy Paull and her staff at the Joint Committee on Taxation, who probably want to be known for their anonymity. They provide a great deal of extensive knowledge and guidance to this effort, particularly not only in writing but also in their analysis of the cost of legislation—what different policies add up to particular income into the Federal Treasury or less income into the Federal Treasury.

Then I think we should not forget the Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy, Mark Weinberger, and his staff for their assistance because even though they don't have a vote on Capitol Hill, there is a lot of expertise at the U.S. Department of Treasury that this committee—the Senate Finance Committee—has on a regular basis called upon for analysis for their opinions, and also to some extent to give us a view of the executive branch of Government as one more issue in consideration that we ought to have.

My thanks also goes to Jim Fransen and Mark Mathiesen and their capable staff and legislative counsel for taking our ideas and drafting them into statutory language.

Then, finally, as Senator BAUCUS has done, I thank people on his side of the aisle who worked so hard as leaders of the Senate Finance Committee or Senate Budget Committee. I also believe that we would not be here if we had not had a successful budget resolution passed to make room for this third largest tax cut in 50 years, the largest tax cut in the last 20 years. So I thank Senator PETE DOMENICI and his staff director, Bill Hoagland, and the entire Budget Committee staff for their assistance. They were assistants to me during this deliberation, as Senator CONRAD was for Senator BAUCUS, but also that sort of leadership provided the budget resolution.

This is a historical bill for historical times, and I am honored and privileged to be a part of it. Once again, as Senator BAUCUS has said so often, and I have said often, I hope this spirit of bipartisanship continues, as it has, as a tradition in the Finance Committee through our leadership but will also be a standard for other work we do in the Finance Committee; more importantly, that it is something which is contagious, and that there will be closer working relationships and more bipartisanship between all Senators and the products of the Senate.

We go to conference now, and there again we are going to have to produce legislation that hopefully gets the same bipartisan support this bill did. If it is something a little less than that, it can't be much less. I don't want to be gambling that we will get 51 votes when we come to the floor of the Senate after the negotiations are done. I want to make sure that when we come to the floor, we come to the floor in a way that, before we bring the bill up, we have bipartisanship.

The fact is there aren't a lot of Democrats voting for this bill. We can't take for granted the 62 people who have voted for it already.

I wish we could. It would make for a very easy conference. We go there now to negotiate with the other body. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I congratulate my colleagues from Iowa and Montana for the great job they have done. It was a tremendous amount of work, a tremendous amount of patience. I congratulate them.

VITAL DRUG SHORTAGE

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss an emergency situation facing many of our hospitals across the country. It is an emergency that faces our hospitals, many of our doctors but, much more importantly, it is an emergency that faces the tiniest members of our society, and they are babies who are about to be born and premature babies.

Right now, we have a drastically short supply of a vital drug that is used to help save the lives of babies who are born prematurely. Let me explain.

There is a drug called betamethasone, commonly known as Celestone, which is given to mothers who are about to deliver their child early. The drug is designed to help the premature baby's lungs develop more fully and more completely and to help reduce the risk of bleeding in the baby's brain.

This drug is absolutely essential to giving these tiny newborns a chance to live and grow into healthy children.

An obstetrician at Riverside Hospital in Columbus, Dr. Tracy Cook, contacted me about the current shortage of this very necessary drug. From what I understand, many hospitals no longer have a supply of the drug on hand at all, and others have only a few day's worth left in stock. In fact, I have taken a survey around Ohio, and I suspect what I found in Ohio is true across the country, that doctors and hospitals are running low, many are out, some will be out in just a few days.

I have contacted the Secretary of HHS, Mr. Tommy Thompson, as well as the FDA, to enlist their help in getting emergency supplies of the drug shipped to hospitals as soon as possible. The FDA tells us there are some manufacturing problems with the drug which is causing this shortage.

Whatever the delay, I believe it is absolutely critical that we get these drugs to our hospitals so that no lives are lost, no matter what the cause is for this delay. This is a problem which has to be dealt with.

This drug is critical to the health and future of premature babies. I urge my colleagues to support me in urging the FDA to take whatever action is necessary to resolve this problem. The lives of so many newborns hang in the balance.

This is a problem the FDA must address immediately. We have contacted the FDA, and the response we get back is: These are manufacturing problems. That does not tell us what the exact problem is, nor does it tell us what the FDA is doing and what the manufacturer is doing to resolve this problem.

We need some answers from the FDA. This is something that cannot wait 2 weeks or 1 month or 6 months. This problem has to be resolved over the next few days. It is critical for the safety of these newborn children.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

TAX RELIEF

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we have been spending all of our time this week on taxes. I am delighted the tax bill has passed. Certainly there are different views on how to do it. There will always be different views when one raises the question of taxes or spending. There are different points of view. Much has to do with the priorities of people. Much has to do with the philosophy of what one thinks the appropriate role of the Federal Government is, what kinds of programs should be funded by the Federal Government. Those are the broad issues.

I was very pleased when we did follow through, and the House, of course, passed tax relief in the amount of approximately $1.6 trillion, which is what the President requested. The bill that passed the Senate is something less than that. It is still a huge amount of money. Most of us cannot conceive what $1.3 trillion is, but nevertheless it is very close to the same amount and I think deals with the same principles that are so important.

Taxes are one of the highest priorities for this Congress and, indeed, should be. Taxes are high priorities for this Congress because of the fairness question. It is a question of adequately funding appropriate programs.

It is a high priority for the American people for much the same reason in that no one wants to pay more taxes than they have to, but most of us are willing to pay taxes. It is necessary to do that. Fairness is an issue. This is one of the President's first priorities.

Interestingly enough, this and education are the two highest priorities, and soon we deal with the energy issue. Those are the three things that have been talked about the most in the last several months, so it is appropriate this Congress has focused on and made progress in those areas.

The Senate will be going to conference with the House, and hopefully we will have it down to the President perhaps before this week is over. That is an excellent performance.

On the tax bill we went through 50-some votes on amendments, which gave everybody a good opportunity to talk about the different issues. Yet the bill survived pretty much as it was reported out of committee. I congratulate the committee and the leaders.

There are a number of principles involved. We talk about amount always but limited Government is part of it.

One of the reasons for a return of taxes is because the citizens, the American people have paid more taxes than are necessary, and we have a surplus. Clearly, it should go back to the people who paid it.

Quite frankly, my experience is if we have a surplus for very long, we will find a way to spend it even though it may not be one of the highest priorities. The principles of limited Government are very much a part of what we do.

There are questions as to, when one projects out 10 years, how close the projections will come to the actual surpluses. I think any economic projection for 10 years has some variability in it. However, I believe all the professionals who have made this projection indicate it is a very modest projection and, indeed, it is very likely the surpluses will, in fact, even be higher.

It is a time, too, when it is necessary to stimulate the economy. This is one of the ways the economy is stimulated—by letting people spend more of their own money. It is true it takes a while for all of this to kick in, but there will be some immediate impact, and that is vital to the economy.

Fairness in the Tax Code is very important, and we have a hard time with fairness in the Tax Code. This bill provides more fairness in the marriage penalty where two single people who earn a certain amount of money marry, and their tax on the same amount of money is increased. That is a fairness issue and needs to be changed.

It is something we need to do. We talk a lot about the simplicity of the Tax Code.

We didn't do much about that. We are always wanting to give tax credits, so the Tax Code keeps getting larger.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AGAINST WITHDRAWAL FROM BOSNIA

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise today to take strong issue with remarks by Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld as summarized in the Washington Post on May 18 and subsequently reproduced in their entirety on the paper's website, that he is "pushing" to pull U.S. troops out of Bosnia. According to Secretary Rumsfeld, "the military job [in Bosnia] was done three or four years ago."

I firmly believe that Secretary Rumsfeld's analysis of the situation in Bosnia is incorrect, and that his policy prescription would be seriously detrimental to the national security interests of the United States.

First, let me turn to Mr. Rumsfeld's statement that the "military job was done three or four years ago." It is true that IFOR, and then SFOR, successfully separated the largely exhausted warring parties without much difficulty. But to assert that this separation spelled the end of our troops' mission is to define "military" in such a narrow way so as to make it nearly meaningless in the Balkan context.

Putting it in other terms, Secretary Rumsfeld seems to belong to the school that begins talking about so-called "exit strategies" as soon as troops are committed. Of course we need an "exit strategy," and we have had one. The Clinton Administration early on outlined ten detailed benchmarks for Dayton implementation that need to be met before we can say "mission accomplished" and honorably withdraw. These are not secrets. The U.S. Embassy in Sarajevo hands out a list of the benchmarks to all visitors. I must assume that Secretary Rumsfeld is familiar with them, so it seems that he either believes they no longer apply, or that our troops no longer have anything to do with most aspects of Dayton implementation.

From Secretary Rumsfeld's published remarks, I get the impression that he sees anything short of actual combat or the separating of warring parties as inappropriate tasks for our soldiers. If he does, I disagree with him. In fact, his view strikes me as the old syndrome of "preparing to fight the last war." The last two so-called "Strategic Concepts" of NATO have made clear that the most likely security challenges of the twenty-first century will be ethnic and religious strife, transnational crime, terrorism and the like—rather than a frontal attack on the territory of alliance members.

The details bear examination. Little more than two years ago in this city, NATO celebrated its fiftieth anniversary. At that Washington Summit, NATO issued the latest version of its Strategic Concept. I would like to quote several parts of the Strategic Concept in order to show that we and our allies have clearly understood that the military's function is not bound in a narrow straightjacket.

The document, agreed upon by all nineteen NATO members on April 23 and 24, 1999, declares in Article 20 that "large-scale conventional aggression against the Alliance is highly unlikely." It goes on to say the following: "Ethnic and religious rivalries, territorial disputes, inadequate or failed efforts at reform, the abuse of human rights, and the dissolution of states can lead to local and even regional instability."

It then graphically outlines the possible ramifications of such developments: "The resulting tensions could lead to crises affecting Euro-Atlantic stability . . . [and] could affect the security of the Alliance by spilling over into neighboring countries, including NATO countries, or in other ways, and could also affect the security of other states."

Moreover, Article 25 of the 1999 Strategic Concept specifically states that

"The Alliance is committed to a broad approach to security, which recognizes the importance of political, economic, social and environmental factors in addition to the indispensable defense dimension."

How can these factors be addressed? Article 29 mentions the "Alliance's ability to contribute to conflict prevention and crisis management through non-Article 5 crisis response operations."

So, clearly NATO, including the United States, is on record as seeing the threats of this new century as being new, complex, and calling for a variety of responses. In that context the marvelous men and women of our armed forces serving in Bosnia and in Kosovo have taken on many tasks that military people of earlier generations, trained to stop the Red Army from pouring through Germany's Fulda Gap, either do not understand or believe are beneath the dignity of regular troops.

But our troops understand their mission and believe in it. I have spoken at length with our soldiers in SFOR in Bosnia and in KFOR in Kosovo, and the overwhelming majority of them think that their broadly defined pacification activities are making a contribution to lessening the very threats that NATO's Strategic Concept describes.

Skeptics may think that I have gained impressions that I wanted to get. Fair enough, I'm only human. But statistics don't lie. Every year the Pentagon issues re-enlistment targets for troops based abroad. When I stayed at Camp Bondsteel in Kosovo this past winter, I was told that the re-enlistment figures for our Army troops in KFOR were one hundred forty-two percent of target—the highest for any foreign-based units in the entire world. Re-enlistment rates in SFOR in Bosnia are also high. So obviously our troops in the field in the Balkans seem to grasp what Secretary Rumsfeld apparently does not: that what they are doing is important to the security of the United States and is not beneath the dignity of soldiers.

I might also add that the charge that our Balkan-based troops lose their fighting ability has been shown to be another canard used to dress up neo-isolationist ideology. In fact, the U.S. Army has a well thought out program to restore so-called "HIC" or high intensity conflict skills to troops rotating out of the Balkans in a short amount of time. Equally important is the universally accepted fact that the troops who have served in SFOR and KFOR have acquired leadership skills through the missions frowned upon by Secretary Rumsfeld, which they never could have gotten sitting in bases in Germany or elsewhere outside the Balkans.

I understand full well that non-military police forces also have a role to play. That is why several years ago I began calling for the creation of a "gendarmarie" force for crowd pacification and assistance to refugees returning to their homes. In fact, so-called "MSUs" or Multinational Specialized Units were created in Bosnia. Unfortunately, though, their strength has been allowed to decrease. U.S. General Mike Dodson, Commander of SFOR, told me that while he once had nineteen MSU units under his control, the number has shrunk to eleven. They should be beefed up to their former strength.

In addition, new local police forces have been created both in the Federation and in the Republika Srpska. Some of them are functioning well, others not so well.

But neither the MSUs, nor the local police forces, have the clout or inspire the fear in the ultra-nationalists that the regular SFOR troops do. We may not like this situation, but we have to face the facts: Bosnia is not yet fully pacified, and the recipe for curing the unrest is exactly the opposite from talking of withdrawing American troops.

A few months ago, I stood here and said that we are at a critical juncture in Bosnia. The moderate, non-nationalist forces embodied in the "Alliance for Change" political coalition had just made important, even extraordinary, gains by winning, in free and fair elections, control of both the national and the Federation parliaments.

The hardline ultra-nationalist HDZ Bosnian Croat party has violently refused to yield to its democratic defeat. Rather, it announced that it was creating its own "self administration" and withdrew its troops from the Muslim-Croat Federation Army and from cantonal police forces. An international operation that seized the bank through which the HDZ conducted its nefarious activities prompted a violent riot in Mostar in which serious bloodshed was only narrowly averted. After extreme pressure from the West the Bosnian Croat ultra-nationalists have indicated that they may resume participation in government institutions, but the situation remains precarious.

In the Republika Srpska the hardliners who owe their allegiance to indicted war criminal Radovan Karadzic and who are at least rhetorically supported by Yugoslav President Vojislav Kostunica have been up to their old caveman tactics.

Two weeks ago they broke up a ceremony in Banja Luka in which the cornerstone was to have been laid to rebuild the great Ferhadija Mosque, destroyed by Bosnian Serbs in the early 1990s. They trapped two hundred Bosnian and international officials for several hours before they were rescued. As a nice reminder of their lofty cultural level, the Bosnian Serb thugs burned Muslim prayer rugs and let a pig loose on the mosque grounds. Incidentally, although President Kostunica criticized this barbarity, he added that the reconstruction of such buildings was a provocation!

Ultra-nationalists have also rioted in Trebinje and elsewhere against returning refugees.

In short, the situation in Bosnia and Herzegovina is hardly pacified. It is a time of great opportunity, for the hardline Serbs and Croats are reacting to their dwindling power. But it is also a time fraught with danger.

For example, one strictly military task remaining to be accomplished is the amalgamation of the rival armies. If the U.S. forces, and SFOR, would withdraw before this occurs, renewed warfare would almost certainly break out. Instead of publicly musing about exit strategies, we need to be stressing our country's commitment to helping Bosnia and Herzegovina move once and for all beyond the domination of the corrupt ultra-nationalist parties.

Moreover, rather than setting artificially limited goals for our military and then congratulating ourselves on fulfilling them, we need to utilize SFOR to kill the serpent that continues to poison Bosnian life: by apprehending the more than three dozen individuals indicted by The International Criminal Tribunal at The Hague for war crimes who are currently living with impunity in the Republika Srpska. This rogues' gallery includes, above all, Karadzic and General Ratko Mladic—who, according to Carla Del Ponte, the Chief Prosecutor of The Hague War Crimes Tribunal, enjoys the protection of a security detail that is paid for by the Yugoslav army.

SFOR claims that it doesn't know where Karadzic and Mladic are. Well, Mrs. Del Ponte, with whom I met earlier this month, has offered to use her tribunal's capabilities to locate Karadzic and Mladic for SFOR. I think we should take her up on her offer. As long as these two mass murderers are on the loose, there will be no definitive peace in Bosnia. Our British allies have not been squeamish about undertaking risky operations to nab individuals indicted for war crimes. We must get Karadzic and Mladic, and, if necessary, the U.S. Army should be involved.

The linchpin to the strategy of pacifying and democratizing Bosnia and Herzegovina is a continued robust U.S. military presence in SFOR.

Secretary Rumsfeld's comments are bound to boost the spirits of the ultra-nationalist hardliners who, according to a recent report published by the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, "are gambling . . . that [if] they can intimidate or just outlast the international community, they may still succeed in dividing Bosnia into ethnic states."

Moreover, I am certain that the Secretary's comments have reignited concerns among our European allies that they will be left holding the bag in Bosnia.

In the Washington Post interview, Secretary Rumsfeld stressed that there was no friction between him and Secretary of State Colin Powell on this issue.

His comments, however, appear to directly undercut Secretary's Powell's repeated assurances to our European allies during the past several months that the United States "will not cut and run" from the Balkans, and that "we went in together with our allies and we'll go out together."

What on earth is going on here?

Just as Secretary Powell has spent the last six months trying to undo the damage done by similarly ill-considered unilateralist comments in a New York Times interview by Condoleezza Rice, now the President's National Security Advisor, so the Bush Administration spin-doctors were quick to try to explain away the Rumsfeld interview by asserting that his proposals were only part of a process by which we intend to use NATO's Six Month Reviews to reduce our combat troops in Bosnia.

Well, if that's the case, we have a case of "choose your poison." One possibility is that the Bush Administration is, once again, internally out of control as President Bush showed by cutting off EPA Chief Christine Todd Whitman at the knees on carbon dioxide and Secretary Powell on his sensible support of South Korea's "sunshine policy."

The other possibility is that Secretaries Powell and Rumsfeld are, indeed, on the same page, and that "in together, out together" really means that the United States intends to use its unparalleled influence within NATO to force our allies to join us in a precipitous withdrawal before the mission in Bosnia is successfully completed.

Given the choice, I'd opt for poison number one, and wait for this Administration to finally get its act together. But I fear that poison number two is the more likely scenario.

If my fears prove correct, and we withdraw our troops, I predict that renewed fighting in Bosnia is just a matter of time. This next round would be bloody, and, inevitably, we would have to go back in again, at much greater cost in men and materiel. Because no matter how much my neo-isolationist friends salivate at the idea of sitting on the sidelines while the European Union's European Security and Defense Policy rapid-reaction force takes care of things—they will be sorely disappointed, because for the foreseeable future ESDP will need massive American support to function.

You know, I think this town has a great many very intelligent individuals, and Secretary Rumsfeld is one of the brightest of the bunch. It's difficult for me to understand how even the most Asia-centered, or missile defense-centered person, can believe that their new foreign policy emphases have a chance of succeeding if Europe is not stable. And with the Balkans still erupting, Europe will not be stable.

So let's all reread NATO's Strategic Concept and not view our military's tasks through a twentieth century prism. Let's listen to our men and women on the ground in the Balkans. Let's listen to our diplomats who know full well that a stepped up, resolute effort at Dayton implementation—backed up by a still robust SFOR—is what is called for. Let's stop talking about accelerated exit strategies before the mission is successfully accomplished.

NOMINATION ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 8, I would announce to the Senate that the Committee on the Judiciary failed to report the nomination of Ted Olson to be Solicitor General of the United States by a tie vote of 9-9.

NATIONAL MISSING CHILDREN'S DAY AND THE NATIONAL CENTER FOR MISSING AND EXPLOITED CHILDREN

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today I recognize National Missing Children's Day and the great work of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, NCMEC. The NCMEC has made an unmatched contribution in the area of missing children recovery.

At their annual Congressional Breakfast this morning, the NCMEC honored law enforcement officers from around the country for their exemplary performance in recovering missing children and in apprehending child sex offenders. Last year, we honored a Vermonter at this event for his extraordinary work in tracking down a child exploitation offender.

In 1999, I helped pass legislation that authorized funding for the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and I am pleased to see its continued success. Since 1984, when the Center was established, it has handled more than 1.4 million calls through its national Hotline 1-800-THE-LOST; trained more than 161,728 police and other professionals; and published more than 20 million publications that are distributed free of charge. The Center has worked with law enforcement on more than 75,283 missing child cases, resulting in the recovery of 50,605 children.

In 1998 the Center launched the CyberTipline which allows Internet users to report suspicious or illegal activity, including child pornography and online enticement of children for sexual exploitation. Since its launch in 1998, the CyberTipline has received close to 37,000 leads with many of those leading to arrests.

I applaud the ongoing work of the Center, its President, Ernie Allen, and all those dedicated employees and volunteers who make this good work possible. I wish them continued success in the area of missing children recovery.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY last month. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a heinous crime that occurred May 17, 2000 in Holbrook, Massachusetts. A grand jury indicted a 17-year-old high school student on seven charges for attacking a fellow student he believed to be gay. For five months prior to the attack, the perpetrator allegedly harassed the victim. In the attack, which occurred in the school cafeteria, the perpetrator hit the victim five or six times in the head before knocking him to the floor. The attack left the victim with a punctured eardrum and internal bleeding.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation, we can change hearts and minds as well.

MUSCULAR DYSTROPHY

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, S. 805, introduced on May 1, is a vital step toward the day when advanced research will find ways to halt, and even to cure, the maladies of muscular dystrophy.

Muscular dystrophy is a genetic disorder, actually, nine separate genetic disorders, that cause wasting of muscle tissue throughout the body. A quarter of a million Americans of all ages suffer from the disease. One form of it, Duchenne's, strikes young boys, and usually takes their lives before they reach their twentieth birthday. All forms of it are disabling and costly.

Many millions of Americans know about muscular dystrophy and contribute to its relief because since 1966 the entertainer Jerry Lewis has conducted a telethon on Labor Day, calling the nation's attention to muscular dystrophy, and asking help for its victims and their families. The Muscular Dystrophy Association, which Jerry Lewis chairs, has raised hundreds of millions of dollars for the treatment and relief of this disease. It supports over two hundred clinics, and makes wheelchairs and braces available to people suffering from muscular dystrophy.

Part of the money the association raises, about $30 million yearly, goes to support research projects. But if the breakthroughs are to occur that will enable scientists not just to treat, but to halt the disease, research funding must be substantially increased. This is the purpose of S. 805.

It calls upon NIH and the Centers for Disease Control to establish Centers of Excellence, in which intensified clinical research can be conducted that will speed the discovery of cures for the various forms of muscular dystrophy.

It provides the Director of the NIH, and the Directors of the several institutes within NIH where research into muscular dystrophy is being conducted, with authority and responsibility to concentrate and intensify that research effort, with the funds needed to conduct clinical trials. In short, it gives NIH the organization and the mandate to exploit recent advances in gene therapy. The goal is the swiftest possible rescue for children and adults whose lives will otherwise be lost or badly damaged by muscular dystrophy.

I commend my colleagues for introducing S. 805, and I ask that my name be added as a co-sponsor of the bill at its next printing.

UNBORN VICTIMS

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, today I rise to recognize a group of people who are often overlooked—the unborn. Recently, the House has passed legislation that would protect this defenseless group from violent attacks. The Unborn Victims of Violence Act of 2001 would make it a crime to assault or murder an unborn child.

Recently, I have come across several compelling stories that show the importance of this legislation. One such story is of Tracy Marcinlak of Wisconsin. On February 8, 1992, Tracy was pregnant with her son, Zachariah, who was due to be born in four days. That night, Tracy's husband, Glendale Black, brutally beat her and refused to let her get help. Eventually relenting, her husband let her call an ambulance and Tracy was rushed to the hospital. Little Zachariah was delivered by an emergency Caesarean section. It was too late. He had bled to death from blunt-force trauma.

Unfortunately, in 1992, Wisconsin did not have an unborn victims law and state prosecutors were unable to convict Tracy's husband under a law that required them to prove that he intended to kill Zachariah. He was only convicted of assaulting Tracy. Glendale Black, who murdered his own son, is already eligible for parole.

In response to violent acts such as this, the Wisconsin legislature passed one of the nation's strongest unborn victims laws in 1998. However, even today, there is no federal law to prosecute criminals who kill unborn children. The Unborn Victims of Violence Act of 2001 would correct this injustice. Under this law, people like Glendale Black, who kill their unborn children, will be prosecuted in the same manner as if they had murdered someone who is already born.

I applaud my colleagues in the House for passing this important legislation as it will give unborn children a fundamental right—the right to live. Many of our forefathers fought and died to make this a basic right for all Americans. Today, the fight continues. I hope my colleagues in the Senate will join me in this fight and vote yes to the Unborn Victims of Violence Act of 2001.

ROCKY BOY/NORTH CENTRAL MONTANA WATER SYSTEM

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to voice my support for the Rocky Boy/North Central Montana Regional Water System Act of 2001. I join Senator BURNS, Representative REHBERG, and Governor Martz in recognizing the problem that the Chippewa Cree Tribe and other Montana residents in the surrounding area face in getting clean, affordable drinking water. The population of the Rocky Boy Reservation, which grew by over 40 percent in the last decade, is dangerously underserved. Many other residents in the North Central Montana area are completely without water service, and the problem is worsening because of the drought conditions plaguing our State. Many families must haul in their own water, or pay to have it delivered. This is just unacceptable.

Within the region, many homes can turn on the faucet in the kitchen or bathroom and see a black liquid come pouring out. Others are exposing their families to dangerously high levels of arsenic. I ask my colleagues if they would be willing to subject their husbands, wives, and children to these water quality issues? The situation has become so desperate that the current area water systems have “qualified” for the EPA’s Significant Non-compliance list. I say again, this is unacceptable.

Without a reliable, accessible safe drinking water source, North Central Montana cannot diversify its economy or encourage future economic growth.

The Rocky Boy/North Central Montana Regional Water System Act would address these important water needs by constructing a Regional Water System. The system would involve fifteen participants, eight water districts, and six municipalities. It would cover a six-county region, and its service area would span more than 10,000 miles. By allowing current water systems to cooperate under a larger regional framework, the proposal will allow for more efficient management.

For the Chippewa Cree Tribe, the Act would represent the fulfillment of a Water Compact which was ratified by the Montana Legislature and signed by President Clinton in December, 1999. The Compact guaranteed the Tribe a 10,000 acre feet water allocation from the Tiber Reservoir south of Chester. In order to honor this agreement, the Act authorizes the construction of a water treatment plant at Tiber Reservoir, along with the 50 miles of pipeline necessary to connect the Reservoir and the Reservation.

The Rocky Boy/North Central Montana Regional Water System Act is also extremely important to other Montana households as well in the area, in fact, it is important to over 7000 additional households. Fourteen off-reservation towns and counties have expressed their interest in the program by signing an Interlocal Agreement to create the North Central Montana Regional Water Authority. The Authority is the legal entity, required under Montana law, that will administer the non-tribal components of the regional system.

This project is important to me and to North Central Montana. Water is life and without it our communities cannot continue to flourish and grow. This region in Montana is economically very important to our state. But, if they don’t have clean, safe water to drink, their economic future looks uncertain. How will their business continue to expand? How can you build new houses? The answer is simple. They will not and you cannot. Without water, all growth and progress stops.

That is why I will do everything I can to see that this project is authorized and funded.

THE SAVINGS OPPORTUNITY AND CHARITABLE GIVING ACT OF 2001

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today, I rise on behalf of legislation which I have introduced with Senator JOE LIEBERMAN, S. 592, The Savings Opportunity and Charitable Giving Act of 2001. Other bipartisan cosponsors of the underlying bill include Senators HUTCHINSON, DURBIN, BROWNBACK, LANDRIEU, LUGAR, BAYH, DEWINE, MILLER, KYL, JOHNSON, BOB SMITH, SESSIONS, and COCHRAN. The amendment number is 655.

I am disappointed that we have not included in H.R. 1836 the key tax relief provisions of the President’s Faith-Based Initiatives to expand charitable giving opportunities and incentives for all Americans and expansion of savings opportunities through Individual Development Accounts (IDAs) which President Bush also endorsed in his campaign and included in his budget. Just yesterday, in a speech at Notre Dame University, President Bush reaffirmed his vision and support for these initiatives in the effort to enable the community renewal and poverty alleviation efforts throughout this country. I will continue to work with the President and my colleagues to create additional opportunities to advance this initiative this year.

Representatives J.C. WATTS, Jr. and TONY HALL have introduced a similar measure in the House of Representatives along with Speaker HASTERT, H.R. 7, the “Community Solutions Act of 2001.” Charitable or Beneficiary Choice expansion, charitable donations liability reform, and other provisions will be introduced in the Senate, but on a separate track from the tax provisions which have already been introduced in S. 592 and reflect two-thirds of the President’s initial faith-based proposals.

Success in today’s new economy is defined less and less by how much you earn and more and more by how much you own—your asset base. This is great news for the millions of middle-class homeowners who are tapped into America’s economic success, but it is bad news for those who are simply tapped out—those with no assets and little hope of accumulating the means for upward mobility and real financial security. This widening asset gap was underscored in a report issued earlier this year by the Federal Reserve. The Fed found that while the net worth of the typical family has risen substantially in recent years, it has actually dropped substantially for low-income families.

Statistics: For families with annual incomes of less than $10,000, the median net worth dipped from $4,800 in 1995 to $3,600 in 1998. For families with incomes between $10,000 and $25,000, the median net worth fell from $31,000 to $24,800 over the same period. The rate of home ownership among low-income families has dropped as well. For families making less than $10,000, it went from 36.1 percent to 34.5 percent from 1995 to 1998; for those making between $10,000 and $25,000, it fell from 54.9 percent to 51.7 percent.

How do we reverse this troubling trend? IDAs are the unfinished business of the Community Renewal and New Markets Empowerment initiatives which became law in December of 2000 and will increase job opportunities and renew hope in what have been hopeless places. But to sustain this hope, we must provide opportunities for individuals and families to build tangible assets and acquire stable wealth.

Our legislation is aimed at fixing our nation’s growing gap in asset ownership, which keeps millions of low-income workers from achieving the American dream. Most public attention focuses on our growing income gap. Though the booming American economy has delivered significant income gains to the nation’s upper-income earners, lower-income workers have been left on the sidelines. This suggests to some that closing this divide between the have-mosts and the have-least is simply a matter of raising wages. But the reality is that the income gap is a symptom of a larger, more complicated problem.

How do we do this? We believe that the marketplace can provide such opportunity. Non-profit groups around the country have launched innovative private programs that are achieving great success in transforming the "unbanked"—people who have never had a bank account—into unabashed capitalists. Through IDAs, banks and credit unions offer special savings accounts to low-income Americans and match their deposits dollar-for-dollar. In return, participants take an economic literacy course and commit to using their savings to buy a home, upgrade their education or to start a business.

Thousands of people are actively saving today through IDA programs in about 250 neighborhoods nationwide. In one demonstration project undertaken by the Corporation for Enterprise Development (CFED), a leading IDA promoter, 1,300 families have already saved $329,000, which has leveraged an additional $742,000.

While the growth of IDAs has been encouraging, access to IDA programs is still limited and scattered across the nation. The IDA provision of this legislation will expand IDA access nationwide by providing a significant tax credit to financial institutions and community groups that offer IDA accounts. This credit would reimburse banks for the first $500 of matching funds they contribute, thus significantly lowering the cost of offering IDAs. Other state and private funds can also be used to provide an additional match to savings. It also benefits our economy, the long-term stability of which is threatened by our pitiful national savings rate. In fact, according to some estimates, every $1 invested in an IDA returns $5 to the national economy.

What are IDAs? IDAs are matched savings accounts for working Americans restricted to three uses: (1) buying a first home; (2) receiving post-secondary education or training; or (3) starting or expanding a small business. Individual and matching deposits are not co-mingled; all matching dollars are kept in a separate, parallel account. When the account holder has accumulated enough savings and matching funds to purchase the asset (typically over two to four years), and has completed a financial education course, payments from the IDA will be made directly to the asset provider.

Financial institutions (or their contractual affiliates) would be reimbursed for all matching funds provided plus a limited amount of the program and administrative costs incurred (whether directly or through collaborations with other entities). Specifically, the IDA Tax Credit would be the agree-gate amount of all dollar-for-dollar matches provided (up to $500 per person per year), plus a one-time $100 per account credit for financial education, recruiting, marketing, administration, withdrawals, etc., plus an annual $30 per account credit for the administrative cost of maintaining the account. To be eligible for the match, adjusted gross income may not exceed $20,000 (single), $25,000 (head of household), or $40,000 (married).

Supporters: President Bush has expressed support for IDAs in his campaign and included them in his budget and we are working with the Administration to coordinate efforts. Supporting groups include the Credit Union National Association, the Financial Services Roundtable, the Corporation for Enterprise Development, the National Association of Homebuilders, the National Center for Neighborhood Enterprise, the National Federation of Community Development Credit Unions, the National Council for La Raza, and others.

Individual Development Accounts, combined with other community development and wealth creation opportunities, are a first step towards restoring faith in the longstanding American promise of equal opportunity. That faith has been shaken by stark divisions of income and wealth in our society. With the leadership of President Bush and Speaker HASTERT, I am hopeful, along with our other cosponsors, that Congress will take this first step toward restoring the long-cherished American ideals of rewarding hard work, encouraging responsibility, and expanding savings opportunity this year.

The charitable giving incentives provision will initially allow non-itemizers to deduct 50 percent of their charitable giving, after they exceed a cumulative total of $500 in annual donations ($1,000 for joint filers). The deduction will be phased into a 100 percent deduction over the course of 5 years in 10 percent increments. Under current law non-itemizers receive no additional tax benefit for their charitable contributions.

More than 84 million Americans cannot deduct any of their charitable contributions because they do not itemize their tax returns. In contrast, there are 34 million Americans who itemize and receive this benefit. For example, in Pennsylvania, there are nearly 4 million taxpayers who do not itemize deductions while slightly more than 1.5 million taxpayers do itemize.

While Americans are already giving generously to charities making a significant positive impact in our communities, this provision provides an incentive for additional giving and allows non-itemizers who typically have middle to lower middle incomes to also benefit from additional tax relief. In fact, non-itemizers earning less than $30,000 give the highest percentage of their household income to charity. It is estimated that restoring this tax relief provision to merely 50 percent which existed in the 1980's would encourage more than $3 billion of additional charitable giving a year. The phased increase to 100 percent will result in even more additional giving. The floor is included because the standard personal deduction encompasses initial contributions.

One important dimension of promoting charitable efforts helping to revitalize our communities, empower individuals and families, and enhance educational opportunities is encouraging charitable giving. This legislation is a great opportunity to lower the tax burden on the many Americans who have not received any tax relief for their charitable contributions since 1986.

The IRA charitable rollover allows individuals to roll assets from an IRA into a charity or a deferred charitable gift plan without incurring any income tax consequences. The donation would be made to charity directly without ever withdrawing it as income and paying taxes on it.

The rollover can be made as an outright gift, for a charitable remainder annuity trust, charitable remainder unitrust or pooled income fund, or for the issuance of a charitable annuity. The donor would not receive a charitable deduction. This incentive should assist charitable giving in education, social service, and religious charitable efforts.

Food banks are finding it increasingly difficult to meet the demand for food assistance. In the past, food banks have benefitted from the inefficiencies of manufacturing, including the overproduction of merchandise and the manufacturing of cosmetically-flawed products. However, technology has made businesses and manufacturers significantly more efficient. Although beneficial to the company's bottom-line, donations have lessened as a result. The fact is that the demand on our nation's church pantries, soup kitchens and shelters continues to rise, despite our economy.

According to an August 2000 report on Hunger Security by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, 31 million Americans (around 10 percent of our citizens) are living on the edge of hunger. Although this number has declined by 12 percent since 1995, everyone agrees that this figure remains too high.

Unfortunately, many food banks cannot meet this increased demand for food. A December '99 study by the U.S. Conference of Mayors found that requests for emergency food assistance increased by an average of 18 percent in American cities over the previous year and 21 percent of emergency food requests could not be met. Statistics by the United States Department of Agriculture show that up to 96 billion pounds of food goes to waste each year in the United States. If a small percentage of this wasted food could be redirected to food banks, we could make important strides in our fight against hunger. In many ways, current law is a hindrance to food donations.

The tax code provides corporations with a special deduction for donations to food banks, but it excludes farmers, ranchers and restaurant owners from donating food under the same tax incentive. For many of these businesses, it is actually more cost effective to throw away food than donate it to charity. The hunger relief community believes that these changes will markedly increase food donations—whether it is a farmer donating his crop, a restaurant owner contributing excess meals, or a food manufacturer producing specifically for charity.

This bipartisan legislation was introduced separately by Senators LUGAR and LEAHY with 13 additional cosponsors including myself. It has been endorsed by a diverse set of organizations, including America's Second Harvest Food Banks, the Salvation Army, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Union, the National Restaurant Association, and the Grocery Manufacturers of America.

Under current law, when a corporation donates food to a food bank, it is eligible to receive a "special rule" tax deduction. Unfortunately, most companies have found that the "special rule" deduction does not allow them to recoup their actual production costs. Moreover, current law limits the "special rule" deduction only to corporations, thus prohibiting farmers, ranchers, small businesses and restaurant owners from receiving the same tax benefits afforded to corporations.

This provision would encourage additional food donations through three changes to our tax laws:

Expand Deduction to All Business Taxpayers: This bill will extend the "special rule" tax deduction for food donations now afforded only to corporations to all business taxpayers, including farmers and restaurant owners.

Enhance Deduction for Food Donations: This legislation will increase the tax deduction for donated food from basis plus ½ markup to the fair market value of the product, not to exceed twice the product's basis.

Codify Lucky Stores Decision: This bill will codify the Tax Court ruling in Lucky Stores, Inc. v. IRS, in which the Court found that taxpayers should base the determination of fair market value of donated product on recent sales.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in this important bipartisan effort to increase savings opportunities for lower income working Americans, to encourage the charitable giving of all Americans, to provide additional resources for the charitable organizations which serve their communities, and to encourage additional donations of food to alleviate hunger. I would also like to thank President Bush for his leadership in this critical area.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Tuesday, May 22, 2001, the Federal debt stood at $5,658,520,030,420.14, five trillion, six hundred fifty-eight billion, five hundred twenty million, thirty thousand, four hundred twenty dollars and fourteen cents.

One year ago, May 22, 2000, the Federal debt stood at $5,673,858,000,000, five trillion, six hundred seventy-three billion, eight hundred fifty-eight million.

Five years ago, May 22, 1996, the Federal debt stood at $5,117,440,000,000, five trillion, one hundred seventeen billion, four hundred forty million.

Ten years ago, May 22, 1991, the Federal debt stood at $3,464,163,000,000, three trillion, four hundred sixty-four billion, one hundred sixty-three million.

Fifteen years ago, May 22, 1986, the Federal debt stood at $2,030,146,000,000, two trillion, thirty billion, one hundred forty-six million, which reflects a debt increase of more than $3.5 trillion, $3,628,374,030,420.14. Three trillion, six hundred twenty-eight billion, three hundred seventy-four million, thirty thousand, four hundred twenty dollars and fourteen cents during the past 15 years.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RECOGNITION OF LARRY SINCLAIR

• Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, since 1963, the month of May has helped the nation focus on the contributions and achievements of America's older citizens. Fewer people over the age of 65 require nursing home care and more are living on their own, with little or no outside help. Older Americans increasingly redefine modern maturity, re-shape cultural boundaries and dispel age-related stereotypes associated with getting older. They are leaders in our families, in our workplaces and in our communities.

One of these leaders is a 71-year-old man from Davenport, Iowa. Larry Sinclair understands the value of helping others. Through his initiative, compassion, and commitment, he has touched the lives of many in the Davenport community.

Originally from Maine, Mr. Sinclair and his wife, Sylvia, moved to Davenport in 1959. A 33-year veteran of the Rock Island Arsenal, Mr. Sinclair became involved with helping seniors after his retirement. At the time, his mother in Maine was suffering from Alzheimer's Disease and the distance prevented Mr. Sinclair from helping his sister care for her on a regular basis.

After hearing a presentation at church about respite assistance for caregivers, Mr. Sinclair decided it was time to get involved. Although he couldn't go to Maine to give his sister the respite she needed, he could provide help to caregivers in Davenport. For eight years, Mr. Sinclair volunteered up to 10 hours a week to provide relief to caregivers in the community. Although he is no longer actively involved in the program, he still keeps in touch with several of families that he worked with over the years.

Mr. Sinclair's commitment to seniors in the community has been instrumental in the success of one of the few all-volunteer congregate meal sites in Iowa. Eleven years ago, Mr. Sinclair helped establish the meal site at his church. Every Tuesday, he and his wife spend the their day serving a meal to 25-30 seniors. Mr. and Mrs. Sinclair do everything from meal pick-up in the morning to clean-up in the afternoon. Although Mr. Sinclair has the formal title of meal site manager, he gives much of the credit to his wife. He says the two of them make a "pretty good team."

Mr. Sinclair also is highly active in the Great River Bend Area Agency on Aging. He has been a member of the agency's policy board for the past six years, serving as its president last year and vice president this year. As an Operation Restore Trust volunteer he makes presentations to various senior groups, nursing homes and assisted living facilities about Medicare fraud and abuse. He has served as a delegate to aging association meetings in Washington, DC, and he is a member of the agency's nutrition committee and services committee.

In 1959, Mr. Sinclair became a charter member of the West Park Presbyterian Church and he is still actively involved in serving the congregation. Friends know that if they need help, Mr. Sinclair is the first one to call. He serves as an elder in the church and chairman of the committee that is responsible for programming church activities and fundraisers. Mr. Sinclair says he feels it is important for people like him, who have the time to help, to do what they can to keep the church growing for younger members.

A devoted family man, Mr. Sinclair has been married to his wife Sylvia for 50 years. The couple has three daughters, four grandchildren and one great-grandchild. Mr. Sinclair stays physically active by walking with his wife three miles a day. In addition, he enjoys golfing and biking.

With all of these activities, Mr. Sinclair's friends sometimes wonder if he is one of those people who just can't say no. But, Mr. Sinclair refutes that characterization, saying he chooses not to say no because he enjoys what he does.

I want to thank Mr. Sinclair for his contributions to the Davenport community. His initiative and compassionate concern for others is an example to us all that we should always be willing to help others, no matter what our age.●

DR. J. ROBERT SCHRIEFFER

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a distinguished Floridian, and noted scientist, Dr. J. Robert Schrieffer.

On May 31, 2001, Dr. Schrieffer will celebrate his 70th birthday, and I would like to join his many friends and colleagues in extending my best wishes on this special day.

Dr. Schrieffer is a graduate of Eustis High School in Florida, whose studies took him to the University of Illinois, the University of Pennsylvania, and the University of California in Santa Barbara. In 1972, he won the Nobel Prize in Physics for his research on superconductivity.

We welcomed Dr. Schrieffer back to Florida in 1991 when he became the Chief Scientist of the National High Magnetic Field Laboratory at Florida State University in Tallahassee. His dedication has meant that this laboratory has become one of the world's pre-eminent sites for high magnetic field research.

Dr. Schrieffer also serves as a University Eminent Scholar at Florida State. He received the National Medal of Science in 1984. He has been a member of the Council of the National Academy of Science since 1990. He served as President of the American Physical Society in 1996, and was the recipient of the prestigious Oliver E. Buckley Solid State Physics prize in 1968.

The State of Florida, and the Magnetic Laboratory, are fortunate to have Dr. Schrieffer's expertise and enthusiasm. I join Dr. Schrieffer's many friends and colleagues who will undoubtedly be wishing him all the best on May 31st of this year.●

RETIREMENT OF CAROL HURT

● Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise to make a few comments on the retirement of Carol Hurt and her 25 years of dedication to Missouri.

On June 1, 2001, Carol Hurt will retire from the State of Missouri. Her long and varied career has spanned more than 25 years, beginning at the Department of Revenue in 1976. Since then she has held the position of Assistant Director of Administration in the Attorney Generals office and Director of Administration in the State Auditors office. As Governor, I had the privilege to work with Carol Hurt when she was Office Manager for the Governor's office, as did my successor John Ashcroft.

Carol currently serves as a member of the Professional Advisory Board for the Business and Public Administration department for the University of Missouri, the Missouri Institute of Public Administrators and the Association of Governmental Accountants. She has also served the community as a board member for the Greater Missouri Women's Leadership Foundation, Homemaker Heath Care and Rotary International.

Carol will complete her distinguished career of dedication and service at the Missouri Department of Transportation where she is a Senior Human Resource Specialist.

I would like to thank Carol Hurt for her commitment to the state of Missouri and for all her hard work. I join with her family, friends, and colleagues in congratulating her on this outstanding accomplishment and wish her the best in all her future endeavors.●

DEPARTURE OF JAMES A. HARMON FROM THE U.S. EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

● Mrs. CLINTON. Mr. President, I would like to recognize the accomplishments of James A. Harmon, the outgoing Chairman of the Export-Import Bank of the United States. When Chairman Harmon steps down from this position on May 25, he will have served Ex-Im Bank for 4 years, one of the longest terms as Chairman in the Bank's history.

Chairman Harmon came to Ex-Im Bank in 1997 after a distinguished 38-year career as an investment banker in New York. He brought his wealth of private sector experience to Washington and immediately set about the task of enhancing Ex-Im Bank's ability to achieve its important mission, supporting U.S. jobs through exports.

One of the early challenges he had to face was the global financial crisis that hit Asia and other emerging markets in 1997-98. Recognizing the important role Ex-Im Bank could play in this crisis, Chairman Harmon directed the Bank to extend much needed credit to many of the impacted Asian nations to keep trade flowing between this region and the United States. Perhaps the most dramatic example was in South Korea, where Ex-Im Bank provided $1 billion of short-term export credit insurance for South Korean banks that allowed South Korean businesses to purchase urgently needed raw materials and equipment from the United States. Ex-Im Bank supported more than 2,400 transactions in South Korea during this crucial period, compared to less than 60 the prior year. Ex-Im Bank also worked to shore up the struggling Asian markets by coordinating assistance for the region from the other major export credit agencies. Ex-Im Bank's aggressive response to the Asian financial crisis helped stabilize these economies and keep U.S. goods and services flowing to the region until commercial financing was once again available.

Under Chairman Harmon's leadership, Ex-Im Bank forged into new markets in an effort to increase opportunities for U.S. exporters. I am particularly pleased to cite the Bank's expanded involvement in Africa. During Chairman Harmon's tenure, Ex-Im Bank unveiled new programs for facilitating U.S. exports to sub-Saharan Africa and expanded the number of countries in this region for which financing support is available. Notably, Chairman Harmon demonstrated his personal commitment to sub-Saharan Africa by traveling to the region three times, becoming the first Ex-Im Bank Chairman to visit southern Africa. The results of these efforts have been dramatic. Ex-Im Bank support for transactions in sub-Saharan Africa rose from $50 million in 1998 to nearly $1 billion in 2000. I know from my own visits to sub-Saharan Africa the vital importance of increased U.S. trade with the region and I commend Chairman Harmon for his efforts.

Ex-Im Bank also enhanced its presence in Russia and the New Independent States, developing innovative financing structures that allowed U.S. exporters to capitalize on the vast opportunities of this market. In June 2000, Ex-Im Bank launched a Southeast Europe Initiative to develop U.S. trade opportunities in Albania, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Croatia, Macedonia and Romania, an initiative that can help foster the development of these emerging market economies as well as benefit U.S. exporters.

While working to support exports to new markets abroad, Chairman Harmon also pushed Ex-Im Bank to reach out to new groups of exporters here at home. During Chairman Harmon's tenure, Ex-Im Bank implemented program changes and marketing efforts aimed at expanding its support for women- and minority-owned businesses, two groups that have traditionally had difficulty accessing export financing. Chairman Harmon also made environmental exports a top priority, recognizing both the potential export opportunities for U.S. producers of environmental goods and services and the importance of promoting environmentally sound development. At the same time, Chairman Harmon championed the need for greater environmental responsibility in export financing, urging his G-7 and other major export credit agency counterparts to adopt uniform, meaningful environmental standards for the projects they finance.

Jim Harmon has worked tirelessly at Ex-Im Bank to create high-paying export-related jobs here at home by expanding opportunities for U.S. exporters abroad. I am pleased to welcome him back to New York after four years of distinguished service to Ex-Im Bank and the Nation.●

TRIBUTE TO KAHUKU HIGH AND INTERMEDIATE SCHOOL

• Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, I rise in tribute to Kahuku High and Intermediate School located in Kahuku, Hawaii, for its outstanding performance in the "We the People . . . The Citizen and the Constitution" national finals held on April 21–23, 2001, in Washington, DC.

The following Kahuku students competed in the Competition: Brooke Barker, Chenoah Couvillion, Daniel Ditto, James Hayes, Erin Hickman, Dana Ishii, Mostaffah Karodia, Rachael Kekaula, Justin Keys, Losaline Lautaha, Vaueli Ma Sun, Brad Makaiau, Brenda McCallum, Melodie Navalta, Kauilania Ostrem, Travis Ostrem, Jill Peterson, Andrew Pontti, Karess Purcell, Florangelie Ramirez, Dylan Small, Savani Toluta'u, Talahiva Tuifua, Masina Tutor, Jake Whetten, and Melissa Zolkeply.

I commend these young scholars for their remarkable understanding of the fundamental ideals and values of America's constitutional government. Their hard work, sacrifice, and diligence have earned them national distinction, and I join their family and friends in applauding their efforts. These students are our Nation's future leaders, and they someday may be seated on this floor as Senators. Please join me in recognizing them for they are a source of pride, not only for their school and their home State, but also for our Nation.●

TRIBUTE TO FRED KOCHER

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Fred Kocher of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, on being honored as the 2001 Journalist of the Year by the Small Business Administration.

Fred has been the host of New Hampshire's Business for eight years. Every week he reports on the local, regional and national business environment analyzing companies, business trends and economic indicators.

Fred has enhanced the awareness of the issues that face business owners in our state, region and country. He has worked diligently to benefit the business community and has also been a strong advocate on behalf of small business entrepreneurs in New Hampshire.

He is a former small business owner who helped create the New Hampshire International Trade Resource Center in Portsmouth. Fred is currently the Director of Corporate Communications and Investor Relations for NEON Communications, Inc.

Fred has been a contributor to his community serving as president of the New Hampshire High Technology Council and he also served as president of the New Hampshire International Trade Association. Fred is the creator and chairman of the "Politics & Eggs" statewide breakfast series that allows members of the business community to hear directly from presidential candidates every four years.

Fred Kocher has served the citizens of New Hampshire with selfless dedication. I commend him for his contributions to the business community of our state. It is an honor and a privilege to represent him in the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO MARIE MEUNIER-BOUCHARD

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Marie Meunier-Bouchard of Conway, New Hampshire, on being honored as the 2001 Small Business Exporter of the Year by the Small Business Administration.

Marie is the owner of Wild Things, Inc. which designs and manufactures state-of-the-art lightweight climbing equipment and clothing for expedition and mountain climbing. The business sells its products domestically and has also increased export sales to over $3 million. The largest overseas accounts for Wild Things, Inc. includes companies in Korea, Singapore and Hong Kong.

Marie has worked with selfless dedication to the success of her business. She has provided quality products to both the domestic and international markets resulting in impressive financial achievement for the company.

She is a native of France and graduate of the University of Geneva in Switzerland, and is an accomplished mountain climber. Her company was founded in 1981 and sales have grown to $4 million in 2001. Wild Things, Inc. has 15 employees in North Conway and Gorham, and contracts other manufacturing jobs in Chatham and Silver Lake, New Hampshire.

Marie is a proven business leader in the New Hampshire community. I commend her for her selfless dedication to the betterment of her company and the business community in our state. It is an honor and a privilege to represent her in the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO CHARLES W. KELLER

• Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Charles W. Keller of Meredith, New Hampshire, for the honor of receiving the 2001 New Hampshire Small Business Person of the Year Award from the Small Business Administration.

Charles is the president and CEO of C.W. Keller & Associates, Inc., of Plaistow, New Hampshire. His firm manufactures high-end retail display fixtures and executive office furnishings.

He started his business in his garage in the early 1970's as a one-person business. Since then, his firm has experienced steady growth and now employs 35 people, grosses more than $5 million annually, and has expanded its operation projects in Boston, New York, Washington, Los Angeles and the Middle East.

Charles has been recognized by the Small Business Administration as an outstanding business owner who has worked diligently and successfully at building his firm. His talented staff and quality products have attributed to the success of C.W. Keller & Associates, Inc.

Charles has been a strong supporter of the community at large and has served as a director with the New England Chapter of the Architectural Woodwork Institute, for five years. He is also a member of the National Association of Store Fixture Manufacturers. His company contributes to many charitable organizations including the American Cancer Society and the Diabetes Foundation.

Charles Keller has served the citizens of New Hampshire with dedication and charity. I commend him for his success in his business and for his generosity to the charitable organizations in our state. It is an honor and a privilege to represent him in the United States Senate.●

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

REPORT ON THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO THE GOVERNMENT OF LIBERIA—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 22

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to section 204(b) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act, 50 U.S.C. 1703(b) (IEEPA), and section 301 of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1631, I hereby report that I have exercised my statutory authority to expand the scope of an existing national emergency in response to the unusual and extraordinary threat posed to the foreign policy of the United States by the Government of Liberia's complicity in the illicit trade in diamonds from Sierra Leone by the insurgent Revolutionary United Front of Sierra Leone (RUF) and by the Government of Liberia's other forms of support for the RUF. I also have exercised my statutory authority to issue an Executive Order that prohibits the importation into the United States of all rough diamonds from Liberia, whether or not such diamonds originated in Liberia. These actions are mandated in part by United Nations Security Council Resolution 1343 of March 7, 2001.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the Secretary of State, is authorized to issue regulations in exercise of my authorities under the IEEPA and the United Nations Participation Act, 22 U.S.C. 287c, to implement this prohibition. All Federal agencies are also directed to take actions within their authority to carry out the provisions of the Executive Order.

I am enclosing a copy of the Executive Order I have issued. The Order was effective at 12:01 a.m. eastern daylight time on May 23, 2001.

I have authorized these measures in furtherance of Executive Order 13194 of January 18, 2001, and in response to the Government of Liberia's continuing facilitation of and participation in the RUF's illicit trade in diamonds from Sierra Leone and its other forms of support for the RUF. The Government of Liberia's actions in this regard constitute an unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy of the United States because they directly challenge United States foreign policy objectives in the region and the rule-based international order that is crucial to the peace and prosperity of the United States.

In Executive Order 13194, President Clinton responded to the RUF's illicit arms-for-diamonds trade that fuels the brutal, decade-long civil war in Sierra Leone by declaring a national emergency and, consistent with United Nations Security Council Resolution 1306, by prohibiting the importation into the United States of all rough diamonds from Sierra Leone except for those importations controlled through the certificate of origin regime of the Government of Sierra Leone. In a report issued on December 14, 2000, the United Nations Panel of Experts established pursuant to resolution 1306 found that diamonds represent a major and primary source of income for the RUF to sustain and advance its military activities; that the bulk of the RUF diamonds leaves Sierra Leone through Liberia; and that such illicit trade cannot be conducted without the permission and involvement of Liberian government officials at the highest levels. The Panel recommended, among other things, a complete embargo on all diamonds from Liberia until Liberia demonstrates convincingly that it is no longer involved in the trafficking of arms to, or diamonds from, Sierra Leone.

On March 7, 2001, the Security Council unanimously adopted resolution 1343 to impose sanctions against the Government of Liberia. The resolution determined that the Government of Liberia's active support for the RUF in Sierra Leone and other armed rebel groups in neighboring countries constitutes a threat to international peace and security in the region and decided that all states shall impose an immediate arms embargo on Liberia and also shall impose travel and diamond bans on Liberia on May 7, 2001, unless the Council determined before that date that the Government of Liberia had ceased its support for the RUF and for other armed rebel groups and, in particular, had taken a number of concrete steps identified in the resolution. In furtherance of this resolution, the Secretaries of State, Commerce, and Defense have taken steps, under their respective authorities, to implement the arms embargo.

With regard to the travel ban and diamond embargo, the Government of Liberia has failed, notwithstanding the two-month implementation period granted by resolution 1343, to honor its commitments to cease its support for the RUF and other armed rebel groups. As a result, the Security Council did not determine that Liberia has complied with the demands of the Council.

In Proclamation 7359 of October 10, 2000, President Clinton suspended the entry as immigrants and non-immigrants of persons who plan, engage in, or benefit from activities that support the RUF or that otherwise impede the peace process in Sierra Leone. The application of that Proclamation implements the travel ban imposed by resolution 1343.

Finally, for the reasons discussed above and in the enclosed Executive Order, I also have found that the Government of Liberia's continuing facilitation of and participation in the RUF's illicit trade in diamonds from Sierra Leone and its other forms of support for the RUF contribute to the unusual and extraordinary threat to the foreign policy of the United States described in Executive Order 13194 with respect to which the President declared a national emergency. In order to deal with that threat, and consistent with resolution 1343 and this finding, I have taken action to prohibit the importation into the United States of all rough diamonds from Liberia, whether or not such diamonds originated there, in order to contribute to the international effort to bring a prompt end to the illicit arms-for-diamonds trade by which the RUF perpetuates the tragic conflict in Sierra Leone. This action, as well as those discussed above, also expresses our outrage at the Government of Liberia's ongoing contribution to human suffering in Sierra Leone and other neighboring countries, as well as its continuing failure to abide by international norms and the rule of law.

GEORGE W. BUSH.
THE WHITE HOUSE, May 23, 2001.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM-67. A concurrent resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to a comprehensive national energy policy; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 43

Whereas, the nation needs an effective, comprehensive national energy policy which will have an enduring impact on the supply and demand for energy in a manner that will help sustain the strength of the U.S. economy and improve the quality of life in this nation and around the world; and

Whereas, a national energy policy can help ensure that there are energy supplies sufficient to support economic growth with an eye towards improving the quality of life for people the world over; and

Whereas, a national energy policy should encourage responsible use of energy and responsible development of energy resources and efficiencies in order to meet the nation's expectations for secure energy sources while preserving and protecting the nation's environmental health through performance-based regulations founded on sound science; and

Whereas, a national energy policy should support basic and applied scientific research to improve energy availability, conservation, utilization, and environmental performance and should encompass the development, availability, and use of a multitude of different energy sources and fuels; and

Whereas, a national energy policy should incorporate and encourage the significant advances in technology through the past several years which can improve energy production and delivery practices and should incorporate new discoveries and developments of energy resources, particularly those which will cause minimal environmental impact; and

Whereas, recent undesirable experiences with the inability to obtain sufficient energy in some states in this great nation are a good indication of the drastic consequences of a lack of preparation for the ever-changing and rapidly expanding universe of energy development, production, and consumption; and

Whereas, the oil and gas industry has developed technology which reduces the footprint of oil and gas development to a minimum and the industry mitigates this minimal wetlands impact with offsetting environmental enhancements in accordance with Louisiana's no net loss of wetlands policy; and

Whereas, the oil and gas industry has demonstrated its ability to develop outer continental shelf (OCS) resources in a manner which is environmentally responsible and technologically state of the art, resulting in minimal offshore environmental impact and extraordinary hydrocarbon production in the Gulf of Mexico; and

Whereas, Lease Sale 181 offers an area of the Gulf of Mexico with significant oil and gas potential which can be developed with minimal environmental risk, and it is responsible to include the potential of this sale in any national energy plan; and

Whereas, the Coastal Zone Management Act, reauthorization of which is currently pending in congress, contains certain provisions which have been applied in an unreasonable manner to the detriment of securing OCS energy, and congress should be urged, as a matter of national energy policy, to use the pending legislation to reform such provisions and to reform coastal zone management policies generally: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Legislature of Louisiana does hereby memorialize the U.S. Congress to adopt a national energy policy which will prepare our nation for the future through a comprehensive plan for the development, production, delivery, conservation, and consumption of all manner of sources of energy, for a future that includes economic growth and development which allow a better quality of life for all people of the world. Be it further

Resolved, That this policy should specifically include strong support for Lease Sale 181 and for reform of the Coastal Zone Management Act to reflect the original intent of the Act to encourage multiple-use and energy development in an environmentally responsible way. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to each member of the Louisiana congressional delegation and to the presiding officer of each house of the U.S. Congress. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the President and Vice President of the United States.

POM-68. A concurrent resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 87

Whereas, the Legislature in partnership with local citizens, the Department of Agriculture, the University of Hawaii, the United States Department of Agriculture, certain Hawaii and other states' congressional offices, the United States Army, through the Hawaii office of the Small Business Administration, the Rural Economic Transition Assistance—Hawaii Program, and after reviewing selected farming and business research over the last several years concluded that

Hawaii's physical, biotic, cultural, and social environment is capable of serving the country's chocolate food needs by establishing a uniquely aligned full continuum of cacao farming and chocolate industry in Hawaii; and

Whereas, work by the private industry and state and federal governments to date has resulted in the scientific selection and planting of cacao trees of different varieties to match Hawaii's unique multi-climate environment and soil conditions that is conducive to growing high quality varieties of cacao trees all year long; and

Whereas, it is recognized that Hawaii's unique geographic location, climate, and biotic environment qualifies it as the nation's only state that can grow different varieties of cacao all year long; and

Whereas, there are forty seven cacao growing countries worldwide that currently harvest 3,000,000 metric tons of cacao beans annually to supply the world's growing chocolate industry worth $50,000,000,000 in annual sales; and

Whereas, our nation's current and growing dependency on foreign cacao sources will now be partially relieved by Hawaii's high quality, sub-sector premium commodity priced cacao beans; and

Whereas, the United States is domestically growing a new agricultural product that is an important food for our nation's citizens and a food that incorporates other U.S. farm products, such as sugar, milk nuts, and others, to manufacture chocolate; and

Whereas, the United States Department of Agriculture historically and currently funds foreign cacao farming research, including cacao germplasm centers, pests and disease control work, and flavor testing; and

Whereas, by virtue of this Concurrent Resolution, Hawaii announces its intent to compete for such federal funds to shift certain existing funding and other support to Hawaii; and

Whereas, Hawaii will attract world attention to its cacao farming practices and its chocolate manufacturing work, which is aligned with its growing recognition as a high technology, knowledge-based industry state with a broad range of unique human, capital and other resource capabilities; and

Whereas, cacao farming in Hawaii provides a new domestic farming opportunity for Hawaii-based private industry to establish a full continuum of chocolate production including manufacturing, marketing, selling, and commodity trading of cacao beans and chocolate products for Hawaii, the mainland, and the rest of the world's markets; and

Whereas, the enactment of Act 188, Session Laws of Hawaii 2000 that provided $10,000,000 to facilitate construction of new manufacturing facilities in Hawaii county significantly helped launch a new Hawaii-based $22,000,000 (initial capitalization), high technology chocolate manufacturing industry that is fully integrated with multi-island private sector cacao nursery and farming operations located on former sugar cane lands in communities where there is high unemployment and underemployment of farmers and manufacturing workers; and

Whereas, these displaced plantation workers are ideally suited for the continuing employment available through the cacao industry; and

Whereas, Hawaii recognizes the establishment of the new $55,000,000 investment in the Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center in Hilo, Hawaii, which significantly advances the work by the Center in the following areas:

(1) Tropical plant genetic resource management;

(2) Tropical plant physiology, disease and production;

(3) Tropical plant pests research;

(4) Post harvest tropical commodities research; and

(5) Tropical aquaculture management; and

Whereas, cacao farming and chocolate manufacturing in Hawaii is a generational opportunity given the thirty-plus year life of the cacao tree coupled with the additional value of cacao processing and chocolate manufacturing facilities; and

Whereas, cacao farming is a globally valuable food industry that can contribute to a healthy commercial economy that in turn materially contributes to the overall health and well-being of Hawaii; and

Whereas, continuous quality improvement from cacao seed to chocolate sale, over the full continuum of cacao farming, chocolate manufacturing, marketing and sales work, is at the center of Hawaii's national and global private and public operating strategies; and

Whereas, both the United States and Europe each annually consume about one-third of the $50,000,000,000 in global chocolate industry production with the remaining third consumed in the growing Asian Pacific, South and Central American and other countries; and

Whereas, except for Hawaii, major world chocolate manufacturing facilities are located in temperate climate zones that cannot farm cacao; and

Whereas, only forty-seven countries located within twenty degrees of the equator can grow cacao with Hawaii predicting that it can grow approximately five per cent of the world's cacao production within a decade at which time it will rank in the top ten of cacao producing countries in the world; and

Whereas, certain cacao growing foreign countries also farm plants that supply the raw material for the growing worldwide of illegal drug crops; and

Whereas, the federal government funds initiatives to encourage these foreign countries to concentrate their farming efforts on new crops such as cacao farming instead of illegal drugs; and

Whereas, the county of Hawaii, the State, the United States Department of Agriculture, the Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center, and Hawaii's congressional delegation have received solid synergistic encouragement and endorsement from the Chocolate Manufacturers Association, the National Confectioners Association, and the American Cocoa Research Institute to establish a world class U.S. Department of Agriculture—Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center managed cacao germplasm center in Hawaii; and

Whereas, all of these organizations note that a Hawaii-based cacao germplasm center will provide high quality and professional cacao research in Hawaii, which is environmentally sound and historically safe from natural disasters and social turmoil; and

Whereas, support from the chocolate industry for Hawaii's cacao farming and chocolate enterprises was significantly advanced as a result of the authorization to issue $10,000,000 in state special purpose revenue bonds to assist Hawaii Gold Cacao Tree, Inc., with the construction of its chocolate and cacao manufacturing facility in Hawaii; and

Whereas, the special purpose revenue bonds demonstrated Hawaii's commitment to cacao farming and to securing a U.S. Department of Agriculture—Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center-managed cacao germplasm center: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twenty-First Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2001, the Senate concurring, That the Congress and the U.S. Department of Agriculture are urged to establish and fund a U.S. Department of Agriculture—Pacific Basin Agricultural Research Center-managed cacao germplasm center in Hawaii; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Concurrent Resolution be transmitted to the President of the U.S. Senate, the Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Secretary of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and to the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation.

POM-69. A resolution adopted by the House of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii relative to children with disabilities; to the Committee on Appropriations.

HOUSE RESOLUTION NO. 38

Whereas, under Title 20, section 1411(a) of the United States Code, the maximum amount of federal funds that a state may receive for special education and related services is the number of children with disabilities in the State who are receiving special education and related services multiplied by forty per cent of the average per-pupil expenditure in public elementary and secondary schools in the United States; and

Whereas, since the enactment of the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975 and its subsequent amendments, including the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act of 1990, Congress has appropriated funds for a maximum of ten per cent of special education and related services for children with disabilities when federal law authorizes the appropriation of up to forty per cent; and

Whereas, the Hawaii Department of Education received approximately $23,500,000 in federal funds during fiscal year 1999–2000 for what was then referred to as “education of the handicapped”. If this figure represented an appropriation of funds for ten per cent of special education and related services for children with disabilities, then an appropriation of forty per cent would have equaled $94,000,000; and

Whereas, the difference between an appropriation of forty per cent and an appropriation of ten per cent for “education of the handicapped” would amount to $70,500,000 just for the Department of Education. If the number of students receiving special education and related services equaled 22,000 during fiscal year 1999–2000, then the difference would have amounted to approximately $3,200 per student; and

Whereas, the State of Hawaii, through the Felix consent decree, is being compelled by the federal district court to make up for more than twenty years of insufficient funding for special education and related services—funding that should have been borne substantially by Congress, which enacted the Education for All Handicapped Children Act of 1975 and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act of 1990; and

Whereas, if Congress is going to mandate new programs or increase the level of service under existing programs for children with disabilities, and if it is going to give the federal courts unfettered power to enforce these mandates through the imposition of fines and the appointment of masters, then Congress should provide sufficient funding for special education and related services: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the House of Representatives of the Twenty-first Legislature of the State of Hawaii, Regular Session of 2001, that the United States Congress is requested to appropriate funds for forty per cent of special education and related services for children with disabilities; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President pro tempore of the United States Senate, the Vice-President of the United States, and the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation.

POM-70. A resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Kentucky relative to the Railroad Retirement and Survivors' Improvement Act; to the Committee on Finance.

RESOLUTION NO. 70

Whereas, the Railroad Retirement and Survivors' Improvement Act of 2000 was approved in a bipartisan effort by 391 members of the United States House of Representatives in the 106th Congress, including the entire Kentucky delegation to Congress; and

Whereas, more than 80 United States Senators, including both Kentucky Senator Mitch McConnell and Kentucky Senator Jim Bunning, signed letters of support for this legislation in 2000; and

Whereas, the bill now before the 107th Congress modernizes the railroad retirement system for its 748,000 beneficiaries nationwide, including over 16,600 in Kentucky; and

Whereas, railroad management, labor, and retiree organizations have agreed to support this legislation; and

Whereas, this legislation provides tax relief to freight railroad, Amtrak, and commuter lines; and

Whereas, this legislation provides benefits improvements for surviving spouses of rail workers who currently suffer deep cuts in income when the rail retiree dies; and

Whereas, no outside contributions from taxpayers are needed to implement the changes called for in this legislation; and

Whereas, all changes will be paid for from within the railroad industry, including a full share by active employees: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

Section 1. This honorable body hereby urges the United States Congress to support the Railroad Retirement and Survivors' Improvement Act in the 107th Congress.

Section 2. That the Clerk of the Senate is hereby directed to transmit a copy of this Resolution to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, members of the Kentucky Congressional delegation, and to the United Transportation Union, 3904 Bishop Lane, Suite #5, Louisville, KY 40218.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 935. A bill to authorize the negotiation of a Free Trade Agreement with the commonwealth of Australia, and to provide for expedited congressional consideration of such an agreement; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 943. A bill to authorize the negotiation of a Free Trade Agreement with New Zealand, and to provide for expedited congressional consideration of such an agreement; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 944. A bill to authorize the negotiation of a Free Trade Agreement with the Republic of Korea and to provide for expedited congressional consideration of such an agreement; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise to send three separate bills to the desk, S. 935, S. 943, and S. 944. The bills I am introducing provide authority to negotiate bilateral free trade agreements with three important trading partners: New Zealand, Australia, and the Republic of Korea.

Over the next several months, the Senate will turn its attention to international trade. As we do so, we find ourselves under serious scrutiny. Will we be able to reach consensus? Will we be able to break the impasse?

I don't know the answers to these questions. I have been working hard to find common ground on issues like labor and the environment, and on ensuring the strength of our trade laws. I will continue to do so. But we have a long way to go.

As we think about these issues, though, there is another, more subtle logjam within the trade agenda. Right now, our vision of the future seems locked in on sweeping, multilateral agreements, Free Trade for the Americas, the launch of a new round of global trade negotiations under the WTO.

These are enormous and complicated undertakings. These agreements are also major opportunities for trade liberalization, and we should continue to work hard to get agreements that are good for our workers, farmers, and companies.

But it is interesting to listen to the rhetoric. Why can't we advance labor and environment issues in the WTO? Some say developing countries simply would not allow it. Why can't we agree that our fair trade laws are not for sale in FTAA negotiations? Some say Brazil will never relent.

Indeed, our trade policy seems to have become so focused on sweeping multilateral agreements, that we ignore other avenues to trade liberalization—much to the detriment of U.S. competitiveness.

Take a closer look at this so-called trade impasse: The U.S.-Jordan Free Trade Agreement contains extensive and enforceable provisions on labor and the environment. Our free trade agreement with Canada and Mexico also addresses labor and environmental issues, with potential recourse to trade sanctions. We are moving towards completing an agreement with Chile—a country we know is open to labor and environment issues because they just recently struck a free trade agreement with Canada that includes enforceable provisions on both.

What's the moral of this story? It's simple. These agreements demonstrate we can break the impasse on trade.

Indeed, we must move forward where we can, whenever we can. If not fast track for all, then fast-track for some, specifically, those countries where we have strategic commercial and political interests. Those countries that will share our commitment to open markets, and our values for environmental quality and labor rights.

Today, I am introducing legislation that would authorize trade negotiations with Australia, New Zealand, and the Republic of Korea. It would grant fast track consideration for these agreements, while also establishing a general policy framework for future negotiations.

Trade agreements must address the full range of issues, from guaranteeing national treatment and market access, to protecting intellectual property. From promoting electronic commerce to ensuring that countries do not gain unfair advantage by lowering labor and environmental standards. And these agreements must not weaken our fair trade laws.

I believe there are many countries ready to take that deal. Australia and New Zealand are two countries eager to negotiate free trade agreements. We must continue to build our economic alliances in the Asia-Pacific region, and both countries have been strong partners in trade. We must also be realistic. An FTA would present tremendous opportunities, but we must recognize where there are differences. One such difference is the operation of the Australian wheat board, which, despite recent reforms, still works to distort world markets. Agriculture negotiations with both countries would require careful treatment, but should allow us to better work together to reduce unfair trade barriers in other parts of the world.

A trade agreement with Korea will take more time, as the issues are more difficult to resolve. For example, Korea maintains very high tariffs on beef, hurting ranchers in my home state of Montana. High tariffs, high taxes, and other trade-restrictive practices in Korea, reduce the competitiveness of American automobiles from Michigan and Ohio. Government subsidies in Korea undercut American semiconductor manufacturers in Idaho and Utah.

But we must not wait to negotiate agreements until all these problems are solved. Rather, we should use FTA negotiations as part of the solution. And with Korea, there are benefits that extend well beyond trade. An FTA would help lock in Korea's economic and political progress, and would also be an important part of our strategic interests in Asia.

The bottom line is this: while America hesitates on trade liberalization, and while many reject trying to reach a bipartisan consensus, the rest of the world continues to move forward. Regional trade arrangements in Europe, Latin America, and Asia put U.S. exporters at a competitive disadvantage. We lose overseas markets to foreign competitors who enjoy trade preferences for which our farmers, manufacturers, and service providers are ineligible.

I hope this legislation will send a strong signal to the rest of the world: America intends to continue its leadership in the global trading system.

By Mr. ALLARD (for himself, Mr. JOHNSON, and Mr. THOMAS):

S. 936. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to expand S corporation eligibility for banks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce legislation that will expand and improve Subchapter S of the Internal Revenue Code. I am joined in this effort by Senators TIM JOHNSON and CRAIG THOMAS. I have introduced this legislation over the last few years and I am hopeful that this year we can get this important tax legislation enacted.

The Subchapter S provision of the Internal Revenue Code reflect the desire of Congress to eliminate the double tax burden on small business corporations. Pursuant to that desire, Subchapter S has been liberalized a number of times, most recently in 1996. This legislation contains several provisions that will make the Subchapter S election more widely available to small businesses in all sectors. It also contains several provisions of particular benefit to community banks that may be contemplating a conversion to Subchapter S. Financial institutions were first made eligible for the Subchapter S election in 1996. This legislation builds on and clarifies the Subchapter S provisions applicable to financial institutions.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and an explanation of the provisions of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the additional material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 936

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business and Financial Institutions Tax Relief Act of 2001".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SMALL BUSINESS AND FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS TAX RELIEF ACT OF 2001—SUMMARY

This legislation expands Subchapter S of the IRS Code. Subchapter S corporations do not pay corporate income taxes, earnings are passed through to the shareholders where income taxes are paid, eliminating the double taxation of corporations. By contrast, Subchapter C corporations pay corporate income taxes on earnings, and shareholders pay income taxes again on those same earnings when they pass through as dividends. Subchapter S of the IRS Code was enacted in 1958 to reduce the tax burden on small business. The Subchapter S provisions have been liberalized a number of times over the last two decades, significantly in 1982, and again in 1996. This reflects a desire on the part of Congress to reduce taxes on small business.

This S corporation legislation would benefit many small businesses, but its provisions are particularly applicable to banks.

Congress made S corporation status available to small banks for the first time in the 1996 “Small Business Job Protection Act” but many banks are having trouble qualifying under the current rules. The proposed legislation:

Permits S corporation shares to be held as Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs), and permit IRA shareholders to purchase their shares from the IRA in order to facilitate a Subchapter S election.

Clarifies that interest and dividends on investments maintained by a bank for liquidity and safety and soundness purposes shall not be “passive” income. This is necessary because S corporations are restricted in the amount of passive investment income they may generate.

Increases the number of S corporation eligible shareholders from 75 to 150.

Provides that any stock that bank directors must hold under banking regulations shall not be a disqualifying second class of stock. This is necessary because S corporations are permitted only one class of stock.

Permits banks to treat bad debt charge offs as items of built in loss over the same number of years that the accumulated bad debt reserve must be recaptured (four years) for built in gains tax purposes. This provision is necessary to properly match built in gains and losses relating to accounting for bad debts. Banks that are converting to S corporations must convert from the reserve method of accounting to the specific charge off method and the recapture of the accumulated bad debt reserve is built in gain. Presently the presumption that a bad debt charge off is a built in loss applies only to the first S corporation year.

Clarifies that the general 3 Year S corporation rule for certain “preference” items applies to interest deductions by S corporation banks, thereby providing equitable treatment for S corporation banks. S corporations that convert from C corporations are denied certain interest deductions preference items for up to 3 years after the conversion, at the end of 3 years the deductions are allowed.

Provides that non-health care related fringe benefits such as group-term life insurance will be excludable from wages for “more-than-two-percent” shareholders. Current law taxes the fringe benefits of these shareholders. Health care related benefits are not included because their deductibility would increase the revenue impact of the legislation.

Permits Family Limited Partnerships to be shareholders in subchapter S corporations. Many family owned small businesses are organized as Family Limited Partnerships or controlled by Family Limited Partnerships for a variety of reasons. A number of small banks have Family Limited Partnership shareholders, and this legislation would for the first time permit those partnerships to be S corporation shareholders.

Permits S corporations to issue preferred stock in addition to common. Prohibited under current law which permits S corporations to have only one class of stock. Because of limitations on the number of common shareholders, banks need to be able to issue preferred stock in order to have adequate access to equity.

Facilitates charitable giving by S corporation shareholders by providing a basis increase for the excess of the charitable contribution deduction over the basis of property contributed. Current law penalizes a shareholder who makes a charitable contribution through an S corporation by limiting the charitable deduction that flows through to the shareholder to the basis of the donated property. This means that the shareholder is unable to benefit from the full fair market value deduction when the basis does not reflect the appreciation in the property. This differs from the full value deduction afforded the taxpayer who donates property in an individual capacity or through a partnership, instead of through an S corporation.

Reduces the required level of shareholder consent to convert to an S corporation from unanimous to 90 percent of shares.

Clarifies that Qualified Subchapter S Subsidiaries (QSSS) provide information returns under their own tax id number. This can help avoid confusion by depositors and other parties over the insurance of deposits and the payer of salaries and interest.

By Mr. CLELAND (for himself, Mr. WARNER, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. REED, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mrs. CARNAHAN, Mr. DAYTON, Mr. BINGAMAN, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 937. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to permit the transfer of entitlement to educational assistance in the Montgomery GI bill by members of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans’ Affairs.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I come before you today to introduce legislation that addresses the educational needs of our men and women in uniform and their families. I appreciate the support of my colleagues who have supported my provisions to enhance the GI bill, Senators LEVIN, KENNEDY, BINGAMAN, REED, DAYTON, LANDRIEU, and CARNAHAN. I also like to recognize the Chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator WARNER, who himself went to school on the GI bill. I want to thank him for his cosponsorship, support and encouragement in improving the GI bill for military personnel and their families.

I call this measure the HOPE, Help Our Professionals Educationally, Act.

In 1999, Time magazine named the American GI as the Person of the Century. That alone is a statement about the value of our military personnel. They are recognized around the world for their dedication and commitment to fight for our country and for peace in the world. This past century has been filled with strife and conflict. During this period, the American GI has fought in the trenches during the first World War, the beaches at Normandy, in the jungles of Vietnam, in the deserts of the Persian Gulf, and most recently in the Balkans and Kosovo.

The face of our military and the people who fight our wars has changed. The traditional image of the single, mostly male, drafted, and disposable soldier is gone. Today we are fielding the force for the 21st century. This new force is a volunteer force, filled with men and women who are highly skilled, married, and definitely not disposable.

Gone are the days when quality of life for a GI included a beer in the barracks and a three-day pass. Now, we know we have to recruit a soldier and retain a family.

We have won the cold war, this victory has changed the world and our military. The new world order has given us a new world disorder. The United States is responding to crises around the globe, whether it be strategic bombing or humanitarian assistance, and our military is the our most effective response. In order to meet these challenges, we are retooling our forces to be lighter, leaner and meaner. This is a positive move. Along with this lighter force, our military professionals must be highly educated and highly trained.

Our Nation has recently experienced the longest running peacetime economic growth in history. This economic expansion has been a boom for our Nation. However, there is a negative impact of this growing economy. With the enticement of quick prosperity in the civilian sector it is more difficult than ever to recruit and retain our highly skilled force.

The services have increased their budgets for advertising and refocused attention on recruiting. However, we still face problems in retaining some of the key skills that our service men and women possess—skills that our new economy is demanding. The highly trained technical skilled personnel are leaving the military to seek a better quality of life for their family outside of our military.

As I have heard so often, the decision to stay in the military is made at the dinner table. It was the wisdom of a young enlisted soldier at Schofield Barracks who noted, when the choice is 'stay in the military or stay married,' the soldier opts to stay married. In my travels across Georgia, around the country, and abroad, I have found that our men and women in uniform want to do what is right, for themselves and the country. However, our benefits systems have not kept pace and forcing our personnel to choose between family and service.

In talking with our military personnel, we know that money alone is not enough. Education is the number one reason service members come into the military and the number one reason its members are leaving. In recent years the Senate began to address this issue by supporting improved education benefits for military members and their families.

My amendment will improve and enhance the current educational benefits and create the GI bill for the 21st century and beyond.

One of the most important provisions of my amendment would give the Service Secretaries the authority to authorize a service member to transfer half of his or her basic MGIB benefits to family members. Many service members tell us that they really want to stay in the service, but do not feel that they can stay and provide an education for their families. This will give them, in affect, an educational savings account, so that they can stay in the service and still provide an education for their spouses and children. This will give the Secretaries a very powerful retention tool.

The measure would allow the Services to authorize transfer of unused basic GI bill benefits of a servicemember who has been in the military for 6 years. The spouse would be able to use these benefits immediately upon authorization by the services. This provision is designed to assist the spouse of a military member in pursuing their own education or assist them in gaining the necessary skills to prepare for an occupation in the new economy.

The measure also includes language that permits a servicemember with ten years of service to transfer GI bill benefits to a dependent child. This provision is designed to help a servicemember with the expected costs of a child's education. It could be used to help with secondary expenses as well as with college costs.

I believe that the Services can use this much like a reenlistment bonus to keep valuable service members in the service. It can be creatively combined with reenlistment bonuses to create a very powerful and cost effective incentive for highly skilled military personnel to stay in the Service. In talking with service members upon their departure from the military, we have found that the family plays a crucial role in the decision of a member to continue their military career. Reality dictates that we must address the needs of the family in order to retain our soldiers, sailors, airmen, and marines.

Another enhancement to the current MGIB would extend the period in which the members of Reserve components can use this benefit. Currently they lose this benefit when they leave the service or after 10 years of service. They have no benefit when they leave service. My amendment will permit them to use the benefit up to 5 years after their separation. This will encourage them to stay in the Reserves for a full career.

I believe that this is a necessary next step for improving our education benefits for our military members and their families. We must offer them credible choices. If we offer them choices, and treat the members and their families properly, we will show them our respect for their service and dedication. Maybe then we can turn around our current retention statistics. This GI bill is an important retention tool for the services. I believe that education begets education. We must continue to focus our resources in retaining our personnel based their needs.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. BROWNBACK):

S. 938. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide that the exclusion from gross income for foster care payments shall also apply to payments by qualifying placement agencies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I am introducing today a bill that will simplify and make more fair the tax treatment of foster care payments. The bill will eliminate unnecessary distinctions drawn by the Internal Revenue Code in the treatment of payments received by people who open their homes to foster children and adults. I introduced this same bill in the 106th Congress, and it was passed by both Houses as part of a larger tax bill that was subsequently vetoed by the President. I am re-introducing the bill now, as I believe that this issue should not be overlooked as we debate tax reform this year. This bill not only simplifies the tax treatment of foster care payments, it will also remove inequities and uncertainties inherent in current law.

In my home State of Vermont, we are proud that we have been able to reduce our reliance on the institutional care of children and adults. We have accomplished this by developing an array of services that can be provided in typical family homes, in a cost-effective and fiscally responsible manner. I believe that this is not only good public policy, but that whenever possible we should encourage these alternatives. Equal tax treatment for all tax families that provide foster care services should provide some encouragement.

Under current law, foster care families are required to include foster care payments in income. They can offset this income with deductions for the expenditures they incur. Families must maintain detailed records to substantiate these deductions. In lieu of detailed record keeping, Section 131 of the Internal Revenue Code allows certain foster care families to exclude from income the payments they receive for providing foster care. Eligibility for this exclusion depends upon a complicated analysis of three factors: the age of the person in foster care; the type of foster care placement agency; and the source of the foster care payments. For children under age 19 in foster care, Section 131 permits families to exclude payments when a State, or one of its political subdivisions, or a tax-exempt charitable placement agency places the individual in foster care and makes the foster care payments. For persons age 19 and older, Section 131 permits families to exclude foster care payments from income only when a State, or one of its political subdivisions, places the individual and makes the payments.

This bill is designed to provide tax fairness; it will simplify the anachronistic tax rules by amending the tax code's current exclusion to include foster care payments for all persons in foster care, regardless of age. The exclusion will also be available when the foster care placement is made by a private foster care placement agency and even when the foster care payments are received through a private foster care placement agency, rather than directly from a State. To ensure appropriate oversight, the bill requires that the placement agency be either licensed or certified by a State.

A qualified foster care payment under this bill must be made pursuant to a foster care program run by a State or county. My intention is for this bill to cover the wide variety of foster care programs developed by States. Recognizing foster care as an effective approach to provide support within the community to people with mental retardation and other disabilities, these programs place children, and in some cases adults, in homes of unrelated families who provide foster care on a full-time basis. Families providing foster care give those in their care the daily support and supervision typically given to a family member. Like traditional families, foster care families ensure that foster children and adults have a healthy physical environment, get routine and emergency medical care, are adequately clothed and fed, and have satisfying leisure activities. Foster families provide those in their care with stimulation and emotional support all too often lacking in large congregate and institutional settings.

In some State, the State itself administers both child and adult foster care programs. Many States, however, are increasingly entrusting administration of these programs to private placement agencies, approved through licensing or certification procedures, or to government-designated intermediary tax-exempt organizations. Through the approval process, private placement agencies are accountable for their use of funds and for the quality of services they provide. This bill is intended to cover governmental foster care programs funded solely by State or political subdivision monies, and, especially in the case of adult foster care, programs funded by the federal government, typical through a State's Medicaid Home and Community-Based Waiver program.

While foster care for children has been in existence for decades, foster care for adults is a more recent phenomenon. Sometimes referred to as "host homes" or "developmental homes," adult foster care facilities have proven to be an effective alternative to institutional care for adults with disabilities. In 1993, Vermont closed the State institution for people with developmental disabilities, choosing instead to rely on foster families. Under this approach, Vermonters with developmental disabilities can live in homes and participate in the routines of daily life that most of us take for granted. Vermont's approach has provided people with disabilities a cost-effective opportunity for successful lives in communities, with valued relationships with their foster families.

Vermont authorizes local developmental disability service organizations to act as placement agencies and contract with families willing to provide foster care in their homes. The current tax law's disparate tax treatment of foster care payments impedes these types of arrangements. Persons providing foster care for individuals placed in their homes by the government can exclude foster care payments from income, while foster care families receiving the same payments through private agencies under contract with State or local governments are not eligible for this exclusion, unless the individual in foster care is under age 19 and the placement agency is a nonprofit organization. Because of the complexity of current law, families often receive conflicting advice from tax professionals regarding the proper tax treatment of foster care payments. In addition, the law's complex rules discourage willing families from providing foster care in their homes to persons placed by private agencies, reducing the availability of care alternatives.

This bill will advance the development of family-based foster care services, a highly valued alternative to institutionalization. My home State of Vermont is proud of having closed its institutions and leading the nation in developing other support systems. The use of foster care services has facilitated this effort. I believe this represents good policy and is something to be encouraged. We should be removing disincentives and barriers to quality support for people with disabilities in our communities. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON:

S. 939. A bill amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to confer citizenship automatically on children residing abroad in the legal and physical custody of a citizen parent serving in a Government or military position abroad; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I am pleased to offer legislation on an issue important to many of our military and government families assigned overseas. Currently, if one of these families adopts a child who is a citizen of the United States, that child is not automatically eligible for citizenship. Current law allows U.S. citizens residing in the United States to adopt children from overseas and to automatically confer citizenship on these children who are residing in the legal and physical custody of the citizen parent. My bill would allow U.S. military and government employees who are stationed overseas and adopt a child to enjoy the same ability to have citizenship automatically conferred.

Today many of our service members and government employees are stationed overseas serving their country. Some of these families want to offer their home and their hearts to children needing a good, loving family. The opportunity is often missed by these families because of this oversight in the current law. This amendment will ensure that those who are serving our nation and our government overseas are not penalized when adopting children during their tour.

By Mr. DODD (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. WELLSTONE):
S. 940. A bill to leave no child behind; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Senator KENNEDY, and Senator WELLSTONE, I rise today to introduce the Leave No Child Behind Act, legislation that will address the needs of our nation's children to deliver them from poverty, violence, abuse, neglect, and poor education.

This measure combines the best public and private ideas, policies, and practices into a comprehensive measure to improve the lives of all children. Not just poor children. But all children.

Many Members of Congress have contributed to this legislation, adding their ideas and their thoughts, including: Senator KENNEDY, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator DEWINE, Senator HARKIN, Senator STEVENS, Senator BIDEN, Senator SNOWE, Senator BOXER, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator DASCHLE, Senator GORDON SMITH, Senator REED, Senator CHAFEE, Senator WELLSTONE, Senator KERRY, Senator DURBIN, Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator KOHL, Senator TORRICELLI, Senator SCHUMER, and Senator BAYH. A number of Members of the House have also contributed to this legislation. It is without hesitation that I say that this bill would not have been possible without the help of so many of my colleagues.

For the first time in more than a generation, our budget is in balance. Indeed, we have a surplus. At long last, we can talk about meeting the needs of the future, rather than paying off the debts of the past. For the first time in decades, we have an opportunity to put children first, to move them out of poverty, to end their hunger, to heal their wounds, to enrich and inform their minds.

We are on the verge of doing what many of us have long dreamed of doing for America's young people.

The legislation we are introducing today represents a vision for children in the 21st century.

It's more than a bill. More than pages of legislative language. It's a covenant that we are entering into today. Not only with each other, but with those who will stand in this place long after we have gone.

It's a declaration that we need to put children first, and that we intend to put children first. In doing so, we put America first.

A question that we must all ask ourselves and ask this country, is, what should our highest priority be? When I ask this question, the response I most often receive is our children.

Children are one-quarter of our population. But they are one hundred percent of our future.

Despite that fact, they are getting a fraction of our attention and a fraction of our resources.

Having languished in budget deficits for years, we now have the largest projected Federal budget surpluses in the history of this Nation. We have witnessed unprecedented prosperity. We are so lucky to live in this free and dynamic society, a Nation at peace, of such great wealth.

But some are not so lucky. Some families struggle through each day. They live paycheck to paycheck. Their children are hungry. They're cold. They might have difficulty following the teacher's instructions on the blackboard because they can't see it clearly. But their parents haven't taken them to the doctor because they don't have health insurance.

Over 12 million children live in poverty.

Nearly 11 million children have no health coverage.

About 7 million children go home alone each week after school.

This is America, too.

The legislation we are introducing today is called, "An Act to Leave No Child Behind". We are committed to one principle beyond all others. Not just as a slogan, but as a means to define an urgent national priority.

Regrettably, however, for some those words are slogans, and nothing more. There are those who utter the words "Leave No Child Behind" in front of microphones and television cameras. They have adopted the words as a political mantra, repeating it endlessly during "photo-ops" with children and in press conferences with reporters.

We need to make sure that we not only talk about leaving no child behind, but that we actually take steps to do so. Introducing this bill is the first step.

Every word on every page is focused on the same purpose—lifting our children up, giving each child an opportunity, helping each child to have a safe and rewarding life.

Under the Act to Leave No Child Behind, every child in America would have health coverage. No child in America would go to bed at night aching from hunger. We would use our tax code to lift millions of children out of poverty.

It's time to ensure that every American child has an opportunity to attend Head Start, Pre-K, or child care to begin a lifetime of learning. That every American child can read by 4th grade, and read at grade level. It's time to take dramatic new steps to address the needs of children who are abused and neglected every year.

Those who are truly committed to leaving no child behind will support this bill. It's about priorities. It's about values.

As we speak, Congress is considering how to spend our nation's surplus.

Sadly, a disproportionate share of that surplus will not go to our nation's children, but to those who least need our help and attention.

Most of the surplus will go to the tax cut. And, most of the tax cut will go to those who are doing the best in our society, those who least need a helping hand or a step up.

Are those the values that we want to instill in our children? That as a Nation we care not for those who need our help most?

It's time to take a stance for children.

It's time to invest in the needs of our children. Not in a token way, but in a real way. A meaningful way that will make a difference in a child's life.

We have the resources. The time is right.

If we join together, we can transform this Nation and give each and every child his God-given right to grow and flourish to all he can be. To grow to his or her fullest potential. We want an America where all children can realize their dreams.

I ask unanimous consent that a summary of the Act to Leave No Child Behind be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE ACT TO LEAVE NO CHILD BEHIND—
DETAILED SUMMARY, MAY 23, 2001

TITLE I. HEALTHY START—EVERY UNINSURED
CHILD SHOULD HAVE COMPREHENSIVE HEALTH COVERAGE.

Section A. Children's health insurance

Create a new federal health program with comprehensive benefits similar to Medicare for uninsured children, who are not covered by existing programs.

Section B. Children's health insurance eligibility expansion and enrollment improvements

Expand existing federal children's health programs (CHIP/Medicaid) up to 300% of poverty through age 21 and require states to allow families above 300% of poverty to buy into the program for their uninsured children on a sliding scale premium basis.

Give states the option of providing coverage under CHIP and Medicaid to legal immigrant children and legal immigrant pregnant women.

Give states the option to allow families with too much income to qualify for Medicaid to purchase coverage for their disabled children.

Simplify outreach and enrollment for CHIP and Medicaid and enroll all children at birth.

Section C. Improving access to care

Establish Children's Access To Care Commission that shall make recommendations for improving children's access to care, removing barriers to care, and improving children's health status.

Strengthen the care of children under HMO's.

Require DHHS to collect data from states participating in the Medicaid program on the delivery of services to children through the early and Periodic Screening, Diagnosis and Treatment component of the program, in order to document the delivery of services through all service delivery arrangements.

Section D. Reducing public health risks for children

Appropriate $50 million per year for grants to state to develop programs to prevent, treat and manage children asthma.

Implement an aggressive youth smoking cessation and education program and provide the FDA authority to regulate the marketing of tobacco products to children.

Increase funding for HUD's Lead-Based Paint Hazard Control grants and Healthy Homes grants.

All private insurance policies would be required to pay for immunizations as a benefit of coverage.

Section E. Reducing environmental health risks for children.

Require testing of chemicals to determine safe exposure levels for children.

Reduce the use of toxic chemicals in schools.

TITLE II. HEALTHY START—ALL PARENTS DESERVE HELP TO SUPPORT THEIR CHILDREN'S HEALTHY DEVELOPMENT

Promote State and Local Parenting Support and Education Programs. Provide grants to state parenting support and education councils to develop and expand local activities to help parents appropriately care for and respond to their children's needs, without having to wait until problems develop.

Extend Supports for Parents Caring for Children. Expand the Family and Medical Leave Act to apply to employers with 25 or more employees, rather than 50 as in current law.

Paid Family Leave. Establish demonstration projects with paid leave for new parents so that they are able to spend time with a new infant or newly adopted child.

Extend Health Care to Uninsured Parents. Expand the federal children's health programs, CHIP and Medicaid, to cover uninsured parents of children who are eligible for CHIP or Medicaid and to pregnant women.

Help Parents Reduce Environmental Health Risks for their Children. Strengthen consumer right-to-know laws to ensure that parents are fully aware of the presence of potentially harmful substances in products to which their children are exposed.

Encourage Support from Non-Custodial Parents. Provide grants to localities or non-profit providers for services to low-income non-custodial parents so that they can contribute financially, emotionally and in other positive ways to their children's development.

TITLE III. HEAD START—ALL CHILDREN SHOULD ENTER SCHOOL READY TO LEARN AND REACH THEIR HIGHEST POTENTIAL WHILE IN SCHOOL

Section A. Infants and toddlers

Increase the Early Head Start set-aside for infants and toddlers from 10 percent to 40 percent.

Allocate 5% of total CCDBG funds in FY 2003 to improve and expand infant child care, rising to 10% in FY 2007.

Section B. Child care access

Increase funding proportionately each year to ensure that every child eligible for assistance under the Child Care and Development Block Grant (CCDBG) receives assistance by 2011.

Require that states make children in foster care an eligible category for CCDBG.

Require states to pay not less than the 100th percentile of the market rate for child care, with higher rates for higher quality care, hard-to-find care, care for children with special needs, and care in low-income and rural communities. States would also be required to adjust rates by inflation between market surveys.

Require that the CCDBG agency coordinate with the TANF agency to ensure that child care assistance staff are located on-site at TANF offices. Require that state CCDBG plans describe how they will ensure that TANF and other low-income working families are aware of their eligibility for child care assistance as part of their consumer education strategy.

Require no more than annual eligibility determination.

Section C. Child care quality improvements

Create a program to improve wages and skills of child care staff.

Improve child care quality by increasing the CCDBG quality set aside from 4 to 12 percent.

Require every state to have a state-based office that is charged with developing a system of local resource and referral agencies to provide parents with information and support, collect data on the supply and demand of child care in the community, develop linkages to businesses, and help to build the supply of quality child care.

Require child care centers operated on federal or legislative property to comply with either state and local child care operation and safety laws or similar safety rules established by the General Services Administration.

Provide $500 million per year to support the construction of new child care facilities.

Expand the existing national 1% CCDBG set-aside to 2%. This set-aside will be used for training and technical assistance to states, communities, and CCDBG grantees.

Require all providers receiving CCDBG, or who work in programs receiving CCDBG, to have training in early childhood development.

Require at a minimum two annual unannounced visits for each facility accepting CCDBG funding.

Section D. Head Start and Early Head Start access

Increase funds proportionately each year to ensure that every three and four-year-old eligible for Head Start may participate by 2006 and 25% of eligible infants and toddlers may participate in Early Head Start by 2011.

Expand investments in the Early Learning Opportunities Act to provide increased resources to communities for early learning initiatives.

Section E. Education improvements Early learning

Provide grants to states to ensure access to pre-kindergarten for families who choose to participate.

Amend the Reading Excellence Act to require that states support early literacy efforts in child care, pre-kindergarten, and Head Start programs.

Create a book stamp program that would enable proceeds from a children's literacy postage stamp to support a system to expand books in the homes of low income children that are enrolled in child care programs.

Authorize $30 million in ESEA for the Education Excellence Act, which would provide professional development for early childhood educators in high poverty communities.

Increased accountability

Amend Title I of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA) to require states and local school districts to establish specific goals and performance benchmarks aimed at improving the performance of all students, to strengthen requirements mandating corrective actions for failing schools such as school reconstitution and transfers to other public schools, and to require states to issue report cards detailing the performance of individual schools.

Reduce class size

Provide funding to help local school districts recruit, train, and hire additional teachers to reduce class size in grades K through 3.

Quality teaching and leadership

Provide incentives to teachers to obtain certification from the National Board for Professional Teaching Standards.

Improve student loan forgiveness program for aspiring teachers.

Provide support to recruit, prepare and place career-changing professionals as teachers.

Award competitive grants to establish programs for teacher quality improvement.

Provide for professional development services to increase leadership skills of school principals.

School construction

Provide new tax incentives for school construction/modernization bonds.

Establish a grant program to assist LEA's to increase the involvement of parents, teachers, students, and others in the planning and design of new and renovated elementary and secondary schools.

Community schools

Encourage communities to foster school-based or school-linked family centers.

TITLE IV. FAIR START—LIFTING ALL CHILDREN OUT OF POVERTY—TAX RELIEF TO ASSIST LOW-INCOME WORKING FAMILIES

Increase the child tax credit from $500 to $1000 and make it fully refundable.

Expand the EITC for families with three or more children and reduce the marriage penalty for families eligible for the EITC.

Expand the Dependent Care Tax Credit to increase the slide to 50%, make it refundable, and annually index income phase-outs and cost of care for inflation.

TITLE V. FAIR START—ENSURE THAT CHILDREN AND FAMILIES RECEIVE SUPPORTS TO PROMOTE WORK AND REDUCE POVERTY

Section A. Ensure children and families receive all supports for which they are eligible

Initiate a Gateways Program that provides grants to states, localities, and/or community based organizations to (a) train caseworkers about available support programs and their eligibility requirements; (b) expand outreach about available support assistance; (c) improve automation and application procedures; and (d) track the extent to which low-income families receive the benefits and services for which they are eligible.

Section B. Support from both parents

Improve child support collections and let families keep the money collected for their children; provide federal incentives for states to pass through payments collected for families receiving Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF); and require families who have left TANF to receive any support collected through IRS intercepts.

Provide funding for child support assurance demonstration projects.

Section C. Fair wages and unemployment insurance

Increase the federal minimum wage to $6.65 over three installments and index it for inflation.

Implement "living wage" policy for employees of federal contractors or subcontractors.

Make Unemployment Insurance more accessible to low income families with children, including more favorable counting of wages for the purpose of determining eligibility, expanding benefits to part-time workers, and making domestic violence and lack of child care causes for separation from employment.

Section D. Helping low income parents get and keep jobs with above poverty income Add poverty reduction as a goal of the TANF program.

For those families who are working and playing by the rules, the TANF time limit is interrupted.

Allow a broader range of education and training to count as work activities under TANF.

Initiate a TANF poverty reduction bonus for states.

Require state and local TANF officials to participate in the Workforce Investment Boards.

Section E. Create incentives to serve families effectively

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall develop model training materials for caseworkers.

TANF funds used by states to provide caseworker bonuses and new state initiatives to break down barriers to work shall not count towards the 15 percent administrative cap.

Strengthen Individual Responsibility Plans.

Section F. Addressing work barriers

Expand funding for the Department of Transportation's Access to Jobs program to allow parents better access to jobs and child care.

Require caseworkers with adequate training to identify work barriers of TANF recipients, including domestic violence, mental health, drug or alcohol problems, homelessness, or disability and to provide appropriate services to address these barriers.

Allow states to exempt families with severe barriers to employment from TANF time limits, even if the total exempted exceeds 20 percent of the current caseload.

Section G. Protections for families in need

Earn back months of TANF assistance for months worked.

Hold agencies accountable for ensuring that families who are unable to comply with complex TANF rules are afforded a real conciliation process.

Section H. TANF reauthorization

Reauthorize TANF.

Prohibit supplantation of state funding for programs serving needy families with children with federal TANF funds.

TITLE VI. FAIR START—ALL FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN SHOULD RECEIVE THE SUPPORT THEY NEED TO LIVE ABOVE POVERTY—NUTRITION

Section A. Child care nutrition

Allow for-profit child care centers to participate in the Child and Adult Care Food Program (CACFP) if 25 percent of their enrolled children are eligible for free and reduced-priced lunch.

Allow youth in after-school programs up to age 19 to participate in CACFP if they are enrolled in community-based programs including those outside of low-income areas.

Provide a dinner for after-school programs. Standardize the categorical eligibility requirements for income determination in the family child care portion of CACFP.

Increase the CACFP sponsors' administrative reimbursement rate to reflect the increased administrative burden of the means test system.

Section B. Food stamp program

Restore Food Stamp eligibility to legal immigrants.

Provide six months of transitional food stamp benefits to those who leave TANF.

Index the standard deduction for family size and inflation.

Eliminate the cap on excess shelter costs for families with children.

Include child support in earnings disregard.

Increase funding for The Emergency Food Assistance Program (TEFAP).

Reduce burden on eligible families in renewing benefits.

Improve incentives for states to serve low-income working families better.

TITLE VII. FAIR START—ALL FAMILIES SHOULD RECEIVE THE SUPPORTS THEY NEED TO LIVE ABOVE POVERTY—HOUSING

Provide 1 million new Section 8 vouchers over 10 years.

Establish a Voucher Success program for communities experiencing problems utilizing Section 8 vouchers.

Redirect surplus generated by federal housing programs into National Affordable Housing Trust to help alleviate the housing crisis by funding new construction of affordable rental housing.

Promote preservation of affordable housing units by providing matching grants to states that have developed and funded programs for preservation of privately owned housing that is affordable to low-income families.

TITLE VIII. SAFE START—ENSURING EVERY CHILD A SAFE, NURTURING, AND PERMANENT FAMILY

Section A. Promoting permanency for children

Enhance the likelihood that the goals for children in the Adoption and Safe Families Act will be met by offering states funding for preventive, protective, and crisis services for children and parents who come to the attention of the child welfare system, permanency services for families whose children end up in foster care, independent living services for young people transitioning from foster care, and post-permanency services for children who are reunited with their families, adopted, or placed permanently with relatives or other legal guardians.

Improve the quality of services for children by extending funding for training of staff of private child welfare agencies, judges and other court staff, and other children's service providers that serve abused and neglected children.

Offer kinship guardianship assistance payments to grandparents and other relatives who commit to care permanently for children for whom they have legal guardianship and that they have cared for in foster care.

Eliminate current federal disincentives to ensure that children who have been abused or neglected or are at risk of maltreatment receive the services and supports they need.

Eliminate current federal disincentives to promote adoption for children with special needs.

Support young people aging out of foster care by offering them increased opportunities for supervised living arrangements and tuition assistance to help them pursue a range of educational opportunities.

Increase accountability within the child welfare system to improve outcomes for children and services available to children and families.

Expand opportunities for Indian tribes to offer foster care and adoption assistance to Indian children.

Section B. Promoting safe and stable families

Reauthorize and increase funding for the Promoting Safe and Stable Families Program.

Section C. Social services block grant

Restore funding for the Social Services Block Grant, which supports a range of services for abused, neglected and other children, and also provides help for persons with disabilities, senior citizens, and other special populations.

Section D. Child protection and alcohol and drug partnerships

Address the treatment needs of families with alcohol and drug problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system by giving state child protection and alcohol and drug agencies incentives to offer joint screening, assessment, comprehensive treatment and after care services, and training.

Section E. One-time permanency grants

Offer one-time assistance to state child welfare agencies to help move children who were in foster care when the Adoption and Safe Families Act was passed, and will not be returning home, into adoptive families or other permanent placements with kin.

Section F. Helping children exposed to domestic violence

Promote multi-system partnerships to respond to the needs of children who have been exposed to domestic violence.

Promote cross-training for staff of child welfare agencies and domestic violence service providers about domestic violence and its impact on children and relevant child welfare policies.

Enhance research and data collection on the impact of domestic violence on children.

Offer grants to elementary and secondary schools and early care and education programs to help prevent domestic violence and its impact on its adult and child victims.

Support training for law enforcement and court personnel about domestic violence and its impact on children.

Section G. Enhancing healthy emotional development in young children

Assist networks of early childhood, child welfare, substance abuse, and/or domestic violence programs to promote the mental health and healthy emotional development of the young children they serve.

TITLE IX. SUCCESSFUL TRANSITIONS TO ADULTHOOD—YOUTH DEVELOPMENT

Section A. Youth development: Strengthening 21st Century Community Learning Centers

Increase funding for the 21st Century Community Learning Centers Program.

Allow community-based organizations to apply for 21st Century funds.

Create a 3 percent set-aside for training and technical assistance.

Section B. Youth development: Promoting positive activities for America's youth

Creation of a comprehensive program (the proposed Younger Americans Act) to mobilize and support communities in carrying out youth development activities.

Increase funding for AmeriCorps, Youthbuild, Job Corps, and the Workforce Investment Act youth employment programs to open up more employment opportunities for teens.

TITLE X. SAFE START—EVERY CHILD SHOULD HAVE A SAFE ENVIRONMENT IN WHICH TO LEARN AND TO LIVE—JUVENILE JUSTICE

Amend the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA) by adding the definition of a "juvenile" as an individual less than 18 years of age.

Amend the JJDPA to mandate that not less than 75 percent of title V funds be used solely for the purposes of carrying out section 505. Increase funding for Title V to $250 million for fiscal year 2002.

Disproportionate Minority Confinement (DMC)—Strengthen accountability standards for states to take action to address the disparate treatment of minorities at all stages of the juvenile justice system, including intake, arrest, detention, adjudication, disposition and transfer.

Create a fifth core protection for juveniles by requiring that states provide every adjudicated juvenile with reasonable safety and security, with adequate food, heat, light, sanitary facilities, bedding, clothing, recreation, counseling, education, training, and medical care, including necessary mental health services.

Increase funding for the JJDPA Title II, Part B formula grants, to raise the small state minimum to $750,000, create a 3% set-aside for the establishment of state juvenile justice coalitions and (include language that coalitions include participation of youth), and a 3% set aside for states to carry out state plans with respect to the DMC core requirement.

Repeal Part H of JJDPA (juvenile boot camps).

Amend title II of the JJDPA by adding Access to Mental Health and Substance Abuse Treatment, a grant program encouraging states to invest in and coordinate with other systems to provide appropriate treatment and other services for incarcerated juvenile offenders.

Fund Services for Youth Offenders at $40 million for fiscal year 2002, providing funding for after care or wrap-around services for youth discharged from the adult criminal or juvenile justice system.

Authorize the Juvenile Accountability Block Grant, which would authorize and significantly modify the Juvenile Accountability Incentive Block Grant (JAIBG) to provide incentives to: build and maintain smaller juvenile facilities, including separate units within juvenile facilities for juveniles tried as adults; require all staff, whether supervising juveniles adjudicated in the adult or juvenile system, are trained appropriately; develop and utilize accountable community-based alternatives to incarceration; risk assessment; and enact Child Access Prevention (CAP) laws.

In order to receive funds under the new block grant, states are prohibited from applying the death penalty to juvenile offenders.

Increase funding for the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act to $120 million for fiscal year 2002.

TITLE XI. SAFE START—EVERY CHILD SHOULD HAVE A SAFE ENVIRONMENT IN WHICH TO LEARN AND TO LIVE—GUN SAFETY

Close the gun show loophole by applying the Brady background check to gun sales conducted through private dealers at events where 50 or more firearms are offered for sale.

Require mandatory safety locks with the sale of all handguns and establish consumer safety standards for such safety locks.

Ban the importation of large capacity ammunition clips capable of holding more than 10 rounds.

Ban the possession of assault weapons by juveniles.

Require FTC study on marketing practices of gun industry.

Ban the possession of handguns by individuals under 21 years of age.

One-gun-a-month purchase limitation.

Regulation of internet sales of firearms.

ENFORCE—enhancements (both authorizing and appropriation) to strengthen enforcement of gun laws.

TITLE XII. MISCELLANEOUS

Direct the Secretary of HHS to establish a blue-ribbon commission to identify and highlight family-friendly practices that the private sector and other employers can promote.

Provide for collection and dissemination of data on the status of children and families who are or have been recipients of government assistance.

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself and Mrs. BOXER):

S. 941. A bill to revise the boundaries of the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in the State of California, to extend the term of the advisory commission for the recreation area, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, today I am pleased to introduce legislation to add approximately 5,000 acres of pristine natural land to the Golden Gate National Recreation Area in San Mateo County. This addition will protect the sweeping views of the San Mateo Coast and ensure the protection of rich farmland, several miles of public trails, and incredible array of wildlife and vegetation. I am happy to be joined by Senator BOXER in sponsoring this legislation.

The property to be added is one of the most visible and important pieces of land on the San Mateo coast north of Half Moon Bay. The largest parcel to be added is a 4,262 acre stretch of land known as the Rancho Corral de Tierra. The Rancho Corral de Tierra is one of the largest undeveloped tracts remaining on the San Mateo Coast and is constantly under threat of development.

The mountainous property, which surrounds the coastal towns of Moss Beach and Montara, was previously purchased by the Peninsula Open Space Trust. The Trust has agreed to transfer the land to the Federal Government for about half of the purchase cost. It is this type of public-private partnership that Congress needs to support in our efforts to preserve open space.

The Rancho Corral de Tierra Golden Gate National Recreation Area Boundary Act of 2001 has the support of the entire Bay Area Congressional Delegation.

Similar legislation is being introduced today in the House of Representatives by TOM LANTOS with co-sponsors ANNA ESHOO, NANCY PELOSI, GEORGE MILLER, LYNN WOOLSEY, ELLEN TAUSCHER, PETER STARK, MIKE THOMPSON, BARBARA LEE, MIKE HONDA, and ZOE LOFGREN.

The addition of the Rancho Corral de Tierra property will result in the protection of all or part of four watersheds, and several endangered species such as the peregrine falcon, San Bruno elfin butterfly, San Francisco garter snake, and the red-legged frog. Moreover, due to the coastal marine influence and dramatic altitude changes, plants grow on the property that are found nowhere else in the world.

This legislation will also reauthorize the Golden Gate National Recreation Area and Point Reyes National Seashore Advisory Commission for another 20 years. The Advisory Commission was established by Congress in 1972 to provide for the free exchange of ideas between the National Park Service and the public. The Commission holds open and accessible public meetings monthly at which the public has an opportunity to comment on park-related issues.

I have always felt that protecting our nation's unique natural areas should be one of our highest priorities. The Golden Gate National Recreation Area is one of our Nation's most heavily visited urban national parks as it is in close proximity to millions of people. I invite my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. ENSIGN, Mrs. LINCOLN, and Mr. THOMPSON):

S. 942. A bill to authorize the supplemental grant for population increases in certain states under the temporary assistance to needy families program for fiscal year 2002; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of Senators HUTCHISON, BINGAMAN, HUTCHINSON, BREAUX, ENSIGN, BAUCUS, LINCOLN, THOMPSON, and myself to introduce a piece of legislation which will extend the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families supplemental grants for one year. This grant program has been critical to the success of welfare reform in our States.

The TANF block grant, as it is commonly known, was established in the 1996 welfare law. These were modest supplemental grants for 17 relatively poor or rapidly growing States. The grants were intended to reduce the very large disparity in welfare funding between poorer and wealthier States that resulted from the basic TANF funding formula. The TANF supplemental grants have afforded States, like ours a more adequate opportunity to achieve TANF goals. While TANF is scheduled to be reauthorized in 2002, the supplemental grants included in the 1996 law were authorized only through October 2001.

If the grants expire, 17 States will lose as much as 10 percent of their TANF funding beginning in October 1 of this year. Wealthy, low-growth States will experience no reduction.

These grants are not supplemental in the sense of being add-ons. They were designed as an integral part of the TANF allocation formula and are critical to the success of the TANF programs in the States that receive them. The decision to end the grants a year before reauthorizing the entire program was not a policy consideration, only a financial one. It was done in order to ensure a balanced budget by 2002.

The 2001 budget resolution, passed by both the House and the Senate, provides $319 million for a one-year extension of these important grants. This provision acknowledges the Senate's commitment to maintaining the tools that many of our States require to continue efforts to help people move from welfare to work, from jobs to careers.

Since the passage of the welfare reform law in 1996, more is expected of state welfare systems than ever before. TANF agencies provide a broad range of social services that include job training and employment counseling, reducing out-of-wedlock births and promoting family formation, and addressing individual challenges such as domestic violence—just to name a few. Without the TANF supplemental grants, impacted states will find themselves unable to provide many of the programs that have enabled their citizens to successfully move from public assistance to independence.

Given the significant costs of work supports, many of the 17 States that receive supplemental TANF grants are now spending more TANF funds each year than they receive from their basic TANF grant. In fiscal year 2000, for example, TANF expenditures in nine of the 17 States that receive TANF supplemental grants exceeded 100 percent of their basic TANF allocation. These States are my own home State of Florida, Alaska, Arizona, Arkansas, Idaho, New Mexico, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas.

For these reasons, we are requesting that a one year extension of the TANF supplemental grants. This step will help to ensure that high-growth States can continue their welfare reform efforts and will enable the supplemental grants to be considered as part of the overall TANF reauthorization next year.

Support for the extension of this program should come from all Senators who want to see the goals of welfare reform fulfilled. Whether or not one comes from a State that receives

TANF supplemental grant dollars, support for this bill will send a loud and clear message that the United States Senate adheres to the goal of ensuring that all States have the means to provide the services necessary to help all Americans, regardless of where they live, to move from dependence to independence.

That is a goal worth fighting for and I encourage all of my Senate colleagues to cosponsor this important piece of legislation.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am glad to cosponsor this bill from my colleagues Senators GRAHAM and HUTCHISON. It's an important matter for those of us who represent less prosperous States. I have worked hard to promote economic development in Montana. It is crucial to providing a better future for the children of my great State. Until the economy improves in Montana, I will advocate for measures such as this one, which help alleviate the difficulties that stem from our circumstances.

When we enacted welfare reform in 1996, a law I am glad to have supported, there was much discussion here about the appropriate way to allocate welfare funds among States. The old funding formula had produced wide disparities, especially between high per capita income States and low per capita income States. In the end it was resolved to provide additional funding in the form of "TANF supplemental grants" to certain states which were poorer or had high growth rates or both. However, the funding was only provided through fiscal year 2001, while the rest of the welfare funds were provided through fiscal year 2002, as part of an effort to balance the budget.

Well, the budget is in surplus now. And we need to continue the TANF supplemental grants for one more year, as this legislation would do, so that we can assess it as a part of the policy on overall welfare funding during next year's reauthorization of the 1996 welfare reform law. The TANF supplemental grants represent a substantial source of welfare funds in several states. Failing to continue this funding would mean, in effect, a 10 percent reduction in the allocations for states such as Georgia, North Carolina, Florida, and Louisiana. My own state of Montana received $1 million last year. I assure you we can use those funds to help poor children in Montana, especially the many who have low-income working parents, the kind who hold down two or three part-time minimum wage jobs, which is all too common in my State.

I thank my colleagues for their leadership and look forward to working with them on this bill.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 42—A BILL CONDEMNING THE TALEBAN FOR THEIR DISCRIMINATORY POLICIES AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. BROWNBACK (for himself and Mrs. BOXER) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 42

Whereas the Taliban militia took power in Afghanistan in 1996, and now rules over 90 percent of the country;

Whereas, under Taliban rule, most political, civil, and human rights are denied to the Afghan people;

Whereas women, minorities, and children suffer disproportionately under Taliban rule;

Whereas, according to the United States Department of State Country Report on Human Rights Practices, violence against women and girls in Afghanistan occurs frequently, including beatings, rapes, forced marriages, disappearances, kidnappings, and killings;

Whereas Taliban edicts isolate Muslim and non-Muslim minorities, and will require the thousands of Hindus living in Taliban-ruled Afghanistan to wear identity labels on their clothing, singling out these minorities for discrimination and harsh treatment;

Whereas Taliban forces have targeted ethnic Shiite Hazaras, many of whom have been massacred, while those who have survived, are denied relief and discriminated against for their religious beliefs;

Whereas non-Muslim religious symbols are banned, and earlier this year Taliban forces obliterated 2 ancient statues of Buddha, claiming they were idolatrous symbols;

Whereas Afghanistan is currently suffering from its worst drought in 3 decades, affecting almost one-half of Afghanistan's 21,000,000 population, with the impact severely exacerbated by the ongoing civil war and Taliban policies denying relief to needy areas;

Whereas the Taliban has systematically interfered with United Nations relief programs and workers, recently closing a new hospital and arresting local workers, closing United Nations World Food Program bakeries providing much needed food, and closing offices of the United Nations Special Mission to Afghanistan in 4 Afghan cities;

Whereas, as a result of those policies, there are more than 25,000,000 persons who are internally displaced within Afghanistan, and this year, contrary to past practice, the Taliban rejected a United Nations call for a cease-fire in order to bring assistance to the internally displaced;

Whereas, as a result of Taliban policies, there are now more than 2,200,000 Afghan refugees in Pakistan, and 500,000 more refugees are expected to flee in the coming months unless some form of relief is forthcoming;

Whereas Pakistan has closed its borders to Afghanistan, and has announced that Pakistani and United Nations officials will begin screening refugees in June with a view toward forcibly repatriating all those who are found to be staying illegally in Pakistan;

Whereas the Taliban leadership continues to give safe haven to terrorists, including Osama bin Laden, and is known to host and provide training ground to other terrorist organizations; and

Whereas the people of Afghanistan are the greatest victims of the Taliban, and in recognition of that fact, the United States has provided $124,000,000 in relief to the people of Afghanistan this year: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) condemns the harsh and discriminatory policies of the Taliban toward Muslims, Hindus, women, and all other minorities, and the attendant destruction of religious icons;

(2) urges the Taliban to immediately reopen United Nations offices and hospitals and allow the provision of relief to all the people of Afghanistan;

(3) commends President George W. Bush and his administration for their recognition of these urgent issues and encourages President Bush to continue to respond to those issues;

(4) recognizes the burdens placed on the Government of Pakistan by Afghan refugees, and calls on that Government to facilitate the provision of relief to these refugees and to abandon any plans for forced repatriation; and

(5) calls on the international community to increase assistance to the Afghan people and consider granting asylum to at-risk Afghan refugees.

SEC. ____ DISCLOSURE OF TAX INFORMATION TO FACILITATE COMBINED EMPLOYMENT TAX REPORTING.

Section 6103(d)(5) is amended to read as follows:

“(5) DISCLOSURE FOR COMBINED EMPLOYMENT TAX REPORTING.—The Secretary may disclose taxpayer identity information and signatures to any agency, body, or commission of any State for the purpose of carrying out with such agency, body, or commission a combined Federal and State employment tax reporting program approved by the Secretary. Subsections (a)(2) and (p)(4) and sections 7213 and 7213A shall not apply with respect to disclosures or inspections made pursuant to this paragraph.”

SA 788. Mr. CORZINE (for himself and Mr. KERRY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

On page 47, between lines 3 and 4, insert the following:

SEC. . EXCLUSION FROM INCOME OF CERTAIN AMOUNTS RECEIVED BY AMERICORPS PARTICIPANTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 117 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to qualified scholarships) is amended by adding at the end the following:

“(e) QUALIFIED NATIONAL SERVICE EDUCATIONAL AWARDS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Gross income for any taxable year shall not include any qualified national service educational award.

“(2) QUALIFIED NATIONAL SERVICE EDUCATIONAL AWARD.—For purposes of this subsection—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified national service educational award’ means any amount received by an individual in a taxable year as a national service educational award under section 148 of the National and Community Service Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12604) to the extent (except as provided in subparagraph (C)) such amount does not exceed the qualified tuition and related expenses (as defined in subsection (b)(2)) of the individual for such taxable year.

“(B) DETERMINATION OF EXPENSES.—The total amount of the qualified tuition and related expenses (as so defined) which may be taken into account under subparagraph (A) with respect to an individual for the taxable year shall be reduced (after the application of the reduction provided in section 25A(g)(2)) by the amount of such expenses which were taken into account in determining the credit allowed to the taxpayer or any other person under section 25A with respect to such expenses.

“(C) EXCEPTION TO LIMITATION.—The limitation under subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any portion of a national service educational award used by such individual to repay any student loan described in section 148(a)(1) of such Act or to pay any interest expense described in section 148(a)(4) of such Act.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to amounts received in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SA 789. Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 1836, to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002, as follows:

On page 18, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

SEC. 202. EXPANSION OF ADOPTION CREDIT AND ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) ADOPTION CREDIT.—Section 23(a)(1) (relating to allowance of credit) is amended to read as follows:

“(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter—

“(A) in the case of an adoption of a child other than a child with special needs, the amount of the qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer, and

“(B) in the case of an adoption of a child with special needs, $10,000.”

(2) ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 137(a) (relating to adoption assistance programs) is amended to read as follows:

“(a) IN GENERAL.—Gross income of an employee does not include amounts paid or expenses incurred by the employer for adoption expenses in connection with the adoption of a child by an employee if such amounts are furnished pursuant to an adoption assistance program. The amount of the exclusion shall be—

“(1) in the case of an adoption of a child other than a child with special needs, the amount of the qualified adoption expenses paid or incurred by the taxpayer, and

“(2) in the case of an adoption of a child with special needs, $10,000.”

(b) DOLLAR LIMITATIONS.—

(1) DOLLAR AMOUNT OF ALLOWED EXPENSES.—

(A) ADOPTION EXPENSES.—Section 23(b)(1) (relating to allowance of credit) is amended—

(i) by striking “$5,000” and inserting “$10,000”,

(ii) by striking “($6,000, in the case of a child with special needs)”, and

(iii) by striking “subsection (a)” and inserting “subsection (a)(1)(A)”.

(B) ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 137(b)(1) (relating to dollar limitations for adoption assistance programs) is amended—

(i) by striking “$5,000” and inserting “$10,000”, and

(ii) by striking “($6,000, in the case of a child with special needs)”, and

(A) ADOPTION EXPENSES.—Clause (i) of section 23(b)(2)(A) (relating to income limitation) is amended by striking “$75,000” and inserting “$150,000”.

(B) ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 137(b)(2)(A) (relating to income limitation) is amended by striking “$75,000” and inserting “$150,000”.

(c) YEAR CREDIT ALLOWED.—Section 23(a)(2) (relating to year credit allowed) is amended by adding at the end the following new flush sentence:

“In the case of the adoption of a child with special needs, the credit allowed under paragraph (1) shall be allowed for the taxable year in which the adoption becomes final.”

(d) REPEAL OF SUNSET PROVISIONS.—

(1) CHILDREN WITHOUT SPECIAL NEEDS.—Paragraph (2) of section 23(d) (relating to definition of eligible child) is amended to read as follows:

“(2) ELIGIBLE CHILD.—The term ‘eligible child’ means any individual who—

“(A) has not attained age 18, or

“(B) is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself.”

(2) ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 137 (relating to adoption assistance programs) is amended by striking subsection (f).

(e) ADJUSTMENT OF DOLLAR AND INCOME LIMITATIONS FOR INFLATION.—

(1) ADOPTION CREDIT.—Section 23 (relating to adoption expenses) is amended by redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (i) and by inserting after subsection (g) the following new subsection:

“(h) ADJUSTMENTS FOR INFLATION.—In the case of a taxable year beginning after December 31, 2002, each of the dollar amounts in subsection (a)(1)(B) and paragraphs (1) and (2)(A)(i) of subsection (b) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

“(1) such dollar amount, multiplied by

“(2) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined by substituting 'calendar year 2001' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof."

(2) ADOPTION ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS.—Section 137 (relating to adoption assistance programs), as amended by subsection (d), is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) ADJUSTMENTS FOR INFLATION.—In the case of a taxable year beginning after December 31, 2002, each of the dollar amounts in subsection (a)(2) and paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of subsection (b) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(1) such dollar amount, multiplied by

"(2) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined by substituting 'calendar year 2001' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof."

(f) LIMITATION BASED ON AMOUNT OF TAX.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 23(c) (relating to carryforwards of unused credit) is amended by striking "the limitation imposed" and all that follows through "1400C)" and inserting "the applicable tax limitation".

(2) APPLICABLE TAX LIMITATION.—Section 23(d) (relating to definitions) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) APPLICABLE TAX LIMITATION.—The term 'applicable tax limitation' means the sum of—

"(A) the taxpayer's regular tax liability for the taxable year, reduced (but not below zero) by the sum of the credits allowed by sections 21, 22, 24 (other than the amount of the increase under subsection (d) thereof), 25, and 25A, and

"(B) the tax imposed by section 55 for such taxable year."

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 26(a) (relating to limitation based on amount of tax) is amended by inserting "(other than section 23)" after "allowed by this subpart".

(B) Section 53(b)(1) (relating to minimum tax credit) is amended by inserting "reduced by the aggregate amount taken into account under section 23(d)(3)(B) for all such prior taxable years," after "1986."

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

At the end of subtitle A of title VIII add the following:

SEC. ____ DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS INCREASED.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 162(l)(1) (relating to special rules for health insurance costs of self-employed individuals) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION.—In the case of an individual who is an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), there shall be allowed as a deduction under this section an amount equal to the amount paid during the taxable year for insurance which constitutes medical care for the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, and dependents."

(b) CLARIFICATION OF LIMITATIONS ON OTHER COVERAGE.—The first sentence of section 162(l)(2)(B) (relating to other coverage) is amended to read as follows: "Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any taxpayer for any calendar month for which the taxpayer participates in any subsidized health plan maintained by any employer (other than an employer described in section 401(c)(4)) of the taxpayer or the spouse of the taxpayer."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SEC. 202. ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT FOR EMPLOYER EXPENSES FOR CHILD CARE ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to business related credits), as amended by sections 619 and 620, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

“SEC. 45G. EMPLOYER-PROVIDED CHILD CARE CREDIT.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of section 38, the employer-provided child care credit determined under this section for the taxable year is an amount equal to the sum of—

“(1) 25 percent of the qualified child care expenditures, and

“(2) 10 percent of the qualified child care resource and referral expenditures, of the taxpayer for such taxable year.

“(b) DOLLAR LIMITATION.—The credit allowable under subsection (a) for any taxable year shall not exceed $150,000.

“(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) QUALIFIED CHILD CARE EXPENDITURE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care expenditure’ means any amount paid or incurred—

“(i) to acquire, construct, rehabilitate, or expand property—

“(I) which is to be used as part of a qualified child care facility of the taxpayer,

“(II) with respect to which a deduction for depreciation (or amortization in lieu of depreciation) is allowable, and

“(III) which does not constitute part of the principal residence (within the meaning of section 121) of the taxpayer or any employee of the taxpayer,

“(ii) for the operating costs of a qualified child care facility of the taxpayer, including costs related to the training of employees, to scholarship programs, and to the providing of increased compensation to employees with higher levels of child care training, or

“(iii) under a contract with a qualified child care facility to provide child care services to employees of the taxpayer.

“(B) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—The term ‘qualified child care expenditures’ shall not include expenses in excess of the fair market value of such care.

“(2) QUALIFIED CHILD CARE FACILITY.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care facility’ means a facility—

“(i) the principal use of which is to provide child care assistance, and

“(ii) which meets the requirements of all applicable laws and regulations of the State or local government in which it is located, including the licensing of the facility as a child care facility.

Clause (i) shall not apply to a facility which is the principal residence (within the meaning of section 121) of the operator of the facility.

“(B) SPECIAL RULES WITH RESPECT TO A TAXPAYER.—A facility shall not be treated as a qualified child care facility with respect to a taxpayer unless—

“(i) enrollment in the facility is open to employees of the taxpayer during the taxable year,

“(ii) if the facility is the principal trade or business of the taxpayer, at least 30 percent of the enrollees of such facility are dependents of employees of the taxpayer, and

“(iii) the use of such facility (or the eligibility to use such facility) does not discriminate in favor of employees of the taxpayer who are highly compensated employees (within the meaning of section 414(q)).

“(3) QUALIFIED CHILD CARE RESOURCE AND REFERRAL EXPENDITURE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care resource and referral expenditure’ means any amount paid or incurred under a contract to provide child care resource and referral services to an employee of the taxpayer.

“(B) NONDISCRIMINATION.—The services shall not be treated as qualified unless the provision of such services (or the eligibility to use such services) does not discriminate in favor of employees of the taxpayer who are highly compensated employees (within the meaning of section 414(q)).

“(d) RECAPTURE OF ACQUISITION AND CONSTRUCTION CREDIT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If, as of the close of any taxable year, there is a recapture event with respect to any qualified child care facility of the taxpayer, then the tax of the taxpayer under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to the product of—

“(A) the applicable recapture percentage, and

“(B) the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed under section 38 for all prior taxable years which would have resulted if the qualified child care expenditures of the taxpayer described in subsection (c)(1)(A) with respect to such facility had been zero.

“(2) APPLICABLE RECAPTURE PERCENTAGE.—“(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, the applicable recapture percentage shall be determined from the following table:

If the recapture event occurs in:	The applicable recapture percentage is:
Years 1-3	100
Year 4	85
Year 5	70
Year 6	55
Year 7	40
Year 8	25
Years 9 and 10	10
Years 11 and thereafter	0.

“(B) YEARS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), year 1 shall begin on the first day of the taxable year in which the qualified child care facility is placed in service by the taxpayer.

“(3) RECAPTURE EVENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘recapture event’ means—

“(A) CESSATION OF OPERATION.—The cessation of the operation of the facility as a qualified child care facility.

“(B) CHANGE IN OWNERSHIP.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the disposition of a taxpayer's interest in a qualified child care facility with respect to which the credit described in subsection (a) was allowable.

“(ii) AGREEMENT TO ASSUME RECAPTURE LIABILITY.—Clause (i) shall not apply if the person acquiring such interest in the facility agrees in writing to assume the recapture liability of the person disposing of such interest in effect immediately before such disposition. In the event of such an assumption, the person acquiring the interest in the facility shall be treated as the taxpayer for purposes of assessing any recapture liability (computed as if there had been no change in ownership).

“(4) SPECIAL RULES.—

“(A) TAX BENEFIT RULE.—The tax for the taxable year shall be increased under paragraph (1) only with respect to credits allowed by reason of this section which were used to reduce tax liability. In the case of credits not so used to reduce tax liability, the carryforwards and carrybacks under section 39 shall be appropriately adjusted.

“(B) NO CREDITS AGAINST TAX.—Any increase in tax under this subsection shall not be treated as a tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit under subpart A, B, or D of this part.

“(C) NO RECAPTURE BY REASON OF CASUALTY LOSS.—The increase in tax under this subsection shall not apply to a cessation of operation of the facility as a qualified child care facility by reason of a casualty loss to the extent such loss is restored by reconstruction or replacement within a reasonable period established by the Secretary.

“(e) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) AGGREGATION RULES.—All persons which are treated as a single employer under subsections (a) and (b) of section 52 shall be treated as a single taxpayer.

“(2) PASS-THRU IN THE CASE OF ESTATES AND TRUSTS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, rules similar to the rules of subsection (d) of section 52 shall apply.

“(3) ALLOCATION IN THE CASE OF PARTNERSHIPS.—In the case of partnerships, the credit shall be allocated among partners under regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

“(f) NO DOUBLE BENEFIT.—

“(1) REDUCTION IN BASIS.—For purposes of this subtitle—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—If a credit is determined under this section with respect to any property by reason of expenditures described in subsection (c)(1)(A), the basis of such property shall be reduced by the amount of the credit so determined.

“(B) CERTAIN DISPOSITIONS.—If, during any taxable year, there is a recapture amount determined with respect to any property the basis of which was reduced under subparagraph (A), the basis of such property (immediately before the event resulting in such recapture) shall be increased by an amount equal to such recapture amount. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term ‘recapture amount’ means any increase in tax (or adjustment in carrybacks or carryovers) determined under subsection (d).

“(2) OTHER DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS.—No deduction or credit shall be allowed under any other provision of this chapter with respect to the amount of the credit determined under this section.”.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 38(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking “plus” at the end of paragraph (12), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (13) and inserting “, plus”, and by adding at the end the following:

“(14) the employer-provided child care credit determined under section 45G.”.

(2) The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following:

“Sec. 45G. Employer-provided child care credit.”

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care expenditure’ means any amount paid or incurred—

“(i) to acquire, construct, rehabilitate, or expand property—

“(I) which is to be used as part of a qualified child care facility of the taxpayer,

“(II) with respect to which a deduction for depreciation (or amortization in lieu of depreciation) is allowable, and

“(III) which does not constitute part of the principal residence (within the meaning of section 121) of the taxpayer or any employee of the taxpayer,

“(ii) for the operating costs of a qualified child care facility of the taxpayer, including costs related to the training of employees, to scholarship programs, and to the providing of increased compensation to employees with higher levels of child care training, or

“(iii) under a contract with a qualified child care facility to provide child care services to employees of the taxpayer.

“(B) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—The term ‘qualified child care expenditures’ shall not include expenses in excess of the fair market value of such care.

“(2) QUALIFIED CHILD CARE FACILITY.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care facility’ means a facility—

“(i) the principal use of which is to provide child care assistance, and

“(ii) which meets the requirements of all applicable laws and regulations of the State or local government in which it is located, including the licensing of the facility as a child care facility.

Clause (i) shall not apply to a facility which is the principal residence (within the meaning of section 121) of the operator of the facility.

“(B) SPECIAL RULES WITH RESPECT TO A TAXPAYER.—A facility shall not be treated as a qualified child care facility with respect to a taxpayer unless—

“(i) enrollment in the facility is open to employees of the taxpayer during the taxable year,

“(ii) if the facility is the principal trade or business of the taxpayer, at least 30 percent of the enrollees of such facility are dependents of employees of the taxpayer, and

“(iii) the use of such facility (or the eligibility to use such facility) does not discriminate in favor of employees of the taxpayer who are highly compensated employees (within the meaning of section 414(q)).

“(3) QUALIFIED CHILD CARE RESOURCE AND REFERRAL EXPENDITURE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ‘qualified child care resource and referral expenditure’ means any amount paid or incurred under a contract to provide child care resource and referral services to an employee of the taxpayer.

“(B) NONDISCRIMINATION.—The services shall not be treated as qualified unless the provision of such services (or the eligibility to use such services) does not discriminate in favor of employees of the taxpayer who are highly compensated employees (within the meaning of section 414(q)).

“(d) RECAPTURE OF ACQUISITION AND CONSTRUCTION CREDIT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If, as of the close of any taxable year, there is a recapture event with respect to any qualified child care facility of the taxpayer, then the tax of the taxpayer under this chapter for such taxable year shall be increased by an amount equal to the product of—

“(A) the applicable recapture percentage, and

“(B) the aggregate decrease in the credits allowed under section 38 for all prior taxable years which would have resulted if the qualified child care expenditures of the taxpayer described in subsection (c)(1)(A) with respect to such facility had been zero.

“(2) APPLICABLE RECAPTURE PERCENTAGE.—“(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, the applicable recapture percentage shall be determined from the following table:

If the recapture event occurs in:	The applicable recapture percentage is:
Years 1-3	100
Year 4	85
Year 5	70
Year 6	55
Year 7	40
Year 8	25
Years 9 and 10	10
Years 11 and thereafter	0.

“(B) YEARS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), year 1 shall begin on the first day of the taxable year in which the qualified child care facility is placed in service by the taxpayer.

“(3) RECAPTURE EVENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘recapture event’ means—

“(A) CESSATION OF OPERATION.—The cessation of the operation of the facility as a qualified child care facility.

“(B) CHANGE IN OWNERSHIP.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the disposition of a taxpayer's interest in a qualified child care facility with respect to which the credit described in subsection (a) was allowable.

“(ii) AGREEMENT TO ASSUME RECAPTURE LIABILITY.—Clause (i) shall not apply if the person acquiring such interest in the facility agrees in writing to assume the recapture liability of the person disposing of such interest in effect immediately before such disposition. In the event of such an assumption, the person acquiring the interest in the facility shall be treated as the taxpayer for purposes of assessing any recapture liability (computed as if there had been no change in ownership).

“(4) SPECIAL RULES.—

“(A) TAX BENEFIT RULE.—The tax for the taxable year shall be increased under paragraph (1) only with respect to credits allowed by reason of this section which were used to reduce tax liability. In the case of credits not so used to reduce tax liability, the carryforwards and carrybacks under section 39 shall be appropriately adjusted.

“(B) NO CREDITS AGAINST TAX.—Any increase in tax under this subsection shall not be treated as a tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining the amount of any credit under subpart A, B, or D of this part.

“(C) NO RECAPTURE BY REASON OF CASUALTY LOSS.—The increase in tax under this subsection shall not apply to a cessation of operation of the facility as a qualified child care facility by reason of a casualty loss to the extent such loss is restored by reconstruction or replacement within a reasonable period established by the Secretary.

“(e) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) AGGREGATION RULES.—All persons which are treated as a single employer under subsections (a) and (b) of section 52 shall be treated as a single taxpayer.

“(II) attaches to the taxpayer's income tax return for the taxable year in which such contribution was made a copy of such appraisal,

“(iii) the donee is an organization described in subsection (b)(1)(A),

“(iv) the use of such property by the donee is related to the purpose or function constituting the basis for the donee's exemption under section 501 (or, in the case of a governmental unit, to any purpose or function described under subsection (c)),

“(v) the taxpayer receives from the donee a written statement representing that the donee's use of the property will be in accordance with the provisions of clause (iv), and

“(vi) the written appraisal referred to in clause (ii) includes evidence of the extent (if any) to which property created by the personal efforts of the taxpayer and of the same type as the donated property is or has been—

“(I) owned, maintained, and displayed by organizations described in subsection (b)(1)(A), and “(II) sold to or exchanged by persons other than the taxpayer, donee, or any related person (as defined in section 465(b)(3)(C)).

“(C) MAXIMUM DOLLAR LIMITATION; NO CARRYOVER OF INCREASED DEDUCTION.—The increase in the deduction under this section by reason of this paragraph for any taxable year—

“(i) shall not exceed the artistic adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for such taxable year, and “(ii) shall not be taken into account in determining the amount which may be carried from such taxable year under subsection (d).

“(D) ARTISTIC ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘artistic adjusted gross income’ means that portion of the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year attributable to—

“(i) income from the sale or use of property created by the personal efforts of the taxpayer which is of the same type as the donated property, and

“(ii) income from teaching, lecturing, performing, or similar activity with respect to property described in clause (i).

“(E) PARAGRAPH NOT TO APPLY TO CERTAIN CONTRIBUTIONS.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any charitable contribution of any letter, memorandum, or similar property which was written, prepared, or produced by or for an individual while the individual is an officer or employee of any person (including any government agency or instrumentality) unless such letter, memorandum, or similar property is entirely personal.

“(F) COPYRIGHT TREATED AS SEPARATE PROPERTY FOR PARTIAL INTEREST RULE.—In the case of a qualified artistic charitable contribution, the tangible literary, musical, artistic, or scholarly composition, or similar property and the copyright on such work shall be treated as separate properties for purposes of this paragraph and subsection (f)(3).”.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to contributions made after the date of the enactment of this Act in taxable years ending after such date.

At the end of subtitle A of title VIII insert the following:

SEC. ____ . WAIVER OF STATUTE OF LIMITATION FOR TAXES ON CERTAIN FARM VALUATIONS.

If on the date of the enactment of this Act (or at any time within 1 year after the date of the enactment) a refund or credit of any overpayment of tax resulting from the application of section 2032A(c)(7)(E) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is barred by any law or rule of law, the refund or credit of such overpayment shall, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefor is filed before the date 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

At the end of subtitle A of title VIII insert the following:

SEC. ____ . RESEARCH CREDIT.

(a) PERMANENT EXTENSION OF RESEARCH CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 41 (relating to credit for increasing research activities) is amended by striking subsection (h).

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (1) of section 45C(b) is amended by striking subparagraph (D).

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to amounts paid or incurred after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) INCREASES IN RATES OF ALTERNATIVE INCREMENTAL CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 41(c)(4) (relating to election of alternative incremental credit) is amended—

(A) by striking “2.65 percent” and inserting “3 percent”;

(B) by striking “3.2 percent” and inserting “4 percent”;

(C) by striking “3.75 percent” and inserting “5 percent”.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted, add the following:

SEC. ____ . CREDIT FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH RELATED TO DEVELOPING VACCINES AGAINST WIDESPREAD DISEASES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to business related credits), as amended by section 620, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

“SEC. 45G. CREDIT FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH RELATED TO DEVELOPING VACCINES AGAINST WIDESPREAD DISEASES.

“(a) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of section 38, the vaccine research credit determined under this section for the taxable year is an amount equal to 30 percent of the qualified vaccine research expenses for the taxable year.

“(b) QUALIFIED VACCINE RESEARCH EXPENSES.—For purposes of this section—

“(1) QUALIFIED VACCINE RESEARCH EXPENSES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the term ‘qualified vaccine research expenses’ means the amounts which are paid or incurred by the taxpayer during the taxable year which would be described in subsection (b) of section 41 if such subsection were applied with the modifications set forth in subparagraph (B).

“(B) MODIFICATIONS; INCREASED INCENTIVE FOR CONTRACT RESEARCH PAYMENTS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), subsection (b) of section 41 shall be applied—

“(i) by substituting ‘vaccine research’ for ‘qualified research’ each place it appears in paragraphs (2) and (3) of such subsection, and “(ii) by substituting ‘100 percent’ for ‘65 percent’ in paragraph (3)(A) of such subsection.

“(C) EXCLUSION FOR AMOUNTS FUNDED BY GRANTS, ETC.—The term ‘qualified vaccine research expenses’ shall not include any amount to the extent such amount is funded by any grant, contract, or otherwise by another person (or any governmental entity).

“(2) VACCINE RESEARCH.—The term ‘vaccine research’ means research to develop vaccines and microbicides for—

“(A) malaria,

“(B) tuberculosis,

“(C) HIV, or

“(D) any infectious disease (of a single etiology) which, according to the World Health Organization, causes over 1,000,000 human deaths annually.

“(c) COORDINATION WITH CREDIT FOR INCREASING RESEARCH EXPENDITURES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), any qualified vaccine research expenses for a taxable year to which an election under this section applies shall not be taken into account for purposes of determining the credit allowable under section 41 for such taxable year.

“(2) EXPENSES INCLUDED IN DETERMINING BASE PERIOD RESEARCH EXPENSES.—Any qualified vaccine research expenses for any taxable year which are qualified research expenses (within the meaning of section 41(b)) shall be taken into account in determining base period research expenses for purposes of applying section 41 to subsequent taxable years.

“(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

“(1) LIMITATIONS ON FOREIGN TESTING.—No credit shall be allowed under this section with respect to any vaccine research (other than human clinical testing) conducted outside the United States.

“(2) PRE-CLINICAL RESEARCH.—No credit shall be allowed under this section for pre-clinical research unless such research is pursuant to a research plan an abstract of which has been filed with the Secretary before the beginning of such year. The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall prescribe regulations specifying the requirements for such plans and procedures for filing under this paragraph.

“(3) CERTAIN RULES MADE APPLICABLE.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 41(f) shall apply for purposes of this section.

“(4) ELECTION.—This section (other than subsection (e)) shall apply to any taxpayer for any taxable year only if such taxpayer elects to have this section apply for such taxable year.

(b) INCLUSION IN GENERAL BUSINESS CREDIT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 38(b), as amended by section 620, is amended by striking “plus” at the end of paragraph (14), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (15) and inserting “, plus”, and by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(16) the vaccine research credit determined under section 45G.”.

(2) TRANSITION RULE.—Section 39(d), as amended by section 620, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(12) NO CARRYBACK OF SECTION 45G CREDIT BEFORE ENACTMENT.—No portion of the unused business credit for any taxable year which is attributable to the vaccine research credit determined under section 45G may be carried back to a taxable year ending before the date of the enactment of section 45G.”.

(c) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—Section 280C is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

“(d) CREDIT FOR QUALIFIED VACCINE RESEARCH EXPENSES.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—No deduction shall be allowed for that portion of the qualified vaccine research expenses (as defined in section 45G(b)) otherwise allowable as a deduction for the taxable year which is equal to the amount of the credit determined for such taxable year under section 45G(a).

“(2) CERTAIN RULES TO APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of subsection (c) shall apply for purposes of this subsection.”.

(d) DEDUCTION FOR UNUSED PORTION OF CREDIT.—Section 196(c) (defining qualified business credits) is amended by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (8), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting “, and”, and by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

“(10) the vaccine research credit determined under section 45G(a) (other than such credit determined under the rules of section 280C(d)(2)).”.

(e) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1324(b)(2) of title 31, United States Code, is amended by inserting “or from section 45G(e) of such Code,” after “1978.”.

(2) The table of sections for subpart D of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1, as amended by section 620, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

“Sec. 45G. Credit for medical research related to developing vaccines against widespread diseases.”.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

On page 55, strike line 8 and insert the following:

529(c)(1), or 530(d)(2). For purposes of the preceding sentence, the amount taken into account in determining the amount excluded under section 529(c)(1) shall not include that portion of the distribution which represents a return of any contributions to the plan.

On page 52, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

SEC. 423. TREATMENT OF BONDS ISSUED TO ACQUIRE RENEWABLE RESOURCES ON LAND SUBJECT TO CONSERVATION EASEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 145 (defining qualified 501(c)(3) bond) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

“(e) BONDS ISSUED TO ACQUIRE RENEWABLE RESOURCES ON LAND SUBJECT TO CONSERVATION EASEMENT.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—If—

“(A) the proceeds of any bond are used to acquire land (or a long-term lease thereof) together with any renewable resource associated with the land (including standing timber, agricultural crops, or water rights) from an unaffiliated person,

“(B) the land is subject to a conservation restriction—

“(i) which is granted in perpetuity to an unaffiliated person that is—

“(I) a 501(c)(3) organization, or

“(II) a Federal, State, or local government conservation organization,

“(ii) which meets the requirements of clauses (ii) and (iii)(II) of section 170(h)(4)(A),

“(iii) which exceeds the requirements of relevant environmental and land use statutes and regulations, and

“(iv) which obligates the owner of the land to pay the costs incurred by the holder of the conservation restriction in monitoring compliance with such restriction,

“(C) a management plan which meets the requirements of the statutes and regulations referred to in subparagraph (B)(iii) is developed for the conservation of the renewable resources, and

“(D) such bond would be a qualified 501(c)(3) bond (after the application of paragraph (2)) but for the failure to use revenues derived by the 501(c)(3) organization from the sale, lease, or other use of such resource as otherwise required by this part, such bond shall not fail to be a qualified 501(c)(3) bond by reason of the failure to so use such revenues if the revenues which are not used as otherwise required by this part are used in a manner consistent with the stated charitable purposes of the 501(c)(3) organization.

“(2) TREATMENT OF TIMBER, ETC.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the cost of any renewable resource acquired with proceeds of any bond described in paragraph (1) shall be treated as a cost of acquiring the land associated with the renewable resource and such land shall not be treated as used for a private business use because of the sale or leasing of the renewable resource to, or other use of the renewable resource by, an unaffiliated person to the extent that such sale, leasing, or other use does not constitute an unrelated trade or business, determined by applying section 513(a).

“(B) APPLICATION OF BOND MATURITY LIMITATION.—For purposes of section 147(b), the cost of any land or renewable resource acquired with proceeds of any bond described in paragraph (1) shall have an economic life commensurate with the economic and ecological feasibility of the financing of such land or renewable resource.

“(C) UNAFFILIATED PERSON.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘unaffiliated person’ means any person who controls not more than 20 percent of the governing body of another person.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to obligations issued after January 1, 2002, and before January 1, 2005.

At the end of subtitle A of title VIII add the following:

SEC. ____ . ACCELERATION OF BENEFITS OF WAGE TAX CREDITS FOR EMPOWERMENT ZONES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 113(d) of the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 is amended by striking “December 31, 2001” and inserting “the earlier of—

“(1) the date of the enactment of the Restoring Earnings To Lift Individuals and Empower Families (RELIEF) Act of 2001, or

“(2) July 1, 2001”.

At the end of subtitle D of Title IV add the following:

SEC. ____ . CONTRIBUTIONS OF BOOK INVENTORY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 170(e)(3) (relating to certain contributions of ordinary income and capital gain property) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(D) SPECIAL RULE FOR CONTRIBUTIONS OF BOOK INVENTORY FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES.—

“(i) CONTRIBUTIONS OF BOOK INVENTORY.—In determining whether a qualified book contribution is a qualified contribution, subparagraph (A) shall be applied without regard to whether or not—

“(I) the donee is an organization described in the matter preceding clause (i) of subparagraph (A), and “(II) the property is to be used by the donee solely for the care of the ill, the needy, or infants.

“(ii) QUALIFIED BOOK CONTRIBUTION.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘qualified book contribution’ means a charitable contribution of books, but only if the contribution is to an organization—

“(I) described in subclause (I) or (III) of paragraph (6)(B)(i), or

“(II) described in section 501(c)(3) and exempt from tax under section 501(a) which is organized primarily to make books available to the general public at no cost or to operate a literacy program.”

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to contributions made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ____ . TREATMENT OF CERTAIN HOSPITAL SUPPORT ORGANIZATIONS AS QUALIFIED ORGANIZATIONS FOR PURPOSES OF DETERMINING ACQUISITION INDEBTEDNESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (C) of section 514(c)(9) (relating to real property acquired by a qualified organization) is amended by striking “or” at the end of clause (ii), by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting “; or”, and by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(iv) a qualified hospital support organization (as defined in subparagraph (I)).”

(b) QUALIFIED HOSPITAL SUPPORT ORGANIZATIONS.—Paragraph (9) of section 514(c) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

“(I) QUALIFIED HOSPITAL SUPPORT ORGANIZATIONS.—For purposes of subparagraph (C)(iv), the term ‘qualified hospital support organization’ means, with respect to any eligible indebtedness (including any qualified refinancing of such eligible indebtedness), a support organization (as defined in section 509(a)(3)) which supports a hospital described in section 119(d)(4)(B) and with respect to which—

“(i) more than half of its assets (by value) at any time since its organization—

“(I) were acquired, directly or indirectly, by gift or devise, and “(II) consisted of real property, and

“(ii) the fair market value of the organization’s real estate acquired, directly or indirectly, by gift or devise, exceeded 10 percent of the fair market value of all investment assets held by the organization immediately prior to the time that the eligible indebtedness was incurred.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the term ‘eligible indebtedness’ means indebtedness secured by real property acquired by the organization, directly or indirectly, by gift or devise, the proceeds of which are used exclusively to acquire any leasehold interest in such real property or for improvements on, or repairs to, such real property. A determination under clauses (i) and (ii) of this subparagraph shall be made each time such an eligible indebtedness (or the qualified refinancing of such an eligible indebtedness) is incurred. For purposes of this subparagraph, a refinancing of such an eligible indebtedness shall be considered qualified if such refinancing does not exceed the amount of the refinanced eligible indebtedness immediately before the refinancing.”

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to indebtedness incurred after December 31, 2003.

On page 314, after line 21, add the following:

SEC. ____ . TAX-EXEMPT BOND AUTHORITY FOR TREATMENT FACILITIES REDUCING ARSENIC LEVELS IN DRINKING WATER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 142(e) (relating to facilities for the furnishing of water) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B), respectively,

(2) by striking “For purposes” and inserting the following:

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes”, and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

“(2) FACILITIES REDUCING ARSENIC LEVELS INCLUDED.—Such term includes improvements to facilities in order to comply with the 10 parts per billion arsenic standard recommended by the National Academy of Sciences.”

(b) FACILITIES NOT SUBJECT TO STATE CAP.—Section 146(g) (relating to exception for certain bonds) is amended—

(1) by striking “and” at the end of paragraph (3),

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting “, and”, and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4), the following new paragraph:

“(5) any exempt facility bond issued as part of an issue described in section 142(a)(4) (relating to facilities for the furnishing of water), but only to the extent the property to be financed by the net proceeds of the issue is described in section 142(e)(2).”

(c) EXEMPT FROM AMT.—Section 57(a)(5)(C) (relating to tax-exempt interest of specified private activity bonds) is amended by adding at the end the following new clause:

“(v) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN WATER FACILITY BONDS.—For purposes of clause (i), the term ‘private activity bond’ shall not include any exempt facility bond issued as part of an issue described in section 142(a)(4) (relating to facilities for the furnishing of water), but only to the extent the property to be financed by the net proceeds of the issue is described in section 142(e)(2).”

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to bonds issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Beginning on page 19, line 21, strike all through page 22, line 1, and insert:

“(7) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (2), the applicable percentage shall be determined in accordance with the following table:

“For taxable years beginning in calendar year—	The applicable percentage is—
2005	174
2006	184
2007	187
2008	190

"For taxable years beginning in calendar year—2009 and thereafter 200."

(c) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

On page 21, line 2, strike "2005" and insert "2004".

On page 21, strike the table following line 21, and insert:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWNBACK). Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

NOMINATION OF HOWARD H. BAKER, JR., OF TENNESSEE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO JAPAN

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to executive session to consider the nomination of Howard H. Baker, Jr. The nomination will be stated.

The bill clerk read the nomination of Howard H. Baker, Jr., of Tennessee, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Japan.

The Senate proceeded to consider the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 hours equally divided for consideration of the nomination. Who yields time? The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do want to talk a moment about the nomination of Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan. I am chairman of the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific Rim. We held a hearing today for Howard Baker. Fortunately, we were able to move it today so that his nomination can be voted on for confirmation.

Mr. President, I am pleased to accept Howard Baker as Ambassador to Japan. I am chairman of that subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific rim. Certainly one of the most important countries in that area is Japan, a country with which we have worked closely for a very long time. We have had some of our highest profile Ambassadors in Japan, people in the past who had come from the Senate, also including a Speaker of the House and a majority leader of the Senate several years ago.

Now we have the opportunity—and I was very pleased to be able today to hold that hearing—to have Howard Baker as our nominee whom the President nominated to this important task. We are very proud to pass it on. We thank the leader for being able to bring it to the floor today so we can get our Ambassador in place in Japan.

Japan is key, of course, to much of what we do in the Asian area, and it is key to what we do in Korea, particularly North Korea and the Korean peninsula. We need to work with Japan to do that. The same is true with Taiwan and China. Japan is our partner.

Of course, they are the largest economy in that area and continue to have some economic problems, particularly banking problems. We have some things we have to work out with them with regard to our Armed Forces being in Okinawa and work out things to see if we can reduce the deficit we have in trade.

I cannot think of a better person to represent us. He has great experience and great compassion. He worked in the White House, in the Senate, and has been the Senate floor leader. He has done all things in public. I am delighted Howard Baker is our nominee.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I see other Senators who are here to speak on behalf of former Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan. I will not be too long. I am delighted to have this opportunity. I think this is such a great selection for this very important position as Ambassador to Japan.

I feel a personal relationship with Howard Baker for a lot of reasons. First of all, I think Howard Baker was the first live Republican I actually saw up close in my life. When I was growing up in Pascagoula, MS, there was none. Then I had the good fortune of going to the great center of learning, Oxford, MS. There I saw this outstanding and very calming and articulate spokesman, Howard Baker, on Memphis television. I was impressed. And he was a Republican. I started listening to him and watching him and had occasion to meet him one time when he came down to the university.

Of course, this outstanding man from a small town in Tennessee ran for the Senate. He didn't go through the State legislature and through the House of Representatives and eventually to the Senate. He went straight to the Senate.

Of course, it is of interest that his mother and his father had also served in the House of Representatives. I believe his mother had been the sheriff of the county in Tennessee. I think that is accurate. He had a pedigree of knowledge, the people of Tennessee and of governments. So it was a natural for him to go straight to the Senate.

His wife, of course, was the daughter of Everett Dirksen. He of the melodious voice, a legend in his own time, his portrait hangs on the majority leader's conference wall. He had that influence.

Immediately, he drew attention and respect. Immediately, he started to seek leadership in the Senate. He was not successful the first time. I think the Senator from Alaska can remember the details of that. He very quickly, comparatively speaking, became the leader of the Republicans of the Senate and then of course, in 1980, after the election, became the majority leader.

I remember watching him from my perch on the House side of the Capitol as the Republican whip at the time and having meetings with him in his room where he always had the fireplace going. I was always impressed. There were a couple of difficult issues with which we had to deal—the settling of AWAC, the Panama Canal. I can remember not agreeing with the position he took on at least one of those.

I watched how masterful he was. I remember coming over and watching one of the votes. We were standing in the back of the Chamber. As I recall, he sat on the corner of the table, and it seemed to have an influence on voters just because he was sitting there. Though both those motions prevailed, and they were in many ways unpopular, I remember sending him a handwritten note at the time how impressed I was at how he pulled those issues together in a bipartisan way.

Soft spoken; intellectual, actually. A lot of people would be surprised that an intellectual could rise to that kind of position, but he did.

Now I have an even greater respect for his leadership since I have for the past 5 years been able to serve as majority leader. I remember telling my immediate predecessor, Bob Dole: I thought your job was a piece of cake. Why wasn't it that way when I got here? This job is a challenge, every day. You have people who disagree with you around you, your friends on both sides of the aisle, and you try to give some direction to get some result. I truly now have a renewed and greater respect for the majority leader and the majority leader's position, and for Howard Baker in particular.

Of course, he went on to run for President. In fact, I think almost every majority leader except George Mitchell and Trent Lott have been candidates for President. I might note, none of them has been successful, although Lyndon Johnson did manage to come in sort of through the back door, after being selected to be Vice President. He did a wonderful job.

Then he showed even greater wisdom. He said: I've done that job; I'm out of here. And he went back to the private sector. And did he disappear into the hills of Tennessee? No, though that is where he seeks refuge to this very day. He went into the private sector, went to a law firm. He is involved and thoughtful. He returned to public service as Chief of Staff to President Reagan.

Probably his greatest stroke of recent years is his marriage to the fine former Senator from Kansas, Nancy Kassebaum. What a duo that is.

Just a year or so ago in our continuing Leader's Lecture Series, Howard Baker was one of the speakers. It was extremely interesting. He gave us a Baker's dozen of suggestions of being in the Senate. That is 13, for those who are not from the South or who don't know a baker's dozen is 13. It was a great list, and he did a wonderful job.

Now he has been selected for this position. I received a call a couple weeks ago from none other than Senator BYRD who said: This is our colleague. We know him well. He was our majority leader. He wasn't just a member or just a leader; he was majority leader at a very tough, difficult time.

He worked with Senator BYRD across the aisle.

We don't have to wait for weeks or months for an investigation. We know this man. Let's move it. Let's expedite it.

The committee had its hearing today, and the Senate will vote tonight. We will vote to confirm Howard Baker, and he will be an Ambassador, very similar to the ones who have preceded him, former Majority Leader Mike Mansfield and former Speaker of the House Tom Foley.

Japan, I hope, recognizes and appreciates that we send them as our Ambassador the very best. That tradition continues with Howard Baker. I am delighted we are moving expeditiously. We will get this confirmation done. Senator Baker and his helpmate, Senator Kassebaum, will be great diplomats for America. They will be a tremendous asset for all who get to know him in Japan. I thank all of my Senate colleagues for agreeing to move this nomination expeditiously.

I invite Senator Baker to join us in about an hour and a half to hear the next Leader's Lecture presentation from former President of the Senate, former House Member, Gerald Ford.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from the great State of Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am delighted to follow our leader, speaking about our former majority leader, Howard Baker, and his lovely lady, Senator Kassebaum. As one whose home is closer to Tokyo than it is to Washington, DC, I welcome this appointment.

This is the century of the Pacific. If one really studies geopolitical affairs in this world, they can only come to the conclusion that the Pacific is going to be the region of great interest to the world, of great potential, and of great strife if we are not careful.

I am delighted the President has chosen Howard Baker to become the Ambassador to Japan. He has shown his leadership on the floor of the Senate and in activities he has participated in around the world since he left the Senate. His wife, as we know, is one of the distinguished leading ladies of this country. The President is very smart. He gets two Ambassadors for the price of one.

We will welcome him going to Alaska on his way to Japan and on his way back because he is a great friend. It was my privilege to serve with Howard Baker. During the 8 years he was the leader I was assistant leader, and I consider him one of the finest Americans who has ever lived. I am glad to see he continues being willing to serve our country, and I shall vote for him.

I yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the nomination of my good friend and former colleague Senator Howard Baker to be

U.S. Ambassador to Japan. I can think of no finer individual to serve in this important post, for no finer person ever served in the U.S. Senate.

Having an Ambassador to Japan with Senator Baker's experience, knowledge, and statesmanship is crucial during this important period in U.S.-Japan relations. It is vital to America's goals for peace in this region. The overall security situation in Asia is of utmost importance. Having Senator Baker representing the United States in Japan will be a tremendous asset as we work to maintain security and stability in that vital region.

He proudly served as a sailor—P.T. boat sailor—who knows how to navigate rough seas.

Senator Baker's past service to the nation has been exemplary. He represented his home State of Tennessee for three terms in the Senate, from 1967 until 1985. Over the course of his final four years in the Senate, Howard Baker served with distinction as the Senate majority leader. After leaving the Senate, Senator Baker went on to serve the Nation as former President Reagan's Chief of Staff and as a member of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board.

Senator Baker, of all people, fully understands the demands and sacrifices we ask of our public officials and their families. His willingness to take on this challenge and once again return to public service is greatly appreciated. By his side, indeed a partner, will be his lovely wife, our former colleague, Nancy Kassebaum Baker.

Mr. President, I have been fortunate, to have worked with Senator Baker for many years. I have the great privilege to now be in my fourth term because of his help, and, above all, his advice and friendship. The Nation, the Senate wish them both good fortune.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the Presidents of this country long ago established a tradition of nominating the most eminent of our political leaders to be ambassadors to Japan. Former Senators Mansfield and Mondale, and most recently, Speaker Tom Foley have maintained that tradition of diplomatic excellence and service to our country up until this day.

When President Bush nominated my old friend, Howard Baker, to be our next ambassador to our most important Asian ally, he kept the highest standards of this important tradition. That is why I fully expect my colleagues today will concur in supporting this nomination. And while we will all miss the presence in Washington of our dear friend and his wife, another esteemed former colleague, Nancy Kassebaum Baker—who herself established a well-deserved reputation in this Senate as one of our most thoughtful leaders on foreign policy—what we will lose will be more than offset, once again, by the contribution that they will make for our country.

Howard Baker has been a public servant all of his life. It is an honor to serve in the Senate, not least because one serves with such distinguished and admirable colleagues, but I must say I have always considered myself particularly fortunate that my career overlapped in part with the three terms the distinguished Senator from Tennessee served here. I was particularly honored to have worked with him during the time he served as our party's majority leader. And as my colleagues well know, Senator Baker never really retired. He left the Senate and became the chief of staff to former President Reagan, serving that great President in an outstanding manner. While it would take too long to enumerate all of the contributions rendered since then by this exceptional public servant, it serves to note that he most recently was a leader of an important commission that conducted an essential review of our nuclear cooperation programs with Russia. The recommendations of that bipartisan commission were key in the new administration's policy review of this very important component of this important bilateral relationship. Now Howard Baker will go to serve another of America's important bilateral relations, as our Ambassador to Tokyo.

I have been saying for years that the strategic partnership American must nurture in Asia is not with China, but with Japan. President Bush clearly recognizes this reality, and he has demonstrated this with his appointments of Japan experts at the State Department, Pentagon and the National Security Council. The President has capped these selections by choosing Howard Baker as our Ambassador. I commend the President on his strategic thinking, and I think the President could not have made a better selection in filling this post.

Howard Baker brings to this position his long experience in the Senate, in the White House and in the corporate sector. All aspects of this experience will be beneficial to his efforts to represent the United States to our Japanese ally. For the Japanese leadership, which has warmly welcomed this nomination, former Senator Baker will bring an appreciation of all of aspects of American society, and a deep respect for Japanese society and culture. The new Japanese leadership of Junichiro Koizumi could not begin its relationship with Washington on a more auspicious note.

I have personally known Howard Baker for nearly a quarter of a century. I know him for his steady, calm presence and for his wise counsel. I know him for his love of country, and for his deep understanding of how the world beyond our borders works. He and his dear wife, former Senator Nancy Kassebaum, will be missed in Washington. But we can rest assured that our country's interests in Japan are superbly represented by this exceptionally dedicated and talented couple. I know that my colleagues concur and join me in wishing Howard Baker God-speed.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to add my support to the nomination of Howard H. Baker, Jr., to be the U.S. Ambassador to Japan.

Howard Baker has an outstanding record of serving the people of the United States as an officer in the U.S. Navy, as a Senator, as White House Chief of Staff to President Reagan, and as a member of numerous Presidential Advisory Boards. During the nearly 20 years that he represented Tennessee in the U.S. Senate, he served as both the minority and majority leader, earning the respect of his colleagues and a reputation as a talented, fair leader, and consensus builder. Senator Baker also served on the Foreign Relations Committee and was a Congressional Delegate to the United Nations General Assembly.

The experience and the skill that Senator Baker has developed as a long time public servant will be valuable as he takes on the important role of working to strengthen U.S. relations with Japan. Howard Baker succeeds a long and illustrious line of envoys to Japan including former House Speaker Tom Foley, former Vice President Walter Mondale, Michael Hayden Armacost, and former Majority Leader Mike Mansfield. I am sure that he will represent the United States with honor, in a manner that reflects well upon his predecessors.

I am also especially pleased that the United States will benefit from the wisdom and expertise of Nancy Kassebaum Baker, our former colleague, who will accompany her husband in this important endeavor. I had the pleasure of working with Senator Kassebaum on many issues and know that America is getting a truly excellent team to represent our country in Japan.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I would like to state how delighted I am that the President has nominated a statesman of such skill and integrity to serve as our Ambassador in Japan. Senator Baker had just completed three terms when I entered this body, including terms as majority and minority leader. He was well known as a man of courtesy and thoughtfulness, who managed difficult political battles with grace and good humor. He took those traits with him to the White House, where as Chief of Staff he played a key role in rebuilding public confidence in a presidency that was racked by foreign policy scandal. Throughout his career Senator Baker has often been called into service to help heal the ruptures created by difficult issues like Watergate, the Panama Canal and Iran-Contra; and he has repeatedly played a key role in forging the bipartisan consensus necessary to move our government and our nation forward.

There is no relationship more important for the U.S. than Japan. The vicissitudes of our difficult relationship with an emerging China, or the ongoing frictions on the Korean Peninsula, tend to attract most of the media attention devoted to Asia. But it is in fact Japan that is the indispensable country to the U.S. in Asia. Even after a decade of slow growth, Japan has by far the largest economy in Asia, and is the largest overseas market for U.S. products. Japan is an important investor in the United States, including in my state of West Virginia. Japan hosts the largest number of American troops in Asia, and is an important ally in our efforts to promote peace, prosperity and democracy throughout Asia.

The nomination of Senator Baker as Ambassador to Tokyo—the most recent in a series of senior statesmen to serve in that critical post—will send confirmation to our Japanese allies the tremendous importance the United States attaches to our partnership with Japan. I know he will work with the new Government of Prime Minister Koizumi to express support for measures that will restart the Japanese economy, and enable Japan to resume its part as one of the locomotives of global growth. I know he will work with Japan to continue to re-invigorate our security alliance, which plays such an important role in maintaining peace in Asia. And I know he, by his very presence in Tokyo, will dispel Japanese perceptions that America is “Japan-passing.” Having followed U.S.-Japan relations for the past 40 years, I am confident that U.S. relations with Japan are not moribund but in fact mature.

I commend the President for his excellent selection of a representative for this critical post, and add how pleased I am that his wonderful and talented wife, our former colleague, Senator Nancy Kassebaum, will be in Tokyo with him. I can think of no one better to join him on this mission than my dear and most admired former colleague.

I will vote to support the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise today also in enthusiastic and strong support for the nomination of Senator Howard Baker to be U.S. Ambassador to the nation of Japan. In fact, Mr. President, I can think of no person who could represent America with more honor and more distinction than my fellow Tennessean, Howard Baker, a truly extraordinary man and an extraordinary leader in this body, in his community, and this Nation.

As we all know, Senator Baker served as the United States Senator from the great State of Tennessee for three terms. He served as minority leader, majority leader, and he served President Ronald Reagan as White House Chief of Staff.

More important than all of that, which we know, he has served America long and well, with unfailing grace, with inexhaustible courage, and with integrity; never hesitating, as we just heard from the majority leader, in taking on the tough tasks, the tough assignments, never failing to shoot straight with us, to call it like it is. Whether it was winning over, in Tennessee, traditional Democrats, union members, to become the first Republican in the history of Tennessee to be elected to the Senate and teaming up with Senators to pass monumental and historic clean air and water bills without a single dissenting vote, or lobbying his colleagues to allow the televising of Senate proceedings, which are routine today, or supporting plans to end the draft, or to provide for the direct election of the President, or give 18-year-olds the right to vote, or investigating a President of his own party, or forging a foreign policy consensus to check Soviet cold war expansion, Howard Baker never flinched from the tough decisions.

He always put principle before politics. He was not just a good Senator; he wasn't just a good leader; but he was a good mentor and friend to me personally.

What is remarkable as we hear people in this body talking about him, is his ability to build coalitions, his ability to disarm his opponents with compromise that addressed both the concerns of supporters and limited the problems of dissenters, bringing them together, addressing concerns from groups who would not normally be together—leaving all sides in good spirits.

I mentioned the personal reflection of being a good mentor and a good friend. Again, this comes from my own experience when 10 years ago I was trying to make a decision of how best to enter public service. I went by to see Senator Baker, someone whom I did not know, someone whom I had not met—sitting down with that person in conversation—and you know it is a conversation he has had with hundreds and hundreds of people thinking about public service—sitting down for an hour and listening to what not only a campaign would be like but what the privilege of serving the United States of America in this body was all about.

Over the next year and a half I made three more appointments with him and took my wife Karen to listen to him, to talk to him. Indeed, he seemed to listen more to us than we did to him, in the thoughtful way of introspection and then comment. Yes, ultimately, after those conversations I decided, in large part based on those conversations, to run for the Senate.

At the height of his political power, Howard Baker stunned Washington by making a decision to leave the Senate, following his own advice of term limits, of the citizen legislator, only to be called back by President Reagan who tapped him as the White House Chief of Staff. He served President Reagan well.

The majority leader, a few minutes ago, mentioned that that legacy lives on. It was 2 years ago that he did come and give the lecture series—we will hear President Ford later tonight—and the title of that talk 2 years ago was “On Herding Cats,” talking about his experience in this body, each of the little points of the “Bakers Dozen,” of the 13 points I remember, as I listened in awe, as I listened in pride to my fellow Tennessean.

“Listen more often than you speak,” was one of the 13;

“Be patient,” another;

“Tell the truth, whether you have to or not,” was another;

“Be civil, and encourage others to do the same.”

So his story continues to unfold. Tonight, as we come together both to praise him and to support his nomination, we recognize that he remains an informal and trusted adviser, a model to which all politicians in Tennessee aspire, a friend to freedom, to democracy, a defender of principle, a man of honesty, integrity, and courage, who will represent America well.

His wife Nancy Kassebaum Baker has been mentioned, a friend to all of us. Together they make an experienced team, a knowledgeable team; together, a tremendous asset to the United States of America.

It is, indeed, with honor and pleasure, and I should say pride as a Tennessean, that I close in my support for Howard H. Baker, Jr., for the post of U.S. Ambassador to Japan.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the nomination of Howard Baker for Ambassador to Japan. I, first of all, compliment my colleague, Senator FRIST, for his eloquent remarks which encapsulated Senator Baker's career and his character. It is very gratifying to hear so many favorable remarks about someone whom we hold so dear.

This was the case this morning as we had the hearing on Senator Baker. We heard so many from both sides of the aisle—Senator BIDEN, Senator BYRD—say so many nice things about the Senator. It is a very personal matter to me in many respects.

Many years ago, I, with shaky hand, dialed a telephone number in order to return a call from Senator Howard Baker. He had asked me to come up as counsel to the Watergate committee when he served as minority leader of that committee. Today that is the telephone number of my office because I have the privilege of occupying the chair. As I said earlier today, no one will be able to fill the shoes of Howard Baker, but I am privileged to occupy what we call the Howard Baker seat. I am sure others who have held that seat would not begrudge me referring to it in that way.

I would probably not be in politics were it not for Howard Baker. I left a job I dearly loved as assistant U.S. attorney many years ago, as a young lawyer, to go and manage middle Tennessee for Howard Baker, as if anyone could manage him, or as if he needed managing.

A young lawyer by the name of Lamar Alexander, later to be Governor of Tennessee, came to me and suggested this to me and suggested it to him and put us together. I asked how much the job paid and they said nothing. So with my usual business sense, I said that sounded good to me. I took on the job. Of course, he was the first popularly elected Republican in the history of Tennessee.

During Watergate, I had an opportunity that I know no other young man or young lawyer has ever had; that is, to sit at the right hand, literally and figuratively, of a man such as Howard Baker during the most tumultuous time in our generation and in American history. I saw him and the difficulties he encountered. We were dealing with a President of the United States who was a friend of Senator Baker. We were dealing with members of the Cabinet such as John Mitchell, who were friends of Senator Baker. I saw the agony that he went through as he tried to be fair. But he also tried to be steadfast to the Constitution of the United States. He walked that line and he showed the ethical and moral dimensions of his character.

He gave an example not only to this young lawyer at the time but to all of America of what it meant to be a statesman. In fact, I think the word “statesman” was coined for individuals such as Howard Baker because he demonstrated to all of us that it matters not only what you do but how you do it.

It is a great pleasure to see how revered he is by those who served with him, not the least of which, of course, is Senator BYRD of West Virginia, who served as the majority leader when Senator Baker served as minority leader. I heard them talk earlier today. I am looking forward to hearing Senator BYRD again on the floor, but I sat there and thought what two strong men, what two great men, oftentimes disagreeing but working together for the benefit of their country, what an example they set for us doing their job with mutual respect and only one thing in their minds—ultimately, serving their States and their country.

Senator Baker said earlier today that essentially, after all is said and done, he is a man of the Senate. Of course, the same could be said of Senator BYRD.

I compliment President Bush for making this appointment. Senator Baker—I assume; I have never really talked to him about it—was not an intimate of the Bush campaign, although I know he was a hard worker for it. I assume, looking back on it, that former President Bush and he were somewhat friendly competitors, as they were coming along about the same time. President Bush, the current President, obviously, has the good judgment to reach out and get the best for this most serious appointment.

This is a troubled part of the world. It is probably going to create more trouble for us in the years to come. We have a very unusual, ambiguous relationship with the country of China right now, as in many respects China is progressing in terms of its economy and in terms of its economic openness, while at the same time it is increasing its military might and has 300 missiles along its coast pointed toward Taiwan. It, clearly, has designs on being the predominant player in that part of the world, whether it be Taiwan or the South China Sea islands or various other parts of that area of the world.

It is extremely important that we maintain the best of relations with our friends and our allies in that area. There is none more important than the country of Japan.

Japan is undergoing its own internal changes that at this point we are attempting, while not being an overbearing friend, to be a helpful friend, whether it be with regard to reform of their banking system or the other aspects of their economy, and to go through those tough changes, that we and other countries have had to go through, to get to where they need to get. It is a very delicate time. They are undergoing a change in their leadership right now.

For all of these reasons, it is going to take a wise person, a steady hand representing us in that part of the world. Thank goodness we have a man such as Howard Baker to take on that job.

We make it very difficult nowadays for people to come in and serve their country. Our nomination process takes too long. It is too intrusive. The rewards oftentimes do not outweigh the benefits. But, thank God, we still have people such as Howard Baker and so many others who are willing to give a portion of their time to serve their country.

I am totally content that Senator Baker is going to serve as another in a long line of illustrious predecessors who have held this job and made America proud. America and the world will be better because he has served.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senate will soon vote on the nomination of former Senator Howard Baker to be the next U.S. Ambassador to Japan. This will be a vote I will long remember and of which I will long be proud. It will be one of those proud moments in the history of the Senate.

I have voted on many nominations, and I have cast 16,027 votes as of now. This will be one of the best votes I have ever cast. I have no doubt that this former colleague, with whom I worked so closely, will be an excellent representative of the United States to the Japanese Government and the Japanese people.

Senator Howard Baker served his home State of Tennessee in this Chamber for three terms, from 1967 to 1985. As the country began to recover from the scandal of Watergate, Howard Baker was chosen to lead the other side of the aisle as minority leader while I served as majority leader, positions that we would later exchange. Senator Baker distinguished himself as a man of strong character, sound judgment, and good humor. Having followed his father, with whom I served in the House of Representatives, his stepmother, and his father-in-law in Congress—again, speaking of his father-in-law, I can see Everett Dirksen standing in his place. I can see his unruly hair. I can see him gesturing and uttering the most beautiful phrases. He could paint word pictures, Everett Dirksen—

Senator Baker comes with great credentials in many ways. He had a deep and abiding understanding of and respect for the legislative branch. There was no doubt in Howard Baker's mind as to where the legislative branch stood. He knew of the Constitution. He knew about the separation of powers and the checks and balances. He was one who would always uphold those principles. His love for the Senate, his love for his country always came before partisan imperatives.

Senator Baker was often a voice of reason in challenging times. As the ranking Republican on the select committee that investigated the Watergate affair, his stated intent for the hearings was to determine the answer to the memorable question, as he put it: What did the President know and when did he know it?

I think everyone in this country has heard those words and probably most of us will remember having heard them.

Senator Baker and I joined together on a number of major initiatives that were important to the country as well as to the Senate. I can remember the Panama Canal treaties. I was majority leader. I was against the treaties to begin with. Howard Baker was against the treaties. I went to Panama and took with me six other Senators: Senator SARBANES, Senator Metzenbaum, Senator Matsunaga, Senator Riegle. There were seven, I believe.

We went to Panama. We talked to Americans living there. We talked to our military people. We talked with our State Department people. We talked with the representatives of the Government of Panama, including General Torrijos. I read all about the history of the Panama Canal by David McCullough, "The Path Between the Seas." It is fascinating. Anything David McCullough writes is fascinating. I changed my mind about it.

Both Howard Baker and I knew we were swimming uphill, so to speak. The polls showed that the great majority of the American people were against those treaties. There were two of them. They were against those treaties. A majority of the Members of the Senate were against the treaties. So we had an uphill battle. We both came to the conclusion that it was in the best interest of the United States to ratify those treaties. It was a difficult task.

I can remember coming in here on a Sunday and meeting with the Panamanian Ambassador to the United States and with our own State Department people right down the hall to my right here, in room 207, which was and is named the Mansfield Room. I remember our meeting; and then in the room there, which was formerly the room of the Presidents pro tempore of the Senate, we met to hammer out some differences.

Howard Baker and I formulated two amendments to the treaty, and but for those two amendments—which we called the leadership amendments because the two leaders were joining—but for the leadership amendments, the treaties would not have been approved.

What I am saying is this. Here was a man who stood above party and voted for what he thought was in the best interests of the country, realizing that in the next election he would pay a price for that. I am still paying a price in West Virginia. There are still those who remember my votes for the treaties and continue to write to me about them to remind me. But he was in a far more difficult position than I. The Democrats controlled the Senate. We had at that time a Democratic President, President Jimmy Carter. So it was more difficult for Howard Baker.

But notwithstanding the difficulties, notwithstanding the politics of the matter, which were adverse to the position we took, Howard Baker proudly took that position, stating it clearly, articulately, and effectively; and because he joined in approving the treaties, we were successful. We ended up, on both treaties, getting a vote of two-thirds of the Senate plus one vote. We had one vote to spare. So we joined together on that occasion. I can't forget that.

I have said many times—and I said it this morning in the Foreign Relations Committee hearing on the nomination—that there are several medallions in the Senate reception room just off the floor here, and in five of those medallions we find the pictures of Webster, Calhoun, Clay, La Follette, and Taft of Ohio. I have stated one day this Senate will determine the names of other Senators whose pictures and names will go in those remaining medallions. The Senate has already made a decision, I believe, with regard to the next medallion or so.

But at some point in time Howard Baker's picture—it is my hope—will appear in those medallions. So today, for the RECORD—although I won't be here, I am sure, when that decision is made—I nominate Howard Baker because he was a Senator who stood above the fog in public duty and in private thinking and took a hard position. It was hard for him and hard for his party, more so than mine. He provided invaluable support in that instance, as I say. And he also joined me in my effort to bring television coverage to the floor of the Senate.

In later years, he served well. You see, he served as minority leader first with me when I was majority leader, and then I served as minority leader while he was majority leader. Always, I found Howard Baker to be a very agreeable, down-home, homespun person, a person who had great common sense, which is so often absent in the halls of Government—common sense, and a man of good humor, very intelligent, exceedingly knowledgeable, highly articulate, a man of the people.

He served as President Reagan's Chief of Staff at a time when mature counsel and moderate leadership in the White House were needed.

In a 1998 address to the Members of this body, Senator Baker recalled the lessons that helped him as majority leader from 1981 to 1985. This is what he said:

What really makes the Senate work—as our heroes knew profoundly—is an understanding of human nature, an appreciation of hearts as well as minds, the frailties as well as the strengths, of one's colleagues and one's constituents.

That is bringing it right down to the common understanding, bringing it right down to earth. I suggest that this lesson will continue to serve him well in his role as Ambassador to Japan.

Over the years, the United States has sent some of its finest citizens to Japan to act as the President's representative, most recently Tom Foley, former Speaker of the House of Representatives; and prior to him there was Walter Mondale, former Vice President of the United States, and Mike Mansfield, former majority leader of the Senate. The appointment of Senator Baker to this position will again demonstrate the importance of our relationship with Japan, the most prosperous country in Asia, and, more importantly, allow our Government to regain the services of a very talented individual who has spent more than half of his life in the service of this country.

As Senator THOMPSON mentioned a little while ago, Nancy Kassebaum, a former Senator, will be there likewise. Howard Baker and his wife Nancy will be a great team. She could well serve as U.S. Ambassador to Japan in her own right.

Japan will be a vital partner to the United States in what many are calling "the Pacific century." Senator Baker will represent our country in a nation of great importance, in a region of great change, in a world in transition. I am confident that he will work to the best of his considerable abilities to ensure a prosperous, peaceful, and productive relationship with Japan.

I don't know of anyone, Democrat or Republican, I would be happier to stand on this floor and recommend to the people of the United States as Ambassador of Japan, or anyone who could serve more ably, or one who would be more effective. There isn't anyone who would be more patriotic and dedicated to the service of his country than Howard Baker.

I came to the floor immediately after the hearing and urged the majority leader to bring this nomination up today. There is no point in waiting. Bring it up today. I asked my own leader on this side of the aisle if we could do this nomination today. Of course, they had already made up their minds to do it today.

I have looked forward to this moment. I am proud of my service with Howard Baker. I am proud of Howard Baker because he typifies to me a true Senator, a Senator who understands the importance of party, political party, but a Senator who puts the Senate and the Constitution and his country above political party. I know because I was here when he did it.

As my former colleague prepares to journey to Tokyo following his confirmation, Erma and I will be wishing him and Nancy, his lovely wife, the best and a very successful tenure in that office.

Mr. President, I close by those words first written by Horace Greeley because they typify what I think is best about Howard Baker and basically what is most needed by every statesman who serves in government, whether at the national or local level, and basically what distinguishes one individual from another perhaps:

Fame is a vapor, popularity an accident, riches take wing. Only one thing endures, and that is character.

This man has it. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Democratic leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from West Virginia on a characteristically extraordinary statement. He speaks for all of us. He spoke eloquently, sincerely, and truthfully.

Senator Mike Mansfield once called America's relationship with Japan our most important bilateral relationship. How right he was.

Combined, our two countries account for more than 40 percent of the world's gross domestic product. When our nations work together, we can make and have made Asia more stable, Japan stronger, and America more secure.

Today, during this time of transition in Asia, our alliance with Japan is more important than ever. I can think of no individual better equipped than Senator Howard Baker to ensure that our two countries continue to work together and succeed together.

As our distinguished Senator from West Virginia noted, Senator Baker served not only as the Republican leader, as the minority leader of the party, but also as the majority leader at a time when America faced challenges at home and the monumental challenge of the cold war. He worked with his colleagues in the Senate without regard to party affiliation to lead us through countless legislative challenges, and he proved to be a statesman without equal.

By confirming Senator Baker's nomination, we are sending Japan more than an outstanding Ambassador. We are sending a message that we believe Senator Mansfield's observation is truer today than it has ever been. The alliance between our two great nations is so important that it demands an Ambassador of the caliber of Senator Howard Baker, and I am certain that Japan will recognize, by receiving Senator Baker and Senator Nancy Kassebaum, that America is clearly sending its very best.

I join with my colleagues this afternoon in expressing heartfelt congratulations to Howard and Nancy, to express a sentiment I know is shared by every Member of this body in our pride and admiration for them and in our hope that they continue to enjoy public service and our thanks for serving their country so well. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the nomination of Howard Baker to be U.S. Ambassador to Japan. I must say, and I am merely here speaking to the Japanese, I think this nomination is yet again a clear indication of the importance the United States attaches to the relationship with Japan.

For now what will be a quarter of a century, we have sent Senator Mike Mansfield, Speaker Tom Foley, and now Senator Howard Baker as our representatives to the Japanese Government and to the Japanese people. I hope it is fully appreciated in Japan—and I think it is—exactly what this means in terms of how highly we value this relationship, how important we think it is to the course of events internationally and, of course, how much it reflects the very strong conviction on the part of all of us here that Howard Baker and his wife Nancy will do an outstanding job representing us.

I have taken the floor of the Senate on occasion to oppose ambassadorial nominations, particularly non-career ambassadorial nominations. I do not take the position that all Ambassadors should come out of the career service because I think we can draw from outside of the career service to bring people who can make a real contribution—and there is something of a tradition of that in our country—although I think it is very important that the large majority of the positions go to career people in part to help maintain the morale of the Foreign Service, so someone going into the Foreign Service at a young age and committing a career to the Foreign Service, who has an opportunity to rise and become an Ambassador, is not cut off as they move up the ladder because the Ambassadors are all brought in from outside. That would have a very harmful impact on the morale of the Foreign Service, and I think having a Foreign Service with high morale is a very important thing in contributing to America's interests and objectives around the world.

If someone were to come to me and say, "You have admitted you would accept non-career people; you do not have an absolutely rigid position on that; what kind of people is it you are looking for in terms of non-career people to become Ambassadors," I would start right off by saying I would be looking for someone like Howard Baker. This can be the mold, in a sense, of what we are looking for from outside the career foreign service.

We have all known Howard well in the Senate. We hold him in enormous respect. He is a man of great wisdom and judgment, of never-failing courtesy. All here who have dealt with him always sensed the respect he extended to others which, of course, evoked a respect from others back towards him. We need to remember that lesson around here sometimes.

Over the years we saw him exercise power with a sensitivity and a responsibility that is a real tribute to him as a leader. We have a lot of difficult issues that arise from time to time with Japan.

We ought not let those issues cause us to lose sight of how important having a strong positive relationship is with that country. I am sure Howard Baker, as his predecessors, Tom Foley and Mike Mansfield, have done, will be able to communicate that to the Japanese people and communicate back to Members of the Congress the situation that exists.

One of the things that both Ambassador Mansfield and Ambassador Foley did was maintain contacts with Members of Congress. Having come out of the institution, they appreciated the role it plays in these relationships. I think that is one of the strengths that Howard Baker will bring to this ambassadorship. Second, he served in the White House as chief of staff, so he knows the workings of the executive branch. He can bring that expertise also to bear as he assumes this very important responsibility.

I think Nancy Baker will be an extremely important dimension to this ambassadorship. I know at one point there was talk of a co-ambassadorship. I don't quite see how you do that, given the direct responsibilities on an Ambassador, but I am sure she will add a very significant and extra dimension to this representation that our country will have in Japan.

I am pleased to take the floor, along with my other colleagues, in support of this nomination. I thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for his very eloquent statement about Howard Baker, about their relationship in the Senate, and about his character.

This is a man of character. This is a man of wisdom. This is a man of judgment. This is a man of civility. I am delighted he will be our Ambassador to Japan.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise to support the nomination as well of Senator Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan, and of Nancy Kassebaum, a good friend of mine, a former Senator from Kansas, to go along, as well.

Senator Baker I have gotten to know better. I have not served in this body with him.

I have known Nancy Kassebaum very well over the years, her political history in Kansas. Her family has great leadership in my State. Her dad, Alf Landon, was a Presidential nominee, and in 1936 was Governor of Kansas. Senator Kassebaum followed in his footsteps as a very able, qualified, wholesome, and dignified public servant. She did an excellent job. She will do an excellent job in Japan, as well.

Senator Howard Baker I have gotten to know later in life. Sometimes he has come to Kansas State University football games. A great fan—and he picks a great team to support. When we play Tennessee, I understand they have a family dispute between Kansas and Tennessee and he stays with Tennessee, while Senator Kassebaum stays with Kansas State University.

This is an important nomination for reasons already noted, but I will reiterate; that is, the significance of the stature of the Ambassador we are sending to represent us in Japan. Japan is a key ally of the United States. Japan is in a region that will draw increasing focus from the United States in the future and has in recent times even more so. So we are sending to Japan a man of stature from our Nation to represent us in a part of the world on which we will increasingly focus.

We have had difficulties recently in Asia, particularly in our relationship with China. We are expanding our relationship with other nations throughout Asia. We are expanding our relationship with India and South Asia. This entire region of the world is growing in significance globally and growing in significance to the United States.

It is important we send this level of leadership to this region in the form of Senator Baker, for him to be able to represent our interests and our thoughts at this time of expanded U.S. activity and engagement throughout that area.

I wholeheartedly endorse his nomination as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am delighted the United States will have this individual involved in its foreign affairs. He will make an outstanding representative, an outstanding Ambassador. Nancy Kassebaum will be a co-Ambassador. I think she will be dearly loved by the Japanese people, the same way she was loved by the people of Kansas. While she served in the Senate, there was no politician in the country who had a higher approval rating on a statewide basis than Nancy Kassebaum. There are some who say she ranked just below the sunset and the wheat harvest in her approval ratings in our State. She had a lofty stature, and she will carry that along with her to Japan. This is a great nomination that I wholeheartedly support.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. AL-LARD). The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I ask it be in order for me to deliver my brief remarks seated at my desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I made some remarks this morning at the time of the reporting out of the Committee on Foreign Relations the very wise nomination of Howard Baker to be the U.S. Ambassador to Tokyo. I said then, and I repeat, there is not one Senator who ever served with the distinguished former majority leader of this Senate—and I see where he sat right there—not one Senator who would not be honored to join in paying his or her respects to one of the most respected Senators ever to serve in the Senate.

All of us have fond memories of our relationship with Senator Baker, and all of us like him and respect him and admire him for his intelligence and his legislative skills and his ability to broker meaningful compromises and for being just a darn nice guy.

I must confess, my affection for Howard is because he has been so gracious to my grandchildren, and that is the way to any man's heart. I recall that on one occasion, the day after one of my granddaughters was born, Howard was going to North Carolina with me for a little adventure. He called me before we left and he said: JESSE, who is going to meet us at the airport?

I said: I don't know, but I will find out.

He said: I just wondered if I could take a trip.

I said: You can go anywhere you want to go.

He said: I would like to go to the hospital where that young one of yours was born yesterday.

I said: Howard, you don't need to do that.

And he said: No, I like grandchildren, and I would like to go, if you don't mind.

I said: Fine.

He said: As long as I'm going, can I take my camera with me?

A lot of people don't know that he is an accomplished photographer and has published two or three books of pictures that are outstanding. He took pictures of that young one just born 24 hours earlier, and her mama and proud daddy and granddaddy and all the nurses in the hospital.

Fast forward about 4 or 5 years and Katie Stuart visited us and Howard found out about it. He was then the chief of staff for the President of the United States at the White House, President Ronald Reagan. He called me up and said: We need to update that picture that we took at the hospital. So we went down to the White House and he had all the lights set up and he said: Now, JESSE, I want you to get Katie in your arms and I want to photograph the proudest granddaddy and the sweetest granddaughter I ever saw. And he took that picture. That picture is on my wall to this good day.

Howard Baker will make a great Ambassador. On his own hook he would be great, but he has a second advantage, and that is a lady named Nancy Kassebaum Baker, who sat right back there, as a great Senator herself. And as someone said this morning, Nancy herself would make a good Ambassador anywhere she was sent.

I could go on and on, but suffice it to say that Howard Baker's experience and personal qualities and those of Nancy Kassebaum Baker will serve him and her and them well. The United States relationship with Japan is critical in this new era. In sending an Ambassador such as Howard Baker, President Bush has chosen a superbly qualified American to represent the American people in Japan, an outstanding ally of our country, the United States of America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of Howard Baker. I realize this is unusual; the chairman of the committee should be the one to close. I apologize. I didn't know you were speaking. I think I am the last to speak and I will be brief.

Howard Baker is one of the few men or women nominated for Ambassador that it would be warranted not to be briefed about because there is so much to say about Howard Baker. The distinguished senior Senator from Hawaii, standing in the well, knows him as well as I do—and maybe a little better. I have been here 28 years. He was as fine a leader of the Senate as we had in either party. He is a man who, as I said this morning, possessed not only good judgment but a strong dose of wisdom.

Howard Baker has a piece of the country lawyer in him, the country lawyer who knows how to cut through difficult circumstances in a way that resolves a situation and at the same time does no harm or damage to either the egos and/or positions of either of the parties. That is the mark of a leader. It seems to me that is the primary ingredient that an Ambassador should possess.

The appointment of Howard Baker to be Ambassador to Japan is the single strongest signal that the people of Japan could have that we value this relationship with Japan.

Senator HELMS and I have been here the same length of time, Senator INOUE longer, but I doubt whether there is any country to which we have sent more distinguished men and women—men in this case—than to Japan. He goes in the tradition of some truly great Americans. That sounds like a trite thing to say, “great Americans,” but Mike Mansfield, “iron Mike,” from Montana had more integrity in his little finger than most have in their whole body, a man whom everyone admired, a distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, Tom Foley, a distinguished colleague of ours, and on the opposite side of my friend from North Carolina, but respected, Fritz Mondale, a man who graced this place—and I mean that literally, graced this body—and Howard Baker. And I am leaving out others of consequence as well.

Let me say it is not hyperbole to suggest, as I did this morning, and the Senator referenced it, that Senator Nancy Kassebaum, all by herself, would be fully capable of dispatching the responsibilities of the Ambassador to Japan. Really, as we always say, the Senator from North Carolina and I, because of our responsibilities on the Foreign Relations Committee and confirming all Ambassadors—we always say the spouse of the nominee is someone who makes a sacrifice as well as who makes a contribution. It is almost always true, in some cases more than others.

This is a combination of political leadership, diplomacy, knowledge, and access—access to the corridors of power in the White House—that I think is unparalleled.

I join with my colleagues in saying that Howard Baker is a fine choice. More than that, he is a truly fine man.

As I said this morning, he and I have been on opposite sides of things—more together than on opposite sides—but I truly consider him a friend. It is presumptuous of me to say of a man of his stature that I am a friend. He was a man of consequence long before I arrived. I don't mean to be presumptuous in saying we are close friends. We are different in generations and different in age. But we are friends. I admire him. I admire him very much, and I compliment the President.

I will close with what I have always thought to be and I believe to be an old Anglo-Saxon expression. It says: Character is little more than the lengthened shadow of a man.

Howard Baker casts a very long shadow. He has great character. He will serve this Nation well at what I believe to be the single most critical time in U.S.-Japanese and U.S.-Asian affairs since the end of World War II. Words matter; Howard Baker chooses his well, and I know of no place more than Japan where words, decorum, and diplomacy matter more.

No better choice could be made. I compliment the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Let me commend President Bush on his appointment of former Senator Howard Baker as the Ambassador to Japan. I guess, since we came to the Senate together, I know him about as well as any. I have traveled with him. I have seen him in action on trips. I have his photography in my home. I visited in his home at Huntsville, TN, with his former wife Joy and, since he lost Joy, he is now married to our great friend and distinguished former Senator from Kansas, Nancy Kassebaum.

They are a wonderful family, Nancy's son, daughter-in-law, the grandchildren. They are right down there in my hometown of Charleston, so I get to see them fortunately from time to time.

There is an old wag about coming to the Senate. You wonder how in the world, when you first get here, you got into this exclusive body. Then after a couple of years, you lose all humility and you wonder how the rest of them got here.

You observe them. Everyone here has a talent, all of high intellect and experience or they would not have been selected by their several States.

But what I really look for is that judgment. There is no question, more than a balanced budget we need balanced Senators around here, and that was Howard Baker. When I ran for President, I know no one remembers that—

Mr. BIDEN. I do.

Mr. HOLLINGS. You and I were out there together—to be forgotten.

We were asked that question, when you get along to a stage in your campaign, who would you select as Secretary of State? This is back in the early 1980s. And I said Howard Baker because of his sense of history, his capacity for reasoned judgment, and his intellect. He knows the world. He knows Japan. He knows our defense needs, our security needs in the Pacific rim, our trade problems and opportunities there and everything else.

Since others are here and ready and I take it we are ready to vote, let me simply say I am enthused about this particular appointment. I think the country is very fortunate to have him as our Ambassador.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I yield the remainder of the time.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Will the chairman allow me to say one short thing?

Mr. HELMS. I defer the question.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I just wanted to say as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, to the chairman and my ranking member, as a new Member, I was quite struck today at the testimony taken with regard to Senator Baker.

First of all, I saw the deep respect that Senator BIDEN and Senator HELMS had for him. And then I heard the testimony from Senator Dole as well, and Senator BYRD.

What struck me was Senator BIDEN's words, when he referred to Senator Baker as a man of the Senate. Before I came here, I would not have known the depth of feeling in that statement. But as I have had the privilege of getting to know all of you, and to interact with you on a daily basis, I now understand the respect that you accorded to Senator Baker by referring to him as a man of the Senate: Someone whose word can be counted on; someone who has principles; someone whose sense of integrity other people recognize. Isn't that what we need in our Government these days?

So it is with a feeling of great privilege that, as a new Senator, I join with all of you supporting Senator Baker to be our Ambassador to this very important country, to further the interests of the United States of America.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I renew my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having expired, the question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Howard H. Baker, Jr., of Tennessee, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Japan?

The yeas have and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. ENSIGN) is necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

NOT VOTING—1

Ensign

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President shall be immediately notified of the Senate's action.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will now return to legislative session.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, MAY 24, 2001

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 10 a.m. on Thursday, May 24. I further ask consent that on Thursday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin a period of morning business with Senators speaking therein for up to 5 minutes each, with the following exceptions: Senator THOMAS, or his designee, from 10 a.m. to 10:45 a.m., and Senator DURBIN, or his designee, from 10:45 to 11:30 a.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, the Senate will be in a period of morning business beginning at 10 a.m. tomorrow. Senators should be aware that votes may occur during tomorrow afternoon's session and throughout the remainder of the week. The Senate may consider the conference report to accompany the reconciliation bill and any executive or legislative items available for action prior to the Memorial Day recess.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:57 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, May 24, 2001, at 10 a.m.

HOWARD H. BAKER, JR., OF TENNESSEE, TO BE AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA TO JAPAN.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, May 23, 2001

The House met at 10 a.m.

His Holiness Karekin II, Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of all Armenians, Etchmiadzin, Armenia, offered the following prayer:

Almighty Lord and God, light to all nations, help us walk in Your light to advance the cause of freedom and human dignity in America, where democracy has grown strong over two centuries, and in Armenia, a new republic with strong hopes, and to make wise decisions of law on behalf of real people and real pain.

Lord, bless the American people and their servants who bear the privilege and burden of leadership. Also bless the Armenian people who are celebrating the 1700th anniversary of their ancestors' proclamation of Christianity as a state religion in Armenia. Unite the diverse peoples of the world into one sacred family, that we might share our stories and dreams in Your Holy Name.

For to You is glory, power, and honor, always and unto the ages of ages. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. GIBBONS led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a bill and concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1727. An act to amend the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 to provide for consistent treatment of survivor benefits for public safety officers killed in the line of duty.

H. Con. Res. 76. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the East Front of the Capitol Grounds for performances sponsored by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

H. Con. Res. 79. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the Greater Washington Soap Box Derby.

H. Con. Res. 87. Concurrent resolution authorizing the 2001 District of Columbia Special Olympics Law Enforcement Torch Run to be run through the Capitol Grounds.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed concurrent resolutions of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 40. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress regarding the designation of the week of May 20, 2001, as "National Emergency Medical Services Week".

S. Con. Res. 41. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the National Book Festival.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 105-292, as amended by Public Law 106-55, the Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore, upon the recommendation of the Majority Leader, reappoints Michael K. Young, of Washington, D.C., to the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom.

The message also announced that pursuant to Public Law 106-554, the Chair, on behalf of the President pro tempore and upon the recommendation of the Democratic Leader, appoints the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY) to the Board of Directors of the Vietnam Education Foundation.

WELCOME TO HIS HOLINESS KAREKIN II

(Mr. KNOLLENBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to come to the floor today and help welcome His Holiness Karekin II, the Supreme Patriarch and Catholicos of all Armenians. Welcome to the U.S. House of Representatives.

I thank His Holiness for offering such a wonderful prayer. I also want to thank the House chaplain for allowing the opportunity to celebrate this very special occasion.

His Holiness Karekin II is the 132nd in a continuous line of pontiffs of the Armenian Church dating back to the 4th century. As the chief shepherd of the world's 7 million Apostolic Christians, Catholicos Karekin II administers the Armenian Church from the Mother See of Holy Etchmiadzin located in the Republic of Armenia.

This year marks the 1700th anniversary of Armenia's conversion to Christianity. Armenians throughout America have waited with great anticipation for this special visit in celebration of this extraordinary anniversary.

Mr. Speaker, I join all Armenian Americans and Armenian supporters throughout the United States in thanking His Holiness for making this trip to America and being with us here today.

ARMENIA'S 1700TH ANNIVERSARY OF PROCLAIMING CHRISTIANITY AS OFFICIAL RELIGION

(Mr. PALLONE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I also would like to thank His Holiness Karekin II for providing this morning's prayer and for helping this House celebrate the 1700th anniversary of the world's first Christian nation, Armenia. It was 1700 years ago that the leader of the Kingdom of Armenia, the pagan King Drtad III, was baptized as a Christian and made the historic decision to proclaim Christianity as the official religion of the Armenian kingdom. It is the anniversary of this event that brings His Holiness to the United States this month.

I will be fortunate to join him at what should be one of the largest gatherings of Armenian Americans in New York City's Central Park this upcoming Memorial Day weekend.

His Holiness will also be the honored guest at an ecumenical prayer service next week at the National Shrine of the Immaculate Conception here in Washington.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank His Holiness for gracing this House with his presence this morning and for making this trip to the United States. It not only means a lot to me but to the millions of diaspora Armenians and Americans of other faiths who will have the opportunity to hear his words during this visit.

A CHILD'S SUCCESS IS DEPENDENT ON ABILITY TO READ

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, a child's success in school and, indeed, in life is dependent upon his or her ability to read. Unfortunately, reading scores in most States have remained flat or even dropped over the last 8 years, and the reading achievement gap between white students and minority students has widened even further.

These disappointing results are yet more evidence that simply spending more money on education does not necessarily improve student achievement.

President Bush's Reading First Initiative gives States both the funds and the tools they need to eliminate the reading deficit. It focuses on effective proven methods of reading instruction based on proven scientific research.

Research continues to show that reading failure has devastating effects on self-esteem, social development, and opportunities for advanced education and meaningful employment. By funding effective reading instruction programs, President Bush's plan, H.R. 1, ensures that more children will receive the help they need before they fall further behind.

CHINA SHOULD OPEN DIALOGUE WITH TIBET

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, Monday evening a bipartisan group of us went to New York to welcome the democratically-elected President of Taiwan Chen Shui-Bian. What a joy it was to see the leader of a country that was destitute and dictatorial just a few decades ago, and it is now a political democracy and one of the most successful economies on the face of this planet.

This morning, Mr. Speaker, I welcome on behalf of scores of our colleagues across both sides of this aisle His Holiness the Dhalī Lama, a man of remarkable moral authority, who speaks truth to power. I call on the Chinese Government in Beijing to begin a dialogue with this great leader so that the Tibetan people at long last can live, preserving their cultural and religious heritage.

The Dhalī Lama honors us with his presence and all of us in this body are delighted to welcome him to the United States.

FATHER EMIL KAPAUN, A TRUE AMERICAN HERO

(Mr. TIAHRT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a true American hero, a priest, soldier and POW, Chaplain Emil Kapaun. Today, we remember that 50 years ago Father Kapaun died in a Communist POW camp during the Korean war.

A chaplain in the United States Army's Eighth Cavalry Regiment, Father Kapaun and his unit found themselves in a perilous situation on the Korean battlefield. A wounded soldier lay completely exposed and could not be accessed because of intense machine gun and small arms fire.

With total disregard for his personal safety, Father Kapaun went after the wounded man and successfully evacuated him, saving his life. Later, captured and as a prisoner of war, Father Kapaun continued to minister to his flock of fellow POWs. He encouraged and inspired others by his peaceful, courageous demeanor. He continually risked his health and life by giving all he had to his fellow soldiers.

Ultimately, these acts of selflessness contributed to his own untimely death.

So today on the 50th anniversary of his death, we honor his courage and reflect on the heroism and the spiritual devotion of this great man.

WITHOUT GOD HONORED BY OUR NATION, EVEN THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE WILL NOT SAVE US

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Arizona public schools will begin each day by reciting the Declaration of Independence. I applaud Arizona, but it is not enough.

America was founded on religious freedom, guaranteeing that there would not be one state-sponsored religion, but the Founders never intended to outlaw, to prohibit and to kill school prayer.

The Declaration of Independence was drafted to ensure rights, not to limit rights. All schools in America should have the right to allow school prayer if they should choose to do so, period. And America, without God, will not be saved by the Declaration of Independence.

I yield back the rape, murder, drugs, guns, and violence in America's schools.

MILLIONS IN AMERICA SUFFER FROM BLINDNESS

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, over 1 million Americans are legally blind and 80 million Americans are at risk for developing diseases that potentially can cause blindness. Currently, more than 6 million Americans suffer from retinal degenerative diseases. In my State of Florida, an estimated 1 million people are affected by these problems.

My constituents, Ilana Lidsky and her husband Patrick McGuinn, have traveled to our Nation's Capitol today to learn about recent gene therapy that has actually given sight to Lancelot, a Briard dog born with a blinding genetic mutation. This recent National Eye Institute-supported research that has given sight to Lancelot holds promise for children born blind and for persons like Ilana and her siblings who suffer from retinitis pigmentosa, a disease that may lead to blindness.

□ 1015

Today, eye and vision disorders cost society $38 billion every year, and this cost will escalate unless existing research opportunities are vigorously pursued.

The Alliance for Eye and Vision Research and the Foundation Fighting Blindness are to be congratulated for their gene therapy research that will soon find a cure for blindness.

IN HONOR OF CAPTAIN G. RUSSELL BROWN

(Mr. CROWLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize Captain G. Russell Brown, a native of Astoria, Queens, New York. After almost 40 years of service, Captain Brown is retiring from serving our Nation in the United States Navy. During the course of his career, Captain Brown has been willing to make tremendous sacrifices for his country. He has given his life to service of his country in our Navy.

He entered the Navy in 1962 and began to work at the Hospital Corps School 2 years later. He served our Nation in Vietnam and after his return, he served posts in the Navy throughout the world. During the last 30 years, Captain Brown has served in California, Germany, Italy and Midway Island. Throughout that entire time, he has always been willing to sacrifice for his country.

Captain Brown, along with his wife, the former Gillian Ann Collett of Reading, England, has 2 daughters, Rebecca Evelyn and Heather Ann.

On behalf of the people he has served for so many years, I would like to thank him for his service to our Navy and our country. I would also like to offer his family the best of luck as he moves into life outside of our Armed Forces.

PEACE AND PROSPERITY FOR INDONESIA

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to urge the government of Indonesia to ensure that the roots of democracy are firmly established so the Indonesian people can enjoy peace and prosperity now and in the future. President Wahid should be commended for the steps he has taken to help build a foundation for democracy, and other leaders in Indonesia should be encouraged to build on that foundation.

Unfortunately, there are individuals and organizations who desire to foment violence, bloodshed and destruction in communities in the Malukus, Aceh, Irian Jaya, Padang and other regions. I urge the government of Indonesia to bring to justice those responsible for recent and past criminal attacks against the Indonesian people and to assure that those criminal leaders are prosecuted, especially Malaskar Jihad, who committed violence against Muslims and Christians in the Malukus.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the government of Indonesia to ensure that perpetrators of crime in Indonesia are punished for their crimes and brought to justice.

ENERGY CRISIS LOOMS AS REPUBLICAN ADMINISTRATION DOES NOTHING

(Mr. McDERMOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, we are today, I think, at about the 120th day of the Republican energy follies play in this House.

When the President became President in January, everybody knew there was a crisis in California and on the West Coast generally. We met with the Vice President, who has been appointed as the Energy Czar, and explained the problems. Republicans and Democrats sat with him. The Vice President looked us in the eye and said, this is not a national problem, this is a State problem. We are not going to do anything.

Now, they have come out with a sort of weak, namby-pamby plan for energy that is going to go on 10 years from now, but does not deal with the crisis now.

The Senate has now entered the stage, stage left or stage right, if you will. They have come on the stage and they have said, we are going to pass tax cuts. The President says we need those tax cuts because we have the energy crisis. What they mean is, we are going to reduce the taxes so that people can pay more to energy companies.

Mr. Speaker, it is wrong. We should stop them.

NOMINATION OF TED OLSON SHOULD PROCEED WITHOUT DELAY

(Mr. BARR of Georgia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, just as with Robert Bork, Clarence

Thomas and most recently John Ashcroft, Washington's blood sport of lies, rumors and innuendo is in full throttle.

Aided by their liberal friends at The Washington Post, many Democrats have, once again, cast the truth aside and are focused on destroying the name and reputation of a fine American. In their eyes, Solicitor General nominee Ted Olson is guilty of one thing: He is conservative. The fact that he is perhaps the most qualified and well-respected individual ever nominated for this important post becomes irrelevant. His attackers are intent on punishing Ted Olson for his work on the Florida recount case, on destroying the spirit of bipartisanship promoted by President Bush, and on regaining the majority in Congress through fear and intimidation. They must not succeed.

Mr. Speaker, the American people deserve to have a Justice Department that they can trust to faithfully execute and uphold the laws of the land. We need men like John Ashcroft and Ted Olson to revitalize and restore the luster to this most important department. Let us call off the attack, calm the waters and allow the nomination of this fine American citizen to proceed without delay.

THE NORTHERN MARIANAS DELEGATE ACT

(Mr. UNDERWOOD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the House prides itself on being the House of the people and all of the people, and, indeed, all Americans are represented here, most fully through representatives, some 435, and the rest, somewhat, through delegates, numbering five. But there is one group of Americans that is not represented at all, and those are the people of the Northern Marianas.

Today, I am reintroducing the Northern Marianas Delegate Act, an Act to provide for a nonvoting delegate to the House of Representatives to represent the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas. It is important that the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas be accorded representation in Congress, not just for fair and just representation of an American community, whose interests are directly affected by the actions of Congress, but more importantly, for what the people of the CNMI can contribute to the Nation through their delegate. A delegate for the Northern Marianas will advance their cause and work to resolve situations and conditions as they develop, not subsequently.

We should leave no other citizens behind or alienate them from a law-making and policymaking process. Perpetual denial of a delegate for the CNMI is a denial of the basic right to represent oneself.

THE TIME IS NOT FOR PARTISAN SNIPING

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, liberal extremists in Washington want to adopt the California approach on energy and make it national policy. That is kind of a head-in-the-sand approach. They do not like coal, they do not like oil, they do not like nuclear power. They want everybody to be driving cars that have windmills on top of them or something like that. I am not exactly sure where their reality lands.

But the reality is, in California, demand for energy exploded over 30 percent, and yet they would not allow new power plants to be built. As a result, they had the same pollution-causing, outdated power plants now owned by the government. Well, does that not make us feel comfortable?

Mr. Speaker, the time is not for partisan sniping. The time is to say, gee whiz, maybe California did make some mistakes. It is probably not good to model national policy after them. Let us be realistic. We do need alternative energy sources. We do need research. We do need conservation. But guess what? We cannot get off of oil tomorrow. We have to keep refineries open.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Democrats will join the Bush administration in looking for a solution.

TRIBUTE TO RICHARD ROMERO

(Mr. BACA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor an individual, a friend, and pay tribute to the late Richard Romero from the Inland Empire, a businessman, a philanthropist, a dreamer, a community leader. Richard was a pillar of the Inland Empire. From his humble beginning in New Mexico, Richard received great success in business and in life, but Richard's greatest satisfaction came from helping others.

Recently I talked to his wife, and she said that one of the most important things about Richard was that he cared about people in the community. He felt that it was important for people to learn about reading, writing and arithmetic. Richard touched the lives of many individuals in the community by giving unselfishly.

He rescued the University of Laverne from the brink of extinction; he turned it around and helped the University of Laverne in southern California. I know, because my son will be graduating from Laverne University on Saturday of this week, and I want to thank Richard for taking the leadership and helping the University of Laverne, a private institution.

Mr. Speaker, Richard Romero reached out and touched the lives of many individuals in the Inland Empire, contributing to a variety of programs to support education of the disadvantaged. Many times he had events at his dealership. He continued to do that. The Romero dealership continues to provide scholarships for students. The Romero family is here, his son, R.J. Romero is here, and I am sure that they will continue the same tradition to improve the quality of life for all Americans.

INACTIVITY OF BUSH ADMINISTRATION WORSENS ENERGY CRISIS IN CALIFORNIA

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON) had it exactly wrong. The fact of the matter is that in California, we are using less energy than we did in 1998. In 1998, we paid $7 billion for that energy and today, we are paying 70, 7-0, $70 billion, ten times as much. Why? Because the Bush administration refuses to tell the Federal Energy Commission to enforce the Federal law for just and reasonable wholesale prices.

So the people of California who have an energy shortage because of a bad deregulation plan, because we have not built as many generators as we should, and because of a drought in the northwest, are now open to price gouging and profiteering by the energy companies.

The Federal Energy Commission has made that finding. It is not my finding, it is their finding, that these prices are not just and reasonable, but they refuse to enforce the law to put caps on at a just and reasonable price so that the energy companies will get their 15 or 20 percent return. They simply will not get to continue to gouge the people of California, the small businesses, the large businesses, people in hospitals who are having the lights go out, their life support systems turned off because of the Bush administration's inaction.

MORE FLEXIBILITY FOR SCHOOL DISTRICTS

(Mr. HOEKSTRA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, technology can be a powerful means of increasing student achievement. State and local school districts are already experimenting with promising technology programs from on-line research services to distance learning initiatives. Such innovations, telecommunications and information technology programs at school libraries, for example, should be encouraged and bolstered by Federal funding.

One of the things that we know is that school districts need flexibility. Later on today as we consider the President's education plan, I will offer an amendment to allow school districts more flexibility to move money between programs. One of the programs that they will be able to move more money into is the technology area.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that my colleagues will support this flexibility for our local school districts.

ELECTION REFORM IS A PRIORITY FOR AMERICANS

(Ms. BROWN of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, election reform is a priority for the American people and it should be a priority for this Congress. We should never forget that 180,000 uncounted ballots were cast in Florida last November. Florida has not forgotten.

Unfortunately, election reform is not a priority with the Bush administration. The President's administration has shown no interest whatsoever in the issue of election reform. In fact, the budget that President Bush submitted to Congress provided no funds whatsoever to help States update their voting equipment.

We send people all over the world to monitor elections. If this Congress fails to act on election reform, we will forever lose our standing as the world democracy. Shame on us, Mr. Speaker.

A CONTINUING ENERGY CRISIS

(Mr. EHLERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the energy issue we have before us. Remember back in 1973, when we had long lines at gas pumps? People were very upset. We engaged in a desperate effort to reduce our energy consumption and to do a better job of using our resources, but once the crisis was over, we forgot about it. Today we are facing a similar situation. If we do not get control of it, once again we will have long gas lines and high prices.

It is very important for us to remember a few things. Let me just speak as a physicist for a moment.

Energy is hard to understand. It is intangible. We cannot see or touch it. But two important things we have to remember throughout this crisis.

Number 1, energy is our most basic natural resource. Without energy, we cannot use any other natural resource. We cannot dig iron or copper out of the ground. We cannot smelt it or fabricate it unless we have energy. Energy is crucial to our economy.

The second major point to remember is that energy is our only non-recyclable resource. We must conserve energy. Once we use it, it is gone. We cannot consume all our resources and just assume the problem will go away.

SUPPORTING AMENDMENTS TO RESTORE FLEXIBILITY PORTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT'S EDUCATION PLAN

(Mr. SCHAFFER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, in just a few minutes the House will bring back up H.R. 1, the House version of the education proposal that was originally proposed by our President. In this document, Leave No Child Behind, it is a good document that the President proposed, a good balance with respect to how we should reform our schools for America.

What the President proposed was school choice, the hallmark of the Republican message on education, and also flexibility, and also, additional testing mandates. All that is left in the bill, however, at this point, as the House considers it, is really the testing mandates and some additional spending.

But today we have a unique opportunity here on the floor. That is to restore the core portions of the President's bill that have been taken out prior to the bill's arrival here on the House floor. We will have a chance to vote on amendments to allow children trapped in failing schools to escape those schools and go to institutions that offer more promise and opportunity, and we will have an opportunity to vote on a few amendments that restore some of the flexibility portions that the President had originally proposed.

I hope those amendments pass, because if we fail to add those important amendments back to the President's plan, we will have delivered him a substantive defeat. I am hopeful that Republicans can pull together and deliver our President the victory he deserves.

NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND ACT OF 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). Pursuant to House Resolution 143 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 1.

□ 1033

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to close the achievement gap with accountability, flexibility, and choice, so that no child is left behind, with Mr. HASTINGS of Washington in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Tuesday, May 22, 2001, amendment No. 9 printed in House Report 107-69 offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TIBERI) had been disposed of.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 10 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 10 OFFERED BY MR. HOEKSTRA

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the rule, I offer amendment No. 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 10 offered by Mr. HOEKSTRA:

In section 701 of the bill, in subparagraph (A) of section 7203(b)(1) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 701), strike "may transfer" and all that follows through the end of such subparagraph and insert the following:

may transfer—

"(i) not more than 50 percent of the funds allocated to it under each of the provisions listed in paragraph (2) for a fiscal year to 1 or more of its allocations for such fiscal year under any other provision listed in paragraph (2); or

"(ii) not more than 75 percent of the funds allocated to it under each of the provisions listed in paragraph (2) for a fiscal year to 1 or more of its allocations for such fiscal year under any other provision listed in paragraph (2), if the local educational agency obtains State approval before making such transfer.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) and a Member opposed will each control 10 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise not claimed in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Currently, H.R. 1 gives local school districts a new opportunity to use some of their Federal funds in a way that will benefit their students. This transferability option will allow school districts to transfer up to 50 percent of the money they receive from four Federal programs, grant programs. They can move these monies between the programs or into Title I.

This is an important step forward in giving local education officials, those who know the names of their students, the ability to spend Federal funds the way they believe will improve student achievement, not the way a bureaucratic in Washington tells them to.

Transferability is a positive way to give school districts some flexibility in how they spend their money. I believe that we should go even further. That is why I have offered this amendment. This amendment will allow a school district to go above the current 50 percent gap and give them the option to transfer up to 75 percent of their Federal formula grant funds between programs if they receive approval from their States.

I hope my colleagues will agree that this is an important step forward in flexibility, and I encourage them to support this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. This legislation and this bipartisan agreement, and it is bipartisan reporting from the committee, takes an unprecedented step in expanding the transferability at the local level so that local school districts can make a determination about the application of those resources.

But this legislation also understands that these programs are not about some Washington bureaucrat. These programs are about the Congress of the United States saying these are areas that we believe there should be an important commitment of resources: safe and drug-free schools, teacher quality improvement, innovative strategies and technology.

These are articulations of the congressional will on a bipartisan basis certainly over the last 10 or 15 years that these are either emerging areas that need attention and the Federal dollars ought to be applied there, because there are areas where there are deficits, but at the same time in this legislation we have taken the unprecedented step to say that we can have transferability of 50 percent of the money, because in some instances it makes sense to allow them to double up the resources on a short-term basis to improve the quality of teachers, or to purchase technology so they can ramp it up and get it running and get on their way.

But the Hoekstra amendment is simply an amendment that goes too far. It is violative of the bipartisan agreement we have. It is violative of the vote in the committee reporting this to the floor. It recognizes the tension between a full-blown block grant and the notion that we ought to have improved flexibility at the local level.

That is what we decided on doing. That is what we decided on as a committee to do, to see whether or not over the next 5 years we could see how this transferability takes place.

We ought to honor that agreement. It is a rational agreement and makes sense. It also keeps faith with the congressional priorities that this Congress has determined we ought to be using Federal dollars for in the poorest schools with the poorest performing children, because, after all, that is a program that we have before us today to help make up those deficits in teacher qualifications in the poorer schools, in lacking technology in the poorer schools.

I would hope that the Congress and the House would stay with the bipartisan agreement that we have.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, let me thank my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, for offering the amendment. I do understand the concern of some on each side of the aisle over giving local districts more flexibility, but let us go and look at why we have this in the bill today.

As was pointed out, we make sure that the money gets to the schools under the targeting that is already in the bill. Then we make sure that under Title I, which is the largest chunk of money, that we could transfer money into title 1 but could not transfer any money out of it.

Secondly, we also wall off, under the current bill, the bilingual education money and programs. So we are talking about basically four funding streams that we are giving local districts, every local district, the opportunity to move at least half of the money in those four funding streams between programs or into Title I.

The amendment before us says, let us allow a local district to transfer up to 75 percent of the funds, again, just among those four funding streams. Why do we want to give districts this flexibility? Because we have teacher and professional development monies, we have technology money, we have an innovative grant program, and we have to spend the money today in those particular funding streams.

Under the 50 percent local flexibility, we have some ability to transfer, but I think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan is a good one. It says we can do 75 percent. Why is this good? Because let us say that we want to put computers in every classroom, so we can take the technology money and do that, but if we do not have teachers who are equipped to teach their students how to use the computers, maybe the first step ought to be to do the teacher training and the professional development.

What in fact that would do, we might want to be able to transfer money out of technology into the teacher training part to make sure that they are trained before we get the equipment. This kind of local flexibility we think will produce much better results.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), the ranking member of the subcommittee.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment would cross the line between preserving focused educational priorities and eliminating national areas of need. I ask Members to oppose it.

Currently, this bipartisan bill allows school districts to transfer up to 50 percent of a program's allocation. This maintains the bipartisan priorities identified in the ESEA. By allowing transfers of 75 percent, the significant focus on the areas of school safety, teacher quality, and technology will be diluted.

Mr. Chairman, the bill's current provisions allowing for a 50 percent transfer from a program strikes the right balance between flexibility and accountability. I would urge Members to reject this amendment. We have worked very, very carefully, and this is a very important part of the bipartisan agreement. I would urge Members to recognize that. This 75 percent amendment really, to my mind, violates the bipartisan effort that we have put into this bill.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFER).

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I appreciate the debate that is taking place on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. Of course, this amendment really addresses a small part of the bill that provides a little bit of flexibility to school districts.

Now, the President and his plan, Leave No Child Behind Act of 2001, proposed something much bigger. He said that what he had suggested was that under his program, States and districts would be free from categorical program requirements in return for submitting 5-year performance agreements.

This portion of the President's plan, of course, has been left out of the bill. But what we have instead is a portion that allows a tiny little bit of Federal funds to be transferred between some programs at the district level, and in those programs, only 50 percent of the dollars that are allocated, just 50 percent.

This does not include Title I, which is where the real money is in Federal funds back to States. So we are really talking here, Mr. Chairman, about probably 1 percent or less of the dollars that go to local districts, and we are having a debate over whether they should be able to shift 50 percent of that tiny percentage, or, as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) has proposed in his amendment, 75 percent.

This is a debate about minutiae, frankly, but it is a good debate because it is a small step in the right direction. But the tenor of the debate I think speaks volumes about why so much of the President's bill has been left behind here on the floor, because as my colleague, the gentleman from California, stated in his arguments against the amendment, he said this was a bad amendment because it violates the bipartisan agreement that we have here between Republicans and Democrats.

So we define the merits of the legislation based on which group of politicians have agreed to the underlying bill that is before us. If the amendment violates this agreement among politicians, then it is a bad amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment benefits children. At some point during today's debate, we ought to think about them. I have to tell the Members, my friends back home in Colorado, school board administrators and others, they do not care whether there is an agreement between politicians, what they want is the flexibility to spend dollars on the priorities that help kids. That is what this amendment does, and why I ask for its adoption.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), chairman of the subcommittee.

□ 1045

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for yielding the time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant but very strong opposition to this amendment. This legislation as it stands right now with the amendments in it has as much flexibility as one could possibly handle probably for years to come.

In addition to the education flexibility that we passed last year, we have great consolidation of a lot of the programs that exist at the Federal level into one block grant-type program.

We do have the local Straight A's or the local flexibility, if you will, which allows each district without permission from anybody to transfer up to 50 percent of their funds as long as it is not in title I. They can transfer into title I all of the Federal funds; that is tremendous flexibility. That is the best we can possibly do with respect to that.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TIBERI) and I had an amendment yesterday which passed which allows 100 school districts to apply to the Secretary to waive statutory requirements and consolidate certain program funds at the local level.

This is unprecedented flexibility. The problem with going from 50 percent to 75 percent is that this percentage, the original percentage reflects our shared desire to ensure that the funds that we have remain available to some extent to carry out the program requirements as they are not waived by the flexibility program.

Mr. Chairman, I am just afraid if we go above 50 percent, it is going to be impossible to do this. So I believe that with all the flexibility that has been entered into this legislation, and it really truly is unprecedented, that we have gone far enough.

I am reluctant to oppose it, because of the distinguished record of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) sponsoring it, but the bottom line is that the flexibility is there, it is what we should do. I would encourage all of us to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I especially thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, for his support of this amendment and his yeoman's efforts in this education bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today as a proud member of "HOEKSTRA's heroes," a band of my colleagues who over the past several days have rallied around the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) and his heroic effort to preserve the vision of State and local control of education in America.

It is said that without a vision, the people perish. And the vision of Washington, D.C., the vision of the founders of this country was a vision of limited government that left things like education to those who could govern best at the State level.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will allow local school districts to transfer more funds to specific programs and better utilize their resources for the benefits of students. Let me repeat that, this marginal increase in transferability is for the benefit of students. By increasing the transferability cap, this body permits Federal dollars to be targeted to the areas that most help students.

Mr. Chairman, the people of east central Indiana did not send me to Washington, D.C. to increase the Federal Government's role over education or education resources. They sent me to help students by promoting innovation and reform.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment will help us modestly innovate and reform by raising the transferability cap; and I urge my colleagues, all of my fellow HOEKSTRA heroes, and all Hoekstra hero "wannabes" on both sides of the aisle to support this fine amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), my friend, for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment. The amendment makes a modest quantitative change but a significant and negative qualitative change.

First of all, we ought to remind ourselves that States and localities can do whatever they see fit with 100 percent of their State and local money, 100 percent. This is about the very small amount of money that comes to local school districts from the Federal budget.

We are in the process of collectively making a judgment about some spending priorities that help children. We believe it helps children to encourage school districts to spend money on the latest technology so there are computers in classrooms.

We believe it helps children to bring police officers and teachers together to teach children the evils and dangers of drugs and alcohol under the safe and drug free schools section.

We believe it helps children to afford teachers the opportunity to retool and relearn their craft on a regular basis, and we believe it helps children to find some extra money for the unusual and innovative ideas that usually do not find its way into the regular school budget.

We believe that each one of those things ought to be done with at least 50 percent, at least 50 percent of the very modest amount of Federal money that is being sent to local school districts. If you reduce that 50 percent to 25 percent, I believe you reduce these priorities to the point of dilution. You reduce them to the point where nothing really gets done in these four important areas at all.

Mr. Chairman, I fully embrace and support the right of local school districts to spend their own money, raised through their own taxing authorities completely as they see fit, subject to the laws and constitutional provisions that they must live under, but I think that when we make a national judgment about the importance of technology, of teacher training, of safe and drug free schools and of innovative strategies, we ought to stick to it.

This amendment does not do that. It should be defeated.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, when the President came to Washington, he announced a bold plan, a bold plan to reform education, by giving more flexibility to the States, by holding the schools accountable for results and by empowering parents.

Over the last 3 months, that plan has slowly been whittled away. Much of the flexibility that the President had envisioned for States to target their spending towards the needs of their kids is gone.

This amendment is an attempt to give the States and local school districts just a little bit more flexibility for that 1 percent of their money that comes to their local school districts.

Parental empowerment is basically gone.

Accountability, it is interesting the President's plan said we are going to get rid of process accountability. We are going to move away from these categorical programs that tell school districts exactly what to do with every Federal dollar and then audits them to make sure that the dollars are spent for each of these programs creating a huge bureaucratic and programmatic nightmare.

He said we are going to come back and we are going to focus not on process accountability, but we are going to focus on results accountability; move away from process accountability, go to results accountability. Let us test whether our kids are actually going to be able to read and to do math. The process accountability has stayed alive. The bureaucracy has won on all of those counts. School districts will be given money. They will be told how to spend it, and now they will also have the results accountability.

We will now be telling school districts what to do and exactly what results they will be expected to achieve, and if they do not achieve those results, here is what will happen.

It is all laid out in the bill. It is all very clear. This ends up being the most significant takeover of our local schools since the creation of the Department of Education.

It is disappointing that we do not trust the individuals who know the names of our kids to do what is best for our children. Go to your local school districts. I spent a tremendous amount of time in school districts in my hometown, my district and around the country, and if there is one impassioned plea that you consistently hear, it is free us from the bureaucracy, free us from the paperwork, free us from the mandates so that instead of focusing on Washington and what you are telling us to do, we can focus on the needs of our kids.

This amendment is just one small step in trying to bring some more freedom to the folks who know our kids' needs, but, more importantly, they know our kids' names and they can bring those things together.

There is such a tremendous diversity in the needs of our children and the needs of our school districts that we ought to trust our local school officials to do the right things, to trust our State officials. They do not need another Federal mandate.

As a matter of fact, they have a Federal mandate that comes into effect in 2001 on testing. We are throwing that out, putting a massive new mandate in place. Let us trust the folks back home to do the right thing with a small portion of this money.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Chairman, I was proud to stand with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) to oppose additional Federal mandates yesterday, and it is a value that we share.

This debate that we are having today, I agree with the gentleman and the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAEFFER) that this should not be about agreements between politicians. It should be about learning. This debate should be about priorities.

This debate should be about responsibility. We have a responsibility to bring the best learning we can to our school children, and we have a responsibility to spend tax dollars wisely. We have a responsibility to bring focus priorities to these programs that we are talking about: school safety, teacher quality and class size reduction, school technology.

These are important priorities that we have set at a national level, and we have agreed to reduce bureaucracy and to increase transferability to the 50 percent mark. But why not raise it to 75 percent? Why not raise it to 100 percent?

I believe the answer is we should not raise it to 100 percent; and it is, I admit, a difficult matter to set where the line should be, but as we negotiate these lines and move them toward the 100 percent, I believe that we abdicate responsibility. Our responsibility is to spend tax dollars wisely and to focus on efforts that help our school children.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman that we need to give local flexibility; and we have set the right amount in this bill. I oppose the Hoekstra amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote; and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 11 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 11 OFFERED BY MRS. MEEK OF FLORIDA

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 11 offered by Mrs. MEEK of Florida:

In section 501 of the bill, in section 5501(1) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), strike "adult".

In section 501 of the bill, in section 5502(1) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), strike "adult" and insert "individual".

In section 501 of the bill, in section 5503(a)(1) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), after "responsible adults" insert "or students in secondary school".

In section 501 of the bill, in section 5503(c)(1)(C) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), strike "adult".

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time not otherwise taken in opposition to this.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER)?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment seeks to make a small, modest change to the Osborne Mentoring Program so that both adults and qualified, trained and motivated high school students can become mentors.

During the Committee on Education and the Workforce's consideration of H.R. 1, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE) offered a noncontroversial amendment which the committee adopted by voice vote that established a mentoring program.

I commend the initiative of the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

His program is well-intended and also well designed. Presently this bill only allows adults to be mentors.

My amendment seeks to make a modest change so that qualified, trained and motivated high school students can also become mentors.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make it very clear that neither the Osborne Mentoring Program or my amendment would require that local educational agencies offer mentoring programs.

□ 1100

This is strictly an option that the school district can or cannot take. Like the bill, my amendment would preserve local option. Local school districts would have the choice whether or not to start a mentoring program.

When the mentor is an older student, not too far in age from the mentee, it appears that this transforming relationship affects both young people. For example, a study recently conducted by Pediatrics Magazine pointed out that the benefits of peer monitoring are very, very good. The researchers compared children who were involved in an inner-city mentoring program with demographically matched children who were not. Mentors were age 14 to 21, while mentees were children 7 to 13.

Both mentees and mentors involved in a community-based peer mentoring program were found to benefit from such interactions by acting with greater maturity and more responsibility in their daily lives.

In my years as a college instructor, I often witnessed the transforming power of peer relationships. Younger students sometimes perceive adults as authority figures who are out of touch or all too ready to preach; whereas, a child may come to confide in his or her slightly-older peer because they perceive their peer to have a greater capacity to understand and identify with what they are going through.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentlewoman from Florida for her amendment to a program that was put in the bill in committee by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

The gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE), as we all know, had a very successful career in winning three national championships during his years as coach of Nebraska. During his years, though, in Nebraska, he was very involved in mentoring programs of many sorts and brought an amendment to the committee and added to this bill a mentoring program that I think will be very helpful to all of the disparate and independent mentoring programs that are going on around the country.

I think the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) is very well done because in many high schools around the country today we have mentoring programs where older young adults in schools are working with their peers. I know in my own local high school at home, they have a peer-counseling program, peer-mentoring program that I think has been very successful. So I would encourage my colleagues to support the gentlewoman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. OSBORNE).

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in favor of the Meek amendment, the mentoring success component of H.R. 1. Traditionally, many mentoring programs involve adults, but there are a great many around the country, as the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) mentioned, that do use secondary school students to work with younger children.

So as the initial introducer of the mentoring component, I certainly support the gentlewoman's amendment, and we hope very much that our colleagues will vote in favor of this amendment. We think it has great merit. We look forward to working with the conference committee to possibly also include younger college-age students in mentoring endeavors.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume and wish to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP).

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) for her willingness to yield to me, and I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to enter a colloquy with the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER). First, I would like to thank the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), as I said, for being willing to yield me time. I would also like to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) for his outstanding leadership on the committee, along with the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), who has worked so hard to bring a good bill to the floor.

The education of our children should be our top priority, which is why we are especially pleased that this bill is truly the result of a bipartisan effort. During the debate, we have discussed at great length the need for standards and improved achievement. However, many of our schools do not have access to research-based reading programs developed by NICHD. This bill includes report language that discusses research-based reading programs. But I do not feel we are doing enough to make sure that our teachers have access to this innovative research.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I would like to have a colloquy with the distinguished gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP), my colleague on the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education of the Committee on Appropriations, who shares my concern and interest in this area.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to yield to the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP).

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Chairman, first of all, let me thank my colleagues who have spent many hours listening to NIH testimony and getting quite an appreciation for the research they have done on reading, and to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), who is my cochair in the Reading Caucus that seeks to bring focus on what reading programs work.

Mr. Chairman, the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education of the Committee on Appropriations on which both the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) and I sit has had a number of discussions about the recommendations of the National Reading Panel, a report compiled by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development and the Department of Education.

The National Reading Panel was charged with conducting a comprehensive review of the evidence-based research on reading and assessing the effectiveness of different approaches. As my colleagues know, NICHD has conducted scientific research and identified the steps required for all children to become effective readers. Armed with that research and knowledge, we now need to take the next step, putting research into practice.

We are pleased that the President's Reading First Initiative has been shaped by the findings of the National Reading Panel. Reading is a fundamental building block of education. That is why it is crucial that our students receive the best reading instruction.

Mr. Chairman, the dismal statistics of illiteracy simply do not have to exist. We are optimistic that with the National Reading Panel's findings as our guide, we can achieve much better results.

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER), I think that this particular program of instituting mentoring into the lives of the children is absolutely essential. The fact that reading has been shown as an extreme good component of this entire spectrum, I welcome the fact that we now see the importance of reading. It also further strengthens the fact that having mentors working with the mentee will be most efficient.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to discuss this important issue with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP), and the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

In April, I visited a demonstration project at Independence Elementary School in Liberty Township, Ohio, which is in my district. Independence Elementary is successfully utilizing the host reading program that promotes the practices recommended by the National Reading Panel and the National Research Council. The HOST model utilizes about 60 mentors, age 16 to 84, to tutor approximately 50 first-through-third graders at the school in one-on-one sessions.

The Ohio Reads program, which is supported by Governor Taft, funds the HOST programs in Ohio. In fact, the Governor and Mrs. Taft both are volunteers for this program, and I think it is a very worthy endeavor. I think that the efforts by the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP), and the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK) are certainly in order.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, there are at least five schools with HOST programs in my district as well, all of which are demonstrating improved results.

We look forward to working with the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) and the President on implementing the recommendations of the National Reading Panel and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) as well.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOYER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say we obviously strongly support the amendment of the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK). On behalf of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT), and myself, we all support the amendment.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Chairman, I hope people can follow how this happened.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 12 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 12 OFFERED BY MR. ROGERS OF MICHIGAN

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 12 offered by Mr. ROGERS of Michigan:

In the matter proposed to be inserted as part E of title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 by section 801 of the bill, insert after section 8520 the following:

"SEC. 8521. ENCOURAGE EDUCATION SAVINGS.

"To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall promote education savings accounts in States that have qualified State tuition programs (as defined in section 529 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986).

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise reserved for the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS).

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, late last year, I was getting ready to address a very dignified group of community leaders. As I was preparing my remarks, I asked my first-grade daughter what she thought I ought to tell these fairly important people. She thought about it for a minute. She looked up. She said, "Dad, you can tell them that I got the best lower case A's in the entire first-grade class." I thought about that a minute, and I tell my colleagues what, Mr. Chairman, I told my very distinguished group that my daughter had the best lower case A's in the entire first-grade class.

I want every daughter in America and every son in America in the first grade to be worried about those lower case A's. I want every parent to have to understand and have the ability to understand that, not only do we have to worry about their lower case A's, but we have got to worry about their future and what happens. In just a few short years, they will be ready to go to college or technical training school.

What this amendment does is embrace the 50 States who have 529 prepaid tuition or college savings plans for parents. Costs are going up, and we are not a Nation that saves. We have about a 1 percent savings rate in America.

There are five Federal programs to help people offset the costs of getting college education, of technical training that will cover not as many as it will not cover. There will be more families out there struggling to borrow money to get their kids to go to school than there will be receiving a grant or a scholarship or tuition from another source.

What we are trying to do here, Mr. Chairman, is allow parents to get connected and understand the value of time and compounding with these State savings plans.

In Michigan, I offered a bill last year that would allow State tax-free money in and tax-free money out to defray the costs of getting an education. The time and compounding value of that is immense. We need to get parents connected as soon as we can and take the middle class from the borrowing class to the saving class.

This is an important element in offsetting those increasing costs, Mr. Chairman. I urge this body's support so that parents can go back to saving a little money and worrying about those lower case A's.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we have no opposition to this amendment. We support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS) is a very good amendment. The gentleman from Michigan, during his years in the State senate, authored the college tuition savings program in Michigan. I think his ongoing efforts here as a new Member of this body to encourage the Secretary, to the extent practicable, to promote these programs is of great benefit for the American people.

We all know that the cost of going to college continues to rise; and we believe by the end of this year, some 48 States will have such programs. We want to make sure that they are working well and provide the avenue by which many more of our middle- and lower-income students will be able to attend an ongoing college, university or some type of training program once they graduate from high school.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment. The gentleman should be congratulated.

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in support of an amendment that would authorize the Secretary of Education to work with state administrators to promote and advocate the use and establishment of state-sponsored college savings plans during a student's elementary years.

In recent years, most states have created either a prepaid tuition or college savings plan to help parents save for ever-increasing post-secondary education costs. The 1980s saw the first developments in state-created tuition plans as states attempted to meet the growing concerns about the affordability of college. In 1986, Michigan was the first state to establish a prepaid college tuition plan, and last year our state added a savings plan. Currently, all 50 states offer some form of Qualified State Tuition Programs within Section 529 of the tax code as Georgia and South Dakota became the last two states to establish plans earlier this year.

As the author of Michigan's post-secondary education savings account plan while a member of the Michigan State Senate, I believe that education is central to our prosperity as a nation. However, too often the educational opportunities for our students and families are limited by tuition costs or the prospect of a crushing debt-load. The best answer to this dilemma is to encourage advance family savings—starting to save during a student's elementary years.

Please allow me to briefly describe the benefits of saving under Michigan's recently-enacted Michigan Education Savings Program. Under this program, which was launched in November, 2000, any individual interested in investing for a college or a vocational education can open an account and contribute on behalf of any beneficiary for as little as $25 up-front. Furthermore, individuals can also contribute as little as $15 per savings account per pay period by using payroll deduction through participating employers.

Michigan's program has been a great success in its first six months, as more than 16,000 accounts have been opened with over $34 million in investments. In fact, Money magazine recently named the Michigan Education Savings Program one of the best state-operated college savings programs in the country.

The power of compounding makes these plans especially appealing to families who can save only in smaller increments. For example, families can put away as little as $10 a week over the first 18 years of child's life and, based at a conservative earnings rate of 8 percent, have about $20,000 by the time he or she is ready for college or technical school. Over a period of time, families can save enough to provide the kind of future we all want for our children without having to run up a huge debt to get an education.

An example of the need to create a saving class was highlighted in a recent Washington Post column titled: "Colleges Where the Middle Class Need Not Apply." The lead paragraph touched upon the fact "... the poor and middle class at least try college for a year, although for many of them, even the modest cost of state schools quickly becomes burdensome."

When it comes to saving for college and vocational training we need to help our families turn from a borrowing class into a saving class. To encourage such saving, all 50 states have established prepaid tuition or college savings plans and this amendment empowers the Secretary of Education to work with those states to advocate the benefits of these plans to elementary school parents and the importance of establishing an account as soon as possible.

I believe we all can agree that the federal government should foster policies encouraging families to save for educational expenses instead of relying on debt or government aid programs. My amendment to H.R. 1 would authorize the Secretary of Education to work together with the 50 states that have Section 529 savings programs to advocate and promote the use of these valuable educational tools to encourage parents to enroll in their state's plan during their children's elementary years.

Promoting the use of savings at the elementary level will allow the dynamic of time and interest produce significant savings that will help the families of today's kindergartners shoulder the financial burden of tomorrow's education costs. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment promoting the use of these valuable tools during the elementary years.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, today, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by my colleague and friend MIKE ROGERS from the State of Michigan. As we debate this historic education reform legislation, H.R. 1, one aspect that should not be overlooked is that too often the educational opportunities of our students and families are limited by tuition costs and overwhelming debts.

We need to encourage low- and middle-class families to turn from borrowing to a saving. The best time to encourage parents to start saving for tuition costs is when their children are in elementary school. Today, all 50 States, including my home State of Michigan, have established prepaid tuition or college savings plans under section 529 of the Federal Tax Code.

This amendment will empower the Secretary of Education to work with the States to advocate the benefits of these plans to elementary school parents and stress the importance of establishing an account as soon as possible. I thank the gentleman for offering this amendment and for his leadership in the State of Michigan on this important issue.

I encourage my House colleagues to leave no child behind and support this amendment to encourage families to save early for their children's educational expenses.

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. ROGERS).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 13 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 13 OFFERED BY MR. NORWOOD

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the rule, I offer amendment No. 13.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 13 offered by Mr. NORWOOD:

At the end of part A of title V of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended by section 501 of the bill, add the following:

"SEC. 5155. DISCIPLINE OF CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.

"(a) AUTHORITY OF SCHOOL PERSONNEL.—Each State receiving funds under this Act shall require each local educational agency to have in effect a policy under which school personnel of such agency may discipline (including expel or suspend) a child with a disability who—

"(1) carries or possesses a weapon to or at a school, on school premises, or to or at a school function, under the jurisdiction of a State or a local educational agency;

"(2) knowingly possesses or uses illegal drugs or sells or solicits the sale of a controlled substance at a school, on school premises, or at a school function, under the jurisdiction of a State or a local educational agency; or

"(3) commits an aggravated assault or battery (as defined under State or local law) at a school, on school premises, or at a school function, under the jurisdiction of a State or local educational agency, in the same manner in which such personnel may discipline a child without a disability. Such personnel may modify the disciplinary action on a case-by-case basis.

"(b) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to prevent a child with a disability who is disciplined pursuant to the authority provided under paragraph (1) or (2) of subsection (a) from asserting a defense that the carrying or possession of the weapon, or the possession or use of the illegal drugs (or the sale or solicitation of the controlled substance), as the case may be, was unintentional or innocent.

"(c) FREE APPROPRIATE PUBLIC EDUCATION.—

"(1) CEASING TO PROVIDE EDUCATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, a child expelled or suspended under subsection (a) shall not be entitled to continue educational services, including a free appropriate public education, required under Federal law during the term of such expulsion or suspension, if the State in which the local educational agency responsible for providing educational services to such child does not require a child without a disability to receive educational services after being expelled or suspended.

"(2) PROVIDING EDUCATION.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the local educational agency responsible for providing educational services to a child with a disability who is expelled or suspended under paragraph (1) may choose to continue to provide educational services or mental health services to such child. If the local educational agency so chooses to continue to provide the services—

"(A) nothing in any other provision of Federal law shall require the local educational agency to provide such child with any particular level of service; and

"(B) the location where the local educational agency provides the services shall be left to the discretion of the local educational agency.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.—The term 'controlled substance' has the meaning given the term in section 5151.

"(2) ILLEGAL DRUG.—The term 'illegal drug' means a controlled substance, but does not include such a substance that is legally possessed or used under the supervision of a licensed health-care professional or that is legally possessed or used under any other authority under the Controlled Substances Act or under any other provision of Federal law.

"(3) WEAPON.—The term 'weapon' has the meaning given the term 'dangerous weapon' under subsection (g)(2) of section 930 of title 18, United States Code.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD).

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as it stands now, Federal law requires schools to have two different discipline policies for those who bring a weapon to school or engage in aggravated assault, one policy for special needs students and another for nonspecial needs students. A special needs student receives preferential treatment when it comes to being punished for outrageous behavior.

For all practical purposes, a special needs student could be suspended for no longer than 55 days, for all practical purposes, and even then must be provided educational services. Nonspecial needs students, on the other hand, can be and often are suspended for longer periods of time, and then without educational services.

My amendment will finally change that. It gives schools the authority to have a consistent discipline policy for all students. It allows special needs students to be disciplined under the same policy as nonspecial needs students in the exact same situation.

My amendment also contains safeguards. My amendment contains safeguards to ensure that no special needs student is unjustly punished or singled out. This amendment sends clear messages that weapons and violent assaults at school will not be tolerated. My colleagues, let's send that message today by passing this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. Mr. Chairman, I was one of the original sponsors, co-authors and authors of the IDEA Act when I first came to Congress in 1975. I have very strong feelings about our obligations to educate students with disabilities. I was also the first author of the Act who said that you would expel students from schools if they brought guns to schools. I have very strong feelings that our schools are a place of learning, they ought to be a sanctuary, and the streets ought not to come into our schools. But these two values clash.

My concern is this: The suggestion is somehow that children with handicaps are privileged; that children with handicaps have preferential treatment. No, what we do under the law is recognize that children with handicaps, with disabilities, in many instances, must be treated differently because of those disabilities. And what we do in this is suggest that we cannot, under the Federal law, deny them continued education if they are suspended, because we understand the problems of educating some of these children, many of whom have multiple handicaps, multiple disabilities; that if we stop the educational services, in many instances, it is very difficult to start or to have that child catch up.

There is nothing in the Federal law that says that that child must return to school. A decision must be made in 55 days, but there is nothing that says the child must return to school. The gentleman from Georgia and the committee, when we were deliberating this, handed out an article from the Orlando Sentinel and he said that this child should not be back in school. But when we read the article, it makes very clear that the school authorities are educating the child while he is in a juvenile detention center. The school authorities make it very clear that this child will never return to his school. This child will not go back to school. They do not want to return him home, but they are going to continue to educate him because that is what the law requires.

By the same token, the law does not require that that student be returned to school. It says we cannot have a secession of the educational program. And we should not change that law today. We should not change that law today.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GRAVES).

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia for his work on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, creating a safe learning environment must be a top priority for our schools. Unfortunately, the discipline provisions in IDEA make it impossible for educators to address the needs of all students in the classroom. The safety and the learning opportunities of all students are jeopardized by the rules that require that a dangerous and disruptive student remain in the classroom.

I believe when it comes to the issue of weapons, illegal drugs and assaults, we cannot afford to gamble with the safety of our students, with our teachers and staff. Ensuring the safety of all students must be our first goal. The Federal bureaucracy cannot second-guess our local educators, who must make difficult decisions about the safety in their classrooms. Doing such will unnecessarily put the safety of our students at risk.

This amendment will allow schools to discipline all students that bring weapons, sell illegal drugs or commit aggravated assault or battery at school in the same manner. Schools will not be able to discriminate against students with disabilities, but they will have the flexibility under this amendment to make sure that all violent students are removed from the classroom.

Simply put, this amendment will remove the roadblocks that Congress has put in the path of good school administrators, parents, teachers, and local school boards who merely want to keep their classrooms safe.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE).

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

When we reauthorized IDEA in 1997, in a bipartisan way, we took steps so that schools could ensure a safe and orderly environment for all students. The 1997 amendments specifically allow schools to immediately remove IDEA children from the classroom for discipline violations and place children in alternative educational settings when they commit infractions dealing with guns, drugs, or are likely to injure themselves or others.

What IDEA in 1997 also stated was that troubled, disabled children should not be kicked out of school onto the streets without educational services, since this will lead only to additional juvenile crime.

Unfortunately, my concern over this amendment has already become reality in the tragic incident of school violence in Springfield, Oregon, 2 years ago. Kip Kingle, the shooter in the Springfield incident, although not an IDEA student, was suspended when he brought a gun to school. He was sent home without counseling or educational services and proceeded to shoot and kill his parents and go on a shooting rampage at his school. This incident is the perfect example of why cutting educational services off for children can lead to disastrous circumstances.

I fully believe, as do all of us here, that our schools should be safe for all children. Now, those children who engage in dangerous activities should be dealt with through such means as immediate removal from the classroom. This is something we can really agree upon: Dangerous children must be removed from the classroom, absolutely and immediately. However, ceasing educational services for these children, or for any child, is not the answer, since it will only lead to more juvenile crime and possible situations similar to the horrific incident in Springfield.

I taught school for 10 years, and we had incidents where we had to have that child removed, not necessarily an IDEA child, a child in our regular programs, but we did provide in Michigan alternative programs for that child. I know children who were involved in that fashion and did get alternative education who are now working and are productive citizens in Flint, Michigan, because we gave them that alternative. I think all children should have some possibility of alternative services when they commit such incidents as these.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WICKER).

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Chairman, in my home State, four students were caught bringing a gun to a school-sponsored event. They were passing the gun among themselves. After a disciplinary hearing, three of the students were expelled for possession of a gun, but the child who actually brought the gun to the event was given only 45 days in an alternative program. Why this unequal result? Because the child who brought the gun was classified as learning disabled under IDEA.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when I travel throughout my district and talk to parents and teachers and administrators, they are concerned about this dual system of school discipline. They want school discipline returned to the schools. A safe productive learning environment is a key element to providing all students with a good education.

There is no hidden agenda here. There is no attempt to deny disabled students the ability to be educated. It is simply a matter of safety in schools and order in schools and discipline in schools.

It was the academic community who encouraged me during the last Congress to introduce a bill to restore disciplinary decisions to State and local administrators. I was pleased when the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD), similar to my bill, was approved in the 106th Congress during consideration of the Juvenile Justice Act.

We cannot tolerate students bringing guns or drugs to school or assaulting other students. It does not matter who the student is, the danger to the other students remains the same.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, under current law, a child with a disability who is expelled from the regular classroom for any reason is still entitled to a free and appropriate education. I know of no public policy benefit which can be achieved by sending these children to the streets without any educational services, even when they are involved with serious offenses. In fact, I see no benefit to the public for depriving any child of an education, whether they have a disability or not. It is difficult for any child who is expelled to catch up and graduate from school, and it is especially hard for disabled children.

We learned, during hearings on youth crime, that there is a strong link between dropping out of school and subsequent crime. For children with disabilities, these correlations are even stronger. Research shows that children with disabilities who are put out of school without educational services are less likely than other children to ever catch up; they are less likely to graduate from high school or get a GED; they are less likely to be employed, and they are substantially more likely to be involved in crime.

Some talk about a deterrent effect. Let me read a letter from the National Coalition of Police Chiefs, Prosecutors, and Crime Victims from 2 years ago. They said: "We urge you to oppose any amendment that would deny educational services to kids who are expelled or suspended from schools. Schools can already immediately expel a student who brings weapons to schools. But giving a gun-toting kid an extended vacation from school and from all responsibility is soft on offenders and dangerous for everyone else."

Please don't give those kids who most need adult supervision the unsupervised time to rob, become addicted to drugs, and get their hands on other guns to threaten students when the school bell rings."

Mr. Chairman, during the last Congress we had a bipartisan task force on juvenile crime lasting several weeks. We met for several weeks, heard from dozens of witnesses, and not one witness had anything good to say about kicking kids out of school without continuing services. Some said take them out of the regular classroom, but continue their education. Not one witness had anything good to say about kicking them out without any services.

The IDEA program is premised on the recognition that children with disabilities need more support than other students to enable them to obtain a decent education. There is nothing to suggest that less support is needed when they have disciplinary problems, even when they are serious disciplinary problems.

School systems should not be allowed to send uneducated children with discipline problems onto the streets and endanger the public. For those reasons, Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

□ 1130

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARR).

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the previous opponent of this amendment, the learned gentleman from Virginia, has illustrated graphically the sorry state in which our schools are finding themselves. According to the gentleman from Virginia, we ought to feel guilty, schools ought to feel guilty, teachers ought to feel guilty, if they try and protect the students in their schools.

The gentleman says schools should not turn these students out because they commit acts of violence. After all, then it is the school's fault for those kids being on the street. That sort of reverse thinking is what this amendment and piece of legislation tries to correct. It tries to bring back some rationality to the process of educating and protecting our children.

No longer, if this amendment is adopted and signed into law by the President, would our schools be held hostage by claiming that an act of intimidation, an act of assault cannot be punished, that students cannot be removed from the school, that the taxpayers should not continue to support them simply because that act of violence, that act of drug dealing, that act of assault might be a manifestation of a disability.

Our teachers and our administrators tasked by the government of this country, by our local government and by millions upon millions of parents, have an obligation to teach our students. They cannot fulfill that obligation if those students under their care are in fear.

Mr. Chairman, this will remove that fear and provide flexibility to our schools to do what we have asked them to do.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT.)

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I did not say that we wanted to keep children in the classroom. If children have committed a serious offense, maybe they do need to be taken out of the classroom. What this amendment will do, if it passes, it will put those children out on the streets without any services; and all of the studies show the crime rate will go out.

Mr. Chairman, that is why not a single witness on our bipartisan task force had anything good to say about this amendment. They all said we have to continue educational services if we want to protect our children.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, the real debate here should be about school choice, allowing parents to choose the school that is safe for their children. The President proposed school choice in his package No Child Left Behind, but that provision was left out of the bill. So it is incumbent upon us now to discuss the safety of the children who are left in those schools and trapped in government-owned schools throughout the country.

Mr. Chairman, this dual standard that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) has put his finger on is one that is painfully understood by every teacher in America, many parents, but it is also understood by a certain number of children.

Children under the IDEA program are no more likely to be involved in discipline problems than anyone else, but the dual standard is one that does play a disproportionate role in classrooms because it sends a mixed signal in the whole context of classroom discipline.

Schools should be safe. Teachers deserve to be in classroom settings where their safety is secure as well, and where their expertise is respected and honored. This amendment that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) has proposed is a good amendment; it is one that we should adopt. It moves us in the proper direction in the context of empowering parents and teachers and making our classrooms safer.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, who has worked so hard on this education bill.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) for bringing this amendment to the floor. As many of the members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce know, there was great interest in dealing with this subject in the Committee on Education and the Workforce. At my request, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) saved this amendment for today's debate, and we did not engage in this fight in the committee process.

Mr. Chairman, we all know that IDEA was an important step in terms of allowing more of our children to receive the same educational opportunities as those without disabilities. But we all know and we have all heard from every one of our superintendents and school board members that there have been significant problems. Many of us believe that there is a two-tier policy in many of our schools when it comes to the possession of a weapon, the possession of drugs, or the commission of an aggravated assault against other students, against teachers, and school personnel when it comes to IDEA students.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) brings makes it very clear that the policies that would be appropriate in a school for non-DEA students ought to apply to IDEA students as well in these three particular areas. Most people around America would say this makes common sense and we ought to do it, and we ought to support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, having said that, we all know there are other issues having to deal with IDEA, and that bill is up for reauthorization next year. It likely will be a rather contentious debate in the Committee on Education and the Workforce and on the floor. By and large, we would like to leave most of these issues until next year.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment, though, is a commonsense amendment. We ought to support it.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the gentleman from Virginia who said that there is no good public policy that can be achieved by this amendment; and I would like to say that and tell that to the family of Linda Hendrick, 52 years old, who was stabbed repeatedly in 1999 by a special ed student that could not be removed from the classroom.

I think there is very good public policy that can occur here. It has been pointed out by the other side that there are some students, I think Down's syndrome was mentioned, that this would apply to. But it also applies to so many other students who are in special education today for various and sundry reasons who actually do know the difference, and we need to give people like the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), who was a teacher for 10 years, the superintendents back home, we need to give them some discretion to make some decisions about when a student should or should not be in a school.

Mr. Chairman, they say schools can eliminate a student from special education for however long you like. That is simply not true because the process is so cumbersome, the process is so expensive it effectively does not work.

Mr. Chairman, I want to encourage my colleagues to take this opportunity to give people like the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Kildee) an opportunity to do this at home.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, opposition to this amendment is not based upon an expression of guilt, it is based upon an exercise of common sense. I do not think that any violent student should spend one more hour in any classroom in this country. Under the existing law and under this bill, they need not. This bill says if a student engages in an act of violence and present law says if a student engages in an act of violence, they can be removed from the classroom.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment before us says after they are removed from the classroom, that is the end of their education. That is it if the State so chooses.

I oppose this amendment because it does not answer this question: With respect to this violent student, once they are removed from the classroom, as they should be, what happens next?

This amendment does not deal with the very real problem of violence in our schools. It just moves it from our schools to somewhere else, to our streets or to our neighborhoods or to other social institutions.

I for one minute would not stand for the proposition that we should coddle or discriminate in favor of people who commit violent crimes. But I know this: That pretending that they are just going to go away will not work. Pretending that they will disappear from the rest of the community will not work. And understanding if we get people that are prone to violence back on a positive track by offering them an education, they are a lot less likely to commit another violent offense.

Mr. Chairman, it is very alluring to say we should just pull the plug on the education of those that commit violence. It is also completely counterproductive. It is a guarantee that many of those same young men and women will never get an education, never become contributing members of society, and will commit even more heinous and terrible crimes. This amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for debate has expired.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, each side will control 2 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I will close this up by making an appeal to the good folks on the other side. I know that they are big defenders of the disability education program, as well they should be. This program was passed by Congress to address real and serious problems. Special needs students were often not given an opportunity to get an education in this country. The Disabilities Education Act fixed that. It does not mean that it is perfect, but it takes a step in the right direction. But that is yesterday's problem that we did take the right step.

Mr. Chairman, today's problem with disciplining special needs students is just as real. In fact, it is causing a growing backlash against IDEA. My teachers and superintendents are pleading for relief here. Nonspecial need parents are seriously questioning special and unequal treatment of students regarding discipline. There is a backlash here.

Mr. Chairman, I appeal to my colleagues, in their zeal to protect the legacy of this program, do not overlook this problem by supporting this reasonable change. My colleagues will do much to stop this growing backlash against IDEA without hurting education for special needs students.

Let me assure my colleagues, this amendment will not encourage schools to engage in mass expulsions of special needs students. This amendment has solid safeguards to make sure this does not happen. Let me be very clear. If a teacher is trying to unjustly kick a special needs student out of their class, this amendment requires parents and local officials to have the authority to stop such a thing.

Mr. Chairman, we can and should pass this amendment. We passed a very similar amendment in this Congress last year with 300 votes. This is something we as Federal legislators can do, something we actually can do that will make life better for our teachers back home.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY).

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong opposition to the amendment by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD). I do not think that there is anybody here in this Chamber that disagrees that a student that is causing disruption in a classroom should be removed. But let us remember something very clearly. We are talking about children with special needs. Right there, special needs.

Mr. Chairman, anyone who disrupts the classroom should be removed, but they have to have an alternative place to go. One of the things that we are not doing in this Chamber and not providing to children with special needs is to give it to them: Alternative schools. We have seen children removed and sent to alternative schools, and we have seen them do very well in small classrooms with specialized care for them. These are children that have special needs.

Mr. Chairman, I came to Congress to reduce gun violence in this country, and I certainly stand by that. So of course anyone that is carrying a gun to a school should be removed. But to put students out on the street and have them come back the next day and fire among their classmates, that is the wrong way to go, too.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not about safety. No one supports a policy that allows a violent or dangerous student to stay in the classroom. This amendment is about having an alternative program for children with special needs. Not having that contained in this amendment is wrong.

□ 1145

What is even more wrong is the fact that this was the only amendment made in order dealing with one of the most pressing challenges facing schools districts; how to meet the challenge of educating children with special education needs.

The gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY) and I offered an amendment that talked about getting the Federal Government to live up to its 40 percent cost share of special education expenses. Unfortunately, that amendment was not made in order. We should have that debate on the floor as a part of the elementary and secondary education bill because every Member can bring anecdotal evidence to this Chamber that shows the pressing financial costs that school districts are facing because we are only funding our responsibility of special education at slightly less than 15 percent when we promised to fund it at 40 percent. We need to help school districts stop pitting student against student because the limited resources that they have available for one of the fastest growing expenses in school budgets, meeting the needs of special students in the classroom. That's the debate we should be having today instead of an amendment that will make it easier to punish those students.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD) will be postponed.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 14 printed in House Report No. 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 14 OFFERED BY MR. TIAHRT

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 14.

The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 14 offered by Mr. TIAHRT: Before part B of title IX of the bill, insert the following:

Subpart 3—General Education Provisions

SEC. 916. INFORMATION ACCESS AND CONSENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 445 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232h) is amended by—

(1) redesignating subsections (c) through (e) as subsections (d) through (f), respectively; and

(2) by striking subsections (a) and (b) and inserting the following:

“(a) ACCESS TO INFORMATION.—No funds shall be made available under any applicable program to any educational agency or institution that has a policy of denying, or that effectively prevents, the parent of an elementary school or secondary school student served by such agency or at such institution, as the case may be—

“(1) the right to inspect and review any instructional material used with respect to the educational curriculum of the student. Each educational agency or institution shall establish appropriate procedures for the granting of a request by parents for access to the instructional material. The granting of each such request shall be made in a reasonable period of time, but shall not exceed 45 days, after the date of the request;

“(2) the right to inspect and review a survey, analysis, or evaluation that is subject to subsection (c)(7) before the survey, analysis, or evaluation is given to a student.

“(b) RESTRICTION ON SEEKING INFORMATION FROM MINORS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law, no funds shall be made available under any program administered by the Secretary to any educational agency or institution that administers or provides a survey, analysis, or evaluation to a student without the prior, informed, written consent of the parent or guardian of a student concerning—

“(A) political affiliations or beliefs of the student or the student's parent;

“(B) mental or psychological problems potentially embarrassing to the student or the student's family;

“(C) sex behavior or attitudes;

“(D) illegal, antisocial, or self-incriminating behavior;

“(E) appraisals of other individuals with whom the minor has a familial relationship;

“(F) relationships that are legally recognized as privileged, including those with lawyers, physicians, and members of the clergy; and

“(G) religious practices affiliations or beliefs.”

“(2) EXPLANATION.—In seeking the consent of the parent an educational agency or institution must provide an accurate explanation, in writing, of the types of items listed in subparagraphs (A) through (G) of paragraph (1) that are contained in the survey and the purpose, if known, for including those items.

“(c) RESTRICTION ON MEDICAL TESTING AND TREATMENT OF MINORS.—

“(1) CONSENT REQUIRED.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), no funds shall be made available under any applicable program to an educational agency or institution that requires or otherwise causes the student without the prior, written, informed consent of the parent or a guardian of a minor to undergo medical or mental health examination, testing, treatment, or immunization (except in the case of a medical emergency).

“(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to medical or mental health examinations, testing, treatment, or immunizations of students expressly permitted by State law without written parental consent.

“(3) DEFINITIONS.—For the purpose of this section, the term ‘educational agency or institution’ means any elementary, middle, or secondary school, any school district or local board of education, and any State educational agency that is the recipient of funds under any program administered by the Secretary, except that it does not apply to post-secondary institutions.

“(4) INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIAL.—In this subsection the term ‘instructional material’ means a textbook, audio/visual material, informational material accessible through Internet sites, material in digital or electronic formats, instructional manual, or journal, or any other material supplementary to the education of a student.

“(5) RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.—(A) Nothing in this section shall be construed to supersede the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (20 U.S.C. 1232g).

“(B) The term ‘instructional material’ does not include academic tests or assessments.

“(6) APPLICATION.—

“(A) CERTAIN SURVEYS, ANALYSIS, AND EVALUATIONS.—Subsection (b) shall not apply to surveys, analysis, or evaluations administered to a student as part of the Individuals with Disabilities Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.).

“(B) PARENTAL CONSENT.—Nothing in subsection (c) shall be construed to supersede or otherwise affect the parental consent requirements under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.).

“(C) STUDENT RIGHTS.—The rights provided parents under this Act transfer to the student once the student turns 18 years old or is an emancipated minor at any age.

“(7) STATE LAW EXCEPTION.—Educational agencies and institutions residing in a State that has a law that provides parents rights comparable to the rights contained herein may seek exemption from this Act by obtaining a waiver from the office designated by the Secretary to administer this Act. This office may grant a waiver to educational agencies and institutions upon review of State law.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) and a Member opposed each will control 10 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise reserved for the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of parental rights. Today, we will be passing legislation to ensure that no child is left behind in our education system. As a Nation and as a government, we have a duty to make sure that our public school system is held accountable; but our schools should not only be accountable to the government, but parents as well. Ultimately, it is the families who should have the most say in how their children are educated.

The Parental Freedom of Information amendment is based on the need to provide concerned, active parents with information that is vital for them to exercise their right to guide the upbringing of the children.

Educators have often said that involved parents are the most important thing public schools need to help students learn. I believe involved parents must be informed parents.

The current hodgepodge of State and Federal laws simply does not provide parents of public school children with the clear-cut right to access information regarding their child's education.

The goal of this amendment is to plainly and unambiguously define the rights parents have under the law.

Specifically, parents will have the right to access the curriculum to which their children are exposed. Parents will also have the right to give informed written consent prior to any student being required to undergo non-emergency medical or mental health examinations, testing or treatment, while at school; and finally, they will be afforded the right to inspect surveys and questionnaires seeking personal information before they are given to students.

This legislation in no way seeks to influence the content of curricula or tests. It simply allows parents to access the basic information which involved parents need to guide the education of their children.

There may be some attempt to argue that there is no need for this amendment. However, the increasing amount of litigation to determine what rights are guaranteed to parents under current Federal law is evidence to the contrary. Plain and simple, parents should not have to go into a courtroom to find out what is going on in the classroom.

Parents provide both tax dollars to fund our public education system as well as children who participate. Why should we as parents be denied the right to see how schools are using our tax dollars to educate our children? We need this legislation to clarify that parents have this right to be involved.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, if I might ask either of the authors a question about the amendment because we have no opposition to the amendment. I think we fully understand the problems and the concerns that the authors are trying to address, but we would like to clarify obviously some concern of, very often, school teachers. Under State law, in a number of instances, teachers are required to react to their concerns about whether or not a child has been abused or not, and they must make some inquiries of that child. My understanding is this amendment would not impact in any way the ability of those school officials to engage in that sometimes, unfortunately, necessary activity.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that is correct. We have no intent of preventing anyone from trying to stop child abuse. I think that is an awful situation that we currently have in America that we need to stop, so our efforts would be to do the same as the intent of the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. We raise this concern, and I thank the gentleman for his answer. We raise this concern because obviously, again in very tragic and unfortunate situations, many times the child abuse is within the home and the parent cannot be notified that the teacher wants to ask questions of the child, and we just want to make sure that this does not get in the way.

Some of the groups have raised that concern. I do not think the amendment does that, but I would certainly like, if it is possible, that we could continue to work on this if that problem somehow materializes so that does not happen.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TIAHRT. It is our intent to work with the gentleman to make sure there is no confusion about this.

I would also like to remind the gentleman this does not supersede State laws. Those States that have made initiatives in this area to stop child abuse, it would not interfere with that process at all.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for his response.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. GRAHAM).

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed working with the gentleman on this amendment. It is often said that knowledge is power, and what we are trying to do is make sure that informed and caring parents know what is going on at school in an appropriate way. What the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) raised, I want to assure him it is not my intent, nor the intent of anyone, to supersede State law that requires teachers or medical personnel to report suspected child abuse, because we do not want to do anything that is going to undermine protecting children. I think we have drafted an amendment that will accomplish that.

We are trying to empower parents in three key areas. We want to make sure that parents have some knowledge of what is going on in terms of the curriculum being taught at the school and that they have some information up front, and that they can be informed by the appropriate authorities to know what their child is being taught and have some input.

We want to make sure that the parents have access to school material that is going to be taught to their child.

Second, if a child is being surveyed about their personal family life, about whether they use drugs, or mental health issues, that we want parents to know what is going on and get parental consent there when a survey is being done because we believe it is important for parents to know what is being asked of their children.

Third, we want to make sure that in emergency situations, guidance-counseling situations in its normal fashion, that there is no impediment there. But we do believe that when it comes time to perform medical exams or part of a treatment regime that a school counseling team may come up with, that parents are informed about what is going to happen to their child medically and any mental health counseling that is a result of the normal counseling process.

Knowledge is power. We believe this will give parents more knowledge about what goes on in their school. It will create a better relationship between administrators and parents, and we are going to make sure that we do not do anything to impede the right to protect children who are being abused at home.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA) for the purposes of a colloquy.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to have this colloquy with the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) and the other author, but first let me make a point clear. I speak on this subject about parental consent with a little bit of experience that my husband is a psychiatrist not only in private practice but also as a psychiatric consultant to a number of school systems over the years on these issues.

With that as background, I want to say that I agree with the gentleman's amendment; but I want to be sure that we are not having unintended consequences here. So I want to make clear what the language does.

Specifically with the section on restrictions on medical testing and treatment of minors, these initial contacts are vital. As a primary proponent of school-based mental health services, as the author of that provision that is in the bill, I want to be very sure that we are talking about the same things here.

My understanding here is that under the gentleman's amendment a child in trouble would be first referred to a school guidance counselor, as is presently the case, under all State law; no signed permission for this initial contact is needed. Is that correct?

Mr. TIAHRT. That is also my understanding, yes.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Then the child's case is referred to a child study committee, and the social worker that is a member of that child's study committee then is required to have parental consent or make the contact with the parent before that evaluation. Is that correct?

Mr. TIAHRT. That is also my understanding.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Then, of course, we get to the question of the mental health counselors that are provided for in this bill. It is again my understanding, and there is no ambiguity about this, that mental health counselors would then assess the treatment needs but would again require parental consent with specificity?

Mr. TIAHRT. That is also my understanding.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. That is also the understanding of the gentleman.

I want to thank the gentleman because this is a very important portion of this bill. I want to make the particular point for all of our colleagues that we need this clarification to ensure that the children and families are able to receive the best possible treatment but not eroding the rights of the parents in these cases.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) for his amendment.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) for yielding me this time and would urge the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment because at its core it empowers parents, and that really should be what we are all about here in Congress, is finding ways to empower parents to the greatest extent possible. This empowers them through information and putting parents in the driver's seat when it comes to administering various psychological and psychiatric examinations, nonemergency medical examinations and tests that might be required at school.

Giving parents the authority to make these decisions is just one strategy to do two things: one, to make parents a more integral part of the academic and learning experience of their children; but, secondly, to allow parents to be in a position where they have a better opportunity to protect their children from different examinations, procedures, different experiments that take place in America's government-owned schools that are somehow different than the academic mission that most parents assume these institutions are all about.

That is, in fact, what these institutions should be about, and that should be our goal here in the House, is to focus to the greatest extent possible the mission of our public schools on the mission of teaching, on education. Pure and simple. It is important to empower them through the Tiahrt amendment because the options to empower parents further have really not become a part of this bill nor have those amendments been permitted to even be discussed.

The President, in his plan to leave no child behind, had suggested that parents should have the full authority to move their children out of government-owned institutions and into private schools at some point if those public schools have failed to deliver an academic product that was in the best interest of their children. That core provision of the President's bill has been left behind, ironically, and is not part of H.R. 1; but this amendment here is critical and I think addresses that deficiency in the overall legislation to some degree because it does significantly empower parents in a very important area of their child's academic experience and makes sure that their focus is on education and academics and not on experimentation and psychological testing.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I first took up the fight to guarantee parental rights when I encountered resistance in trying to obtain information about my own children's curriculum. Since then, I have learned that 11-year-olds have been given surveys asking about explicit sexual practices. School counselors have conducted counseling sessions for treatments that they were not qualified to give, and other abuses have been occurring across the United States.

In closing, let me once again state that my intent with this amendment is to simply clear up the confusion that already exists in Federal law. Any teacher will say parental involvement is imperative to the success of a child during their educational career.

□ 1200

This amendment states unequivocally, parents have the right to be involved in a child's education. It is pro-family, it is pro-education, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 15 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 15 OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 15 offered by Mr. ARMEY:

(9) at the end, insert the following:

"(2) PARENTAL CHOICE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In any case described in section 1116(b)(7)(A)(ii)(II)(aa) the local educational agency shall permit the parents of each eligible child defined in paragraph (7)(A) to—

"(i) receive, from the agency, the child's share of funds allocated to the school under this part, calculated under subparagraph (B); and

"(ii) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, use those funds to pay the costs of attending a private school that agrees to—

"(I) assess the student in mathematics and reading and language arts each year during grades 3 through 8 and at least once during grades 10 through 12, using academic assessments that are comparable in what they measure to the academic assessments used by the State; and

"(II) provide the results of those assessments to the student's parents.

"(B) PER-CHILD AMOUNT.—The amount of a school's allocation under this part that it shall make available to the parents of an eligible child under subparagraph (A)(ii) is equal to the amount of the school's allocation under subpart 2 of this part divided by the number of eligible children enrolled in the school.

"(C) LIMITATION.—The amount of funds provided to the parents of a child under this paragraph shall not exceed the actual costs of the parents for sending the child to a private school and providing transportation to such school.

"(D) DURATION.—The local educational agency shall continue to provide funds to parents of a child attending a private school under this section until the child completes the grade corresponding to the highest grade offered at the public school the child previously attended.

"(E) NONDISCRIMINATION.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A private school participating in the choice program under this paragraph shall not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, or sex in carrying out the provisions of this paragraph.

"(ii) APPLICABILITY AND CONSTRUCTION WITH RESPECT TO DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEX.—

"(I) APPLICABILITY.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, clause (i) shall not apply to a private school that is controlled by a religious organization if the application of clause (i) is inconsistent with the religious tenets of the private school.

"(II) SINGLE-SEX SCHOOLS, CLASSES, OR ACTIVITIES.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, nothing in clause (i) shall be construed to prevent a parent from choosing, or a private school from offering, a single-sex school, class, or activity.

"(III) CONSTRUCTION.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, nothing in clause (i) shall be construed to require any person, or public or private entity to provide or pay, or to prohibit any such person or entity from providing or paying, for any benefit or service, including the use of facilities, related to an abortion. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to permit a penalty to be imposed on any person or individual because such person or individual is seeking or has received any benefit or service related to a legal abortion.

"(iii) CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to alter or modify the provisions of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act or the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

"(iv) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—

"(I) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent any private school which is operated by, supervised by, controlled by, or connected to, a religious organization from employing, admitting, or giving preference to, persons of the same religion to the extent determined by such institution to promote the religious purpose for which the private school is established or maintained.

"(II) SECTARIAN PURPOSES.—Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prohibit the use of funds made available under this subsection for sectarian educational purposes, or to require a private school to remove religious art, icons, scripture, or other symbols.

“(F) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this paragraph, the term ‘eligible child’ means a child from a low-income family, as determined by the local educational agency for purposes of allocating funds to schools under section 1113(c)(1).”

In section 401 of the bill, in section 4131(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 401)—

(1) strike “and” at the end of paragraph (14);

(2) strike the period at the end of paragraph (15) and insert “; and”; and

(3) insert the following:

“(16) activities to promote, implement, or expand private school choice for disadvantaged children in failing public schools.

In section 501 of the bill, in subparagraph (P) of section 5115(b)(2) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), after “including a public charter school,” insert “or a private school if no safe public school or public charter school can accommodate the student.”

In section 801 of the bill, in section 8507 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 801)—

(1) insert “(a) IN GENERAL.—” before “Nothing”; and

(2) add at the end the following:

“(b) INAPPLICABILITY.—Subsection (a) shall not be construed to prohibit the use of funds made available to parents of eligible children for sectarian educational purposes under private school choice provisions of this Act, or to require an eligible private institution to remove religious art, icons, scripture, or other symbols.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in support of this amendment, which is offered by myself, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY). With the consent of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), I will just make a few comments and then yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment represents the language that was first introduced in the President’s bill as he sent it up to the House and represents that very important component of his education package and education philosophy, which is parental involvement in school choice. It is, in my estimation, just the most minimal introduction of the right to choose a school on the part of a parent that is concerned about the performance of the school relative to the child’s life, and it is certainly something that this Congress should take under consideration and, in my estimation, we should pass without hesitation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER).

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment that we have before us reinstates the private school choice provisions into the bill, and I think will help rescue children who are trapped in chronically failing schools. I would like to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY) for sponsoring this amendment with me.

This issue is about fairness. It is about equity. It is about providing a safety valve for disadvantaged students.

Mr. Chairman, under H.R. 1, the bill expands choices for parents, but we need to expand it even further by giving parents the option of private school choice in cases where their children are trapped in failing schools. This was part of the President’s original plan and, while far from the only part, it is a very important part.

The amendment would restore all the private school choice provisions that were struck in the bill in committee, except for the demonstration program. Specifically, the amendment would restore private school choice as an option for disadvantaged students who have attended failing schools for at least 3 years. It would restore private school choice as a local use of funds under title IV of the Innovative Education Grants for Disadvantaged Students. It restores private school choice for students who are stuck in unsafe schools and where there are no other public schools to which they could transfer. And, it restores private school choice for students who have been victims of crime on school premises and where there are no other public schools to which they could transfer.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is common knowledge that we already have school choice in this country, except for poor children. Suburban parents, including many members of this body, are more likely to have the financial means to send their children to private schools, but low-income parents cannot afford this option. While we would continue to deny parents with children in failing schools the opportunity that Members of Congress enjoy, I just do not know.

We are told that providing poor children a way out of failing schools will siphon away money from the public school system. Quite frankly, I do not think this argument holds water.

Mr. Chairman, a couple of years ago, Matthew Miller, writing for the Atlantic Monthly, asked Bob Chase, who is the president of the National Education Association, if the NEA would support vouchers in exchange for tripling per-pupil spending for inner city kids, and guess what? Jay said, “no.”

This is not about money, even assuming, which we should not, that spending more money automatically increases student achievement. This is about an education bureaucracy that is resistant to change and mired in habit.

This about powerful lobbies that refuse to accept any change in the status quo.

Where it has been tried, school choice works. Harvard University’s Jay Green found that Florida students’ test scores have improved across the board since the implementation of Florida’s A-Plus program, similar to the plan that we would see in this amendment. And a September 1999 report conducted by the Indiana Center for Evaluation found that participants in Cleveland’s scholarship program scored up to 5 percentile points higher than their public school counterparts in language and science assessments.

Disadvantaged students have the most to gain from school choice. Consider the characteristics from those who benefit from Milwaukee’s Parental School Choice plan: Fifty-four percent receive Aid to Families with Dependent Children money, they come from families with an average income of $11,600; 76 percent come from single-parent homes, and more than 96 percent are from ethnic minorities.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good amendment. These are good provisions. They will help parents and they will help children stuck in failing schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise informally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SCHAFER) assumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Ms. Wanda Evans, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee will resume its sitting.

The Committee resumed its sitting.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, vouchers are a hotly debated topic throughout our Nation. The Michigan and California members of this House are very aware of this debate, having just had major ballot initiatives on private school vouchers recently defeated in their respective States.

In my home State of Michigan, in fact, our private school voucher proposition was opposed by over two-thirds of the Michigan voters, with a similar vote in California. The people of those two States, which are quite a cross-section of America, have spoken very clearly on this issue.

In committee, all private school voucher provisions were removed from the bill with bipartisan support. I believe that the passage of this amendment does jeopardize the many months of bipartisan work that have gone into producing this legislation. I would hope that the House would preserve the bipartisan support for this legislation and reject this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the ArmeY-Boehner-DeLay amendment because school choice is about one thing. It is about educational opportunity for all Americans, regardless of their race or socioeconomic status. The parents of children trapped in our most dangerous and failing schools are having to challenge a status quo that opposes those opportunities to them.

This debate, Mr. Chairman, between the status quo and the needs of largely minority students is not new. Decades ago, the defenders of the status quo stood in the schoolhouse door and said to some, you may not come in. Now, the defenders of the status quo stand in the schoolhouse door and say to the grandchildren of many of those same Americans, you may not come out.

I strongly rise in support of the ArmeY-Boehner-DeLay amendment in so much as it is part and parcel of restoring the dream of boundless educational opportunity for all Americans.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER).

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. I do so because the very heart and soul of this bill includes not only public school choice in the first year of a failing school where students taking their tests in April and finding that they are failing that test in the summertime are then afforded immediate public school choice that September.

We are expanding in this bill public school choice, charter schools, magnet schools, and then further on in the process, even opening up public school choice more than that for schools that go into the school improvement category.

So we have full public school choice. We are looking with new vision and new boldness to open up more options and empower our parents to make more choices within the public school system.

But this bill is also about accountability. We are saying for the first time in 30 years that schools must be accountable, that failure is no longer an option, whether it be for inner city school kids or suburban kids, and we are requiring them to take tests, and we are saying, we will invest more money to remediate the kids if they fail a test, but we want to know where they are with these tests. We are going to strengthen accountability.

This amendment has no accountability in it. We take the money with the voucher from the public school to a private school, and then there is no accountability there. No test, no trail, no nothing. As a student, as somebody who went to Catholic schools, I am not sure that we want those Catholic schools having to be accountable to the government for curriculum, for testing, for other things.

So on accountability, this amendment fails. I think in terms of public school choice, we are opening that up, I think this amendment fails.

Finally, this amendment would allow us the per-pupil expenditure under title I. That would be the whopping figure of about $639 for a voucher. Now, we defeated $1,500 in committee. This would be less than half that and would really not even get you in the classroom, let alone the front door of the school.

Mr. Chairman, I urge bipartisan defeat of this amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume for just a moment's comment to the previous speaker.

The amendment does, in fact, have accountability tests in several of the crucial academic areas. But, the gentleman is right, we do not ask the Catholic schools to be accountable to the government, we ask them to be accountable to the parents, the parents that love their child enough to find out how the school is doing by my child, care enough about the child to move the child, and certainly are more interested in that child's well-being than anybody in this government throughout the remainder of that child's life. That school will be accountable to that parent, and the gentleman can comment on that.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding, and I thank him for bringing forward this amendment.

I think the debate and the discussion that I just heard really does crystallize the exact debate as to where we need to hold and what accountability really is.

The President's plan originally talked about flexibility, it talked about accountability, and the accountability was to the Federal Government. What this amendment says is that there is another accountability. It is the accountability of schools, teachers, to parents. To claim that there is not accountability there, this amendment is absolutely false.

□ 1215

This is empowering parents and will force schools to be accountable not to a bureaucrat in Washington, not to a bureaucrat in the Department of Education, and not to a bureaucratic test that is mandated out of Washington.

We know a lot about this Department of Education. If we talk about accountability, we are talking about holding schools in Holland, Michigan, in my district, accountable, when at the same time Congress continues to back away from holding the Department of Education accountable for their $40 billion that they cannot get a clean audit on, and were not willing to allow parents to make the decisions about their kids.

Let us recognize through this process that by empowering parents we are moving accountability to exactly where it should be. We are moving it away from the Department of Education, we are moving it away from Washington, we are moving it away from our State capitals, we are moving it around the kitchen table, where parents can make the decision as to what school and what school environment most effectively meets the needs of their children.

I encourage my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment. I agree, and it has been a priority of mine, to improve American schools; and it should be our top priority. I truly believe in the title of this bill, which is to leave no child behind. This amendment goes in absolutely the opposite direction.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us, as has been noted, does improve our Nation's schools without vouchers. It includes several additional options for students in schools that fail to improve, including public school choice, access to after-school supplemental tutoring services.

In addition, the schools that fail to improve will be subject to consequences. That may include turning the school into a charter school or a takeover by the State. These provisions ensure that no child will be left behind in a failing school, and that scarce educational resources will be used effectively and efficiently to improve schools, and I want to stress this, for all students, not a small, select few.

If this amendment passes, our ability to help public schools improve will be significantly hindered. It will be taking money away from the system; and even worse, the vast majority of the students will be left behind in failing public schools.

How can we in good conscience select a few people from the failing schools to receive vouchers and leave the rest of the children behind? While, I am not a lawyer; aside from the unfairness of this, I would also say that if this amendment were ever to pass and this were in the bill, I am very confident that there would be court cases denying this because of discrimination and the limitations on the voucher system. This would then ultimately become an "entitlement."

The bottom line is that vouchers will reduce financial support for the vast majority to support only a select few and will definitely open up significant legal obstacles. I say, leave no child behind.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. OTTER).

Mr. OTTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Arme-Boehner-DeLay amendment to H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001.

But before I speak about this amendment, I want to commend President Bush for keeping another of his promises by making education reform a top priority in his administration.

I also want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) for his hard work on House Resolution 1 in keeping education a priority in this 107th Congress. In addition, I want to thank those members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce for their hard work.

Many of the provisions of H.R. 1 are good, particularly those that would increase flexibility for the State and local school districts, the families, the parents; reduce the Federal bureaucracy; encourage and improve teacher quality; and ensure that the basic math, science, and literacy tests are adequately funded.

H.R. 1 would also allow parents the option of transferring their children out of public schools that refuse to improve failing performances and to other public schools within the same district, a measure I support.

However, decisions as important as educating our youth should not be restricted only to public schools. Lower-income American families concerned about the quality and safety of their children in public schools should not be left behind. Just as many families who can afford it, they should be allowed to send their children to schools of their choice, whether it be public, private, or religious.

National opinion polls show that the vast majority of Americans support private school choice. The Arme-Boehner-DeLay amendment would do just that, if a school fails to make adequate yearly progress for 3 years in a row.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment because it provides a disingenuous solution to an indisputable problem.

It is indisputable that there are many children attending subpar schools throughout this country, but I want Members to think about the solution this amendment proposes. It says that children who go to a school where most of the kids fail a test year after year after year can eventually leave that school and take a bit of money with them and then attend a private school where the same testing will not be imposed.

Now, this amendment says there will be comparable tests, but not the same one. See, it is okay to justify people leaving a public school with public money to go to a private school because they could not perform on a standardized test, but then the amendment says that we will not give that same standardized test once the child gets to the private school. It only has to be comparable.

This amendment is an invitation to school fraud, not school choice. It will create a marketplace of fly-by-night institutions posing as legitimate schools simply to sop up this new Federal voucher that will be out there. It will degrade the well-earned reputation of legitimate private schools sponsored by religious and other organizations around the country.

The real solution is what is in the underlying bill: evaluate schools, find out what they are doing wrong, improve what they are doing wrong, and ultimately, replace the managers who will not make the changes that will make the schools better.

I urge opposition to this amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. TOOMEY).

Mr. TOOMEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

My daughter is about to turn 1 year old. It reminds me how fleeting childhood is, how brief is that moment in a child's life to have the opportunity to get the education that a child needs to have the opportunity to live a good life and to have all the opportunities to build a better life that we take for granted.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment today really is not for our kids. It is not for affluent children growing up in affluent homes. They have choice. They can move to the school district of their choice; and if they do not like that, they can afford to pay their property taxes and pay a tuition for the private school of their choice.

This amendment is for the majority of kids, our constituents who grow up in families where they do not have the luxury that that wealth provides. They have the fewest opportunities. They have the most disadvantages.

All this amendment says is if those children are stuck in a school that is chronically failing, if they are languishing in a school for 3 years that is not teaching them, then those parents ought to be free to move that child to a school that will work.

It is amazing to me that opponents of this amendment can say that a poor child with few opportunities who is stuck and languishing in a school that is not teaching him will force him to stay in that school. That is what the opponents are saying. I just do not know how we can do that, with good conscience.

I know there are powerful special interests that have personal stakes in maintaining the monopoly that they currently have. They do not want any kind of competition to upset what they have going. But frankly, the special interests are not the children's interests.

I just have to ask my colleagues not to block the schoolhouse door from the kids who do not have access to the educational opportunities that they deserve.

I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) for offering this amendment, and I urge all my colleagues to think about all those kids that are in schools that are failing. There are great public schools, but we know there are a lot of schools that are not working. There are a lot of kids that are not getting the education they need and deserve. This amendment would help the kids who need that help the most. I would like to urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER).

Mr. BLUMENAUER. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in yielding time to me, Mr. Chairman.

There has been a lot of talk on the floor about access; but unlike public schools, which serve all children, private schools are not obligated to accept any student. Students that are the most vulnerable and the more difficult and expensive to educate are left out.

In fact, the Department of Education report shows that if required to accept special needs students, 85 percent of the private schools said they would not even participate in a voucher program. It is wrong to divert critical funding from our public schools, especially when all children will not have equal access.

Now, in the areas, the cities that have had voucher programs like Milwaukee and Cleveland, the effectiveness has been inconclusive, at best, in terms of the results for the student achievement. However, what these cities have shown is that vouchers have led to greater class and race segregation in the classrooms, they are draining significant financial resources from public schools, and are primarily serving students already in the private school system.

This committee has labored to provide more accountability and more public school choice. It is a dramatic step backward to adopt voucher amendments. I strongly urge the House to reject them both.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that each side have the debate time extended by 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER).

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the ArmeY school choice amendment. I will tell the Members why. As Members of Congress, we already have private school choice, that is, if our children are trapped in a failing public school, we have the resources to get them out.

Why is it that the D.C. public schools are not good enough for the children of Al Gore and Bill Clinton, but somehow they are good enough for the low-income African American kids trapped in these failing schools? It defies common sense and logic.

This is not a complex issue at all. The opponents of school choice say it will bankrupt the public schools. The supporters of school choice say no, it will cause public schools to improve. Who is right there?

All I can tell the Members is that in Florida in 1998, we passed almost the identical law under Governor Jeb Bush. What happened as a result? We went from 78 F-rated schools to only four F-rated schools. One of the schools in my district, Orlo Vista, went from 30 percent of the kids passing the standardized test to 79 percent of the kids passing. Another school district, Dixon Elementary, went from 28 percent of the kids passing to 94 percent in 1 year. It improved public schools by competition.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the ArmeY school choice amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. CLAY).

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment being offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY). At a time when public schools are struggling to rebuild antiquated and crumbling school facilities and deal with a record enrollment of over 52 million students, we should not be considering proposals that divert scarce taxpayer dollars from our public school systems to subsidize private and religious schools.

While school vouchers may benefit a small minority of children who have the option of attending a private or parochial school, school vouchers will ultimately condemn the vast majority of our children to an inferior education as a result of the shift in tax dollars from public education to private.

This voucher proposal provides a select few a way out of the public school system while abandoning the vast majority of our children to underfunded and overcrowded schools. The hardest hit will be low-income, inner-city children who are already suffering from a lack of quality educational opportunity.

Rather than defunding public schools, we need to be reinvesting in public schools. Our children's future success in the Information Age will depend on their ability to receive a quality education, and school vouchers are a nonanswer to that challenge.

□ 1230

School vouchers are an attack against public education and an attack against our children. I strongly urge all of my colleagues to vote against this amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the ArmeY amendment, which restores all private school choice provisions back into H.R. 1. We are about to start testing our schools to gauge their success at educating our children. But what is the impetus for them to change if parents cannot take their children to better schools?

Many of America's children are stuck in failing schools and are being deprived of a better future because they have nowhere else to go. This amendment provides the means for parents to rescue their children from failing schools and send them to institutions that will successfully equip them for the future.

School choice is the heart of this educational reform, and it is successful as Milwaukee's school choice program has proven. Yet opponents of school choice are kowtowing to teacher unions and thus sacrificing the future of our children on the altar of politics.

Support the ArmeY amendment and rescue our children from failing schools that are depriving them of successful lives.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, a sound public school system is the backbone of our Nation, and it is the way to prepare all children for the high-skill, high-wage jobs that will ensure America's leadership in the world marketplace and will prevent at the same time dependency on welfare here at home.

Public education is the backbone of our country. It is why we are a great Nation. Public education is available to all. It does not discriminate, and it must be strengthened, not weakened.

Why is it that voucher supporters go on and on about our poor-performing public schools and do not have a plan to make all schools the best in the world? Instead, they support vouchers that take precious education dollars out of our public school system and give them to private and religious schools.

I have no quarrel with private schools, but we cannot forget that private schools are allowed to self-select their student body, while public schools educate all students.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to speak up for public education in America. Sure, it is not perfect. Democratic amendments would have helped in this bill, amendments that were not made in order. These amendments would have improved the public school system by reducing class size and repairing old school buildings.

This amendment does not improve public education. It should be defeated. If it passes, then H.R. 1 must be defeated.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the only provision that would offer hope to low-income children trapped in failing schools.

The underlying bill will provide, in my opinion, only marginal improvement, if any, to public education.

Public schools are a monopoly, and they face little to no consequences for failure.

If I brought a bill to this floor proposing we put restaurants and supermarkets in the control of the government, nobody would support it, because everybody knows quality would go down.

We have a serious quality problem in the public education system in many of our poor neighborhoods and inner cities, and we are going to just throw a little bit more money at it; a little bit of competition would go much, much further to help the problem.

We have seen what happened in Florida with Governor Jeb Bush's A+ program. We need to have it throughout our own whole country. It is the best hope for poor families trapped in failing school systems. It is not a little more testing, a little more money.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BACA).

Mr. BACA. Mr. Chairman, I stand in strong opposition to this voucher educational amendment. We have the responsibility to educate every one of our children. We have the responsibility to make sure that all of our children have access to education and not to deny children.

This does not guarantee that a child will have access to private schools. What it will do, it will simply drain our resources from those schools most in need of help, while providing minimum benefits to students.

It will raid the system, bleeding and hemorrhaging, when we should be funding education at the highest level. I say we have that responsibility to make sure that every child receive that education. We owe it to our children.

This voucher system will not guarantee that. There are different standards that are being proposed. Standards that are being proposed to the public schools that are asking us to give a test; at the private schools, they will not be held.

When we talk about accountability, there will be accountability in our public schools. When we talk about accountability in our private schools, there will not be accountability.

When we say that the parents have accountability, parents have the same accountability to be involved in our public schools, to make sure that our public schools are the best schools in the systems. We have that responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I urge everyone to vote against the voucher system because we want to make sure that every child has access and ability to go to school and learn and be all they want, and it can only happen by providing assistance, helping our schools become a lot better.

Let us help our public schools. Let us improve our public schools. Let us get involved with public schools. Let us make them the best. Let us make sure that everybody has the same quality of life to enjoy, to be all they want to be, and we can only do that by affording that every child has access to our schools.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY), the majority leader, for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of this amendment. I have no doubt that every Member of this body, Mr. Chairman, wants to improve education for every child in America. I know people have devoted their lives to try to achieve that goal, and there is no doubt that there are many great educators, teachers, principals across the country who want nothing but the best for our kids.

Just a couple of days ago I was on PS 3 on Staten Island, a great school, great kids, you can see the enthusiasm, not only in themselves and their eyes, but the teachers who want the best for those kids. But that is not the issue. The issue is not those kids. The issue is not getting access to good schools, because that is what we want and we guarantee.

The issue that you have to ask yourself or present to yourself is, if your child is going to a failing school day after day, year after year, and I want to change that and someone tells you you cannot, that your pride and joy, your child, is forced to endure, this offers hope.

This tells those low-income families out there that they have a choice; that they now have an opportunity; that they now will have freedom; and that they can now get a better education where they are not getting it now.

The bottom line here, Mr. Chairman, to those families who have little or no hope and are forced to endure, the families who are working, the parents who have two and three jobs just to pay a mortgage or the rent or to pay the car bill, they have no choice; all we are saying is give those families some hope. Give them that opportunity to send that child to a better school.

I do not know what is so radical about that. What is so bad about that? What is so un-American about that? If anything, Mr. Chairman, I think what indeed is American is to provide freedom to those who do not have it right now.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. RIVERS), a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Ms. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, as a former school board member, I rise in opposition to this amendment and to the contention that a voucher program will improve public schools.

Two hundred or 300 years ago in this country, we had a practice, a medical practice called bleeding. And the way it worked was when someone got sick, we would put leeches on the body and let blood be taken out. If they did not get better, we added more leeches and more leeches and took out more and more blood. Not surprisingly, not many patients got better.

Now, this procedure was done with all the best of intentions, but a lot of patients died, and finally the procedure was abandoned. What finally helped patients move forward was new technologies and new treatments.

We devoted effort and resources that ultimately produced pharmaceutical breakthroughs. We developed a knowledge of preventive behavior, things like better nutrition and healthier lifestyles.

Mr. Chairman, instead of bleeding the public school patient dry and condemning it to never getting better, we should do with education as we did in medicine and devote our resources to new technologies, new intervention models and preventive programs like Head Start, title I and teacher instruction. After all, we want our patient to live.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

Ms. HART. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment, and I find it interesting that those who claim to support the children and have an interest in the children are standing up here today in support of a system, they are standing up here in support of a system called the public school system. Unfortunately, it is a very inconsistent system.

My goal, and I think the goal of those who support this amendment, is to support the children, to give the children the best opportunity to have the tools that they have been given by God to be developed as much as they can be.

If their parents believed that they can be developed better in a different school, other than the one that they live in, then they should have that opportunity. This is America. This is the country where parents and families should have the ultimate decision and opportunity to decide how best to use their resources and to succeed.

We spend a lot of money on our public schools; and, unfortunately, the one that seems to be failing the most are the ones on which we spend the most dollars. We would actually save the taxpayers' money and save the children if we would direct a small portion of that money towards a school choice voucher.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. I support the children, and I believe my colleagues who support this amendment do as well.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. The whole purpose of our debate on this bill, H.R. 1, is to reform and improve the public school system.

We have spent a lot of time in the last few minutes talking about the failing schools and how by a voucher system we are going to improve the failing schools because we will essentially give parents the choice to get out.

What is wrong with the whole system is that once we identify the failing schools, we do not provide enough resources.

I argue that the tests that we are going to now require of these schools is simply going to target the schools that are failing with more bad news and insufficient resources to help them build back up and to becoming adequate school systems. The whole purpose of the Congress ought not to be in a punitive stance to try to punish these schools. Listen, this is tax dollars we are talking about, Federal tax dollars, that are going into our targeted schools that need help.

Why should the taxpayers of America be sitting here saying that the Congress ought to be giving away their tax dollars to private schools? That is the issue. If we have public tax dollars to improve our school systems, it ought to be designed to pour money into the failing schools, give them qualified teachers, give them the resources they need, buy them the textbooks, improve the school structure, so it is a friendly environment for the students, give them the technology that they need, provide them with the total resources of support.

That is what we need in order to reform our system, not to send these dollars out to private schools where there will be absolutely no accountability.

□ 1245

I oppose this amendment because it is a cop-out. It is a surrender. We ought to be saying we are committed, as the President has said, no child will be left behind in the public school system. Keep them there. Improve these failing schools. Add the resources so that every child can have real opportunity in America.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK).

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to help dispel this myth that school choice is going to destroy our public schools.

The evidence shows that existing schools, the programs that participate in them, whether they are vouchers, charter schools or tax credits, have had a significant and positive impact on both the public schools and the children that they assist.

Time and again, from Wisconsin to Florida, schools and cities with choice have larger improvements on their standardized test scores than similar schools that do not face competition. While choice gives parents the ability to choose where their children go to school, it also gives failing schools the incentive to improve.

This is a win-win situation for all children, but especially poor children who do not have the means to switch to better schools as some parents do today.

I believe that school choice has, at its heart, just one simple idea, and that is quality education for everyone. As the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the speaker before me, just said, no child should be left behind. It is a concept that I will continue to work for as a public official, as a parent, and as a grandparent.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this worthwhile amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, how much time do we have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has 6 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) has 5½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS).

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to note first that this amendment represents blazing guns of an ambush of what was supposed to have been a bipartisan compromise. This is a partisan ambush, this amendment.

We agreed several years ago that a good alternative to public schools, if one wanted to test them out and try to make them more accountable or more innovative, was charter schools. Charter schools was supposed to be the alternative, and not vouchers.

Vouchers are a waste. Vouchers are fraud really. It misleads parents in the most frustrating situations. Nobody wants vouchers except frustrated parents in inner-city communities who want to have a better education for their children, and they have been sold this bill of goods. They have been swindled into thinking that vouchers are the answer.

Most of them think that vouchers are going to pay the full tuition. They are not told that vouchers will only pay a small part of it. I think at most vouchers, under this system, will be able to contribute maximum of $1,500 in some situations, in most situations less. Tuition is far greater than that. The parents do not know.

There was a woman who came before the committee who testified from New York. She thought she would get $8,000 per child through the voucher system because New York estimates it costs $8,000 per child in the public school system. She will not get anything near $8,000 if her child is in this voucher system. It is a fraud. It is a swindle. Frustrated parents are being victimized by high-pressure publicity about vouchers.

The best way to go is charter schools. That is the noble compromise. Charter schools. But they do not want to go that way because charter schools need money for building and construction. They need the money for capitalization. They need the same kind of effort that we need for public schools. They need resources.

This is a shortcut to get away from providing adequate resources for public education. We want to make everybody accountable except the States, the cities, and the Federal Government to provide resources. This is not the answer. Resources are the answer. We should be honest with parents and tell them that.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the majority leader for yielding, but even more so for bringing this amendment to us.

As everyone here knows, this portion of the President's plan was taken out of the bill by the Committee on Education and the Workforce. What the majority leader is proposing to do here is restore what really is the heart and core of the President's Leave No Child Behind proposal.

In fact, if one looks closely at the way the President had proposed even the testing provisions, those testing provisions are predicated on this particular provision that is here before us now. Because real accountability is a matter, not of government taking tests and telling us what the answers are, but it is a matter of empowering the parents who love their children more than anybody here in this city, and by empowering those parents to place their child, when armed with the data derived from testing, into a school that earns their confidence and offers more promise and more hope for their child. That is what we should be about.

Mr. Chairman, just the latest reports crossed our desk within the last few days. Now, there are some who I suppose would not want to read them for the data that is contained. These are reports about voucher programs that exist in a variety of cities in New York and Dayton and D.C.

Here is what the latest report says: "After 2 years, African American students who used a voucher to enroll in a private school scores 6.3 percentage points higher than African American students who remained in public schools." That is in New York.

If one goes to Charlotte, here are the results in Charlotte: "After 1 year, the results show that students who used a scholarship to attend a private school scored 5.9 percentile points higher on the math section of the ITBS than comparable students who remained in public schools. Choice students scored 6.5 percentile points higher than their public school counterparts in reading after 1 year."

In the District of Columbia, the results are also the same. The report says that the results "represented a net positive swing of 17 percentile points from 1 year to the next. An additional year of private schooling, in other words, is estimated to produce a staggering gain of about 0.9 standard deviation."

Remarkable gains in academic achievement from students who attend private schools with the help of vouchers, much the way the author of this amendment envisions.

Then there is the other report that crossed our desk. I imagine most Members did not want to read this. This is the one from the Program on Education Policy and Governance at Harvard University. This report suggests that the most obvious explanation for these findings is that an accountability system with vouchers as the sanction for repeated failure really motivates schools to improve. That is, the prospect of competition and education reveals competitive effects that are normally observed in the marketplace. Free market schooling is a good idea, and it should be applied to those who suffer from the worst effects of failing schools.

This is the core provision of the President's bill. Failure to restore it really leaves little for us to support.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair advises Members that the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member, has the right to close on this debate.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Chairman, I want all my colleagues to hear and understand that, make no mistake about it, this is a make-or-break amendment. It is a make-or-break amendment as to whether all children in America will get access to a quality education or not. It is a make-or-break amendment as to whether we are going to have a truly bipartisan bill or whether this is going to be straight down party lines and the same old partisan thing.

I urge strong opposition to this amendment for two very important reasons: it is bad policy, and it is so deceptive that it borders on the fraudulent. It is bad policy because this amendment would propose to strip public resources away from public schools and give them to private institutions. I think that is wrong.

It is deceptive because, right out here on the House steps, I was asked by someone, Why will you not support vouchers? I want to take a voucher and go to a private school. I asked that person, Well, are you in poverty? Because if you are not, then you are not going to be eligible for this program.

I want my colleagues to know something else. Under the program as authorized, one would get $1,500. Under the program that is probably appropriate, one is going to get $500 or $600. That will pay for perhaps 10 percent of a parochial education. It would probably pay for less than 5 percent of a fully loaded private education in my hometown.

It is very, very deceptive to think that this measure will create any real choices for the people that we are talking about today. It is deceptive. It is wrong.

I urge all my colleagues to maintain the best bipartisan bill we can and oppose this amendment today.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, we are a great Nation. We should be so proud of ourselves. We have taken so seriously as a Nation, as a government, as State governments, local governments, local school boards, principals, superintendents, teachers, and parents our sacred trust. The most important thing we do in our culture is teach our children.

It is so important to us, we spend hundreds of billions of dollars providing for our children's education. We spend hundreds of millions of man hours, legislating, dictating, describing, proscribing, mandating, determining what these little ones will get in the classroom, organizing our unions, administering our schools, electing our school boards, writing our regulations to make sure that we know that they will get exactly what we think is best for their children.

It works out pretty good for most of us. There is a couple of ugly spots here, 6,000 chronically failed schools registered with the Department of Education right now, 6,000 schools that never seem to get it right, 6,000 schools worth of children where all of our attention, all our billions, all our mandating and proscribing, legislating and posturing is not doing them much good. But they are there. We try not to notice that part.

See, Mr. Chairman, there is an awful lot of school choice going on in America. Talk to any relocation office in any business in America, and they will tell us, when they decide between Dallas, Texas and Chicago, Illinois, the schools available for their employees is one of their first and most important considerations. It makes a difference where we create the jobs, how good the schools are, and we move on that basis.

Talk to any realtor, and they will tell us one of the first things mom and dad ask about when they look about moving in a neighborhood is what are the schools like here, what are the schools like there. They never choose to buy the house, when they are free to choose, where the schools are bad. They always buy them where the schools are good.

Good for you, mom and dad. We love our babies. When we can, we do choose the better school. Talk to an awful lot of people that have got the ways and means, and they take their children out of that public school. They may put them in private school. Lord, have mercy, they put them in religious schools. Holy mackerel. Can one imagine a government that will tolerate people putting their children where they are teaching the Bible? But they do it if they can afford it because it is important to them, and they love their babies, and they want it done right, and that is what they believe.

Sometimes they get so frustrated with the alternatives, they teach their children at home. They do it. They are free to choose. We applaud them. Well, we have got some people here that just do not seem to have that good job, the college education that allows them to teach their own children, the opportunity for a better chance to move. They are stuck, and they are stuck in those schools that are registered with the Department of Education right now, as they have been for 10 years, as schools that are chronic failures.

What we have said with this amendment, for the most distressed children in those most distressed schools, take your title I money which is allocated for distressed students, and let the parents find the better place. We walked away from these children in every regard. We never fix those schools. They are always there.

This bill says, Mom, after your baby has been there for 3 years, you have a chance to do what the rich folks do. Move your child.

Where is the heart? We give a lot of respect to ourselves. We brag about our good intentions. We give a great deal of deference to the unions. We pay a lot of regard to the school board, and we respect and love the teachers. But in the end, there is not a school in America that is about any one of them. The school is not about the kid. The school is about nothing.

□ 1300

I tell my colleagues that there is no mother in America that should be made to say to her baby, look, I know that school will never get it right, you have been there for 3 years and it is not getting any better, but you have got to go back. To say to your child, I know you had an act of violence committed against you in that school, I know you are frightened, but you have got to go back.

I would not say that. There is nobody in this Chamber that would say that to their child. But here we are saying, if we vote against this amendment, we are telling that heartbroken mother that has to look at our baby and say, honey, go back and make the best of it, because that is all I am able to do, that we have nothing to offer her.

Now, I know that mother, I have talked to that mother. I have seen that mother when she has looked at her baby and said, honey, there is nothing I can do, I just cannot find it. And I have seen that mother when she has gotten just a little tiny scholarship, one that did not pay it all but one that said to her, if I get a second job, I can make up the difference and I can put my baby in a better school.

And I have seen that mother look at her baby with the love that mothers have for their children, and I have seen her say, honey, we have just gone from despair to hope because somebody is willing to share.

I do not ask much from this Chamber. I am not asking for a great deal. I am just saying for that most concerned mother, that most distressed child, stuck in the most failed school, chronically, for 3 years, and feels frightened, scared, neglected and abused, that today has no hope whatsoever, give them that chance to choose as we have chosen, to take their baby from harm's way and put their baby in front of a ray of hope with loving teachers.

And if those teachers be nuns, that is fine with me. Because the nuns know something that most of the public schools should learn, and that is, that if you love a child, you can discipline a child; and if you love and discipline a child, you can teach a child; and you can grow from a baby, boy, a man, who will be happy and successful in their own life and a blessing in the lives of others.

This amendment is about that dream. If there is a mother in this Chamber who does not hold that dream for their baby first, then let that mother vote "no" on this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, America does something that no other country in the world does: It makes a commitment to a child born in this Nation that we will provide them a public education. A free education. We have been doing it throughout most of the history of this country, and we have done a remarkable job. Not a perfect job, not a job that is acceptable to all of us, but we have done a remarkable job. No other country in history has attempted to do what we do here, to take children from any background, to take children of any status and say we commit to them that we are going to provide them an education.

What has been the result of that basic foundation of American society? The basic foundation of American society. The result is the greatest economy in the history of the world; more patents, more inventions than any country in the world, the freest country in the world, the greatest democracy in the world, a public discourse, and more tolerance than any other country in the world. That is not to suggest the landscape in America is perfect; that it does not have its problems; that we do not have our pockets of trouble. We do. We do.

But to come along now and to suggest that we are going to start draining the resources from the public school education system in this country so that we can hold out to somebody the idea that they are going to go and take that $500, and they are going to get a private school education is simply to mislead those individuals. It is simply to mislead those individuals. The harm it does is in draining the resources that are necessary.

We recognize in this legislation, the President of the United States recognizes in this legislation, Democrats recognize in this legislation, and Republicans recognize in this legislation that there are schools that are failing. We make a commitment to fix the failing schools; not run away from them, not leave children behind in those schools, but to fix those schools. That is our obligation. That is the bedrock of this Nation. That is what distinguishes us in so many ways. We should not give up on that now and turn tail and run.

In this bill we provide the resources so that we can fix those schools. That is what this President has said he wanted to do. This Congress took him at his word. Those resources were put into this legislation. And now we are going to find out, because governors are on notice and school boards are on notice and parents are on notice.

We should not give up on a system that has done something that no other country in the world has done, and has given us what America enjoys and benefits from today.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 16 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 16 OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 16.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 16 offered by Mr. ARMEY:

After part C of title IV of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended by section 421 of the bill, add the following:

PART D—EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FUND

SEC. 431. EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FUND.

Title IV is amended by adding at the end the following:

“PART D—EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITY FUND

“SEC. 4411. PURPOSE.

“The purpose of this part is to determine the effectiveness of school choice in improving the academic achievement of disadvantaged students and the overall quality of public schools and local educational agencies.

“SEC. 4412. PROGRAM AUTHORIZED.

“The Secretary is authorized to make competitive awards to eligible entities to carry out and evaluate, through contracts or grants, not more than 5 research projects that demonstrate how school choice options increase the academic achievement of students, schools, and local educational agencies.

“SEC. 4413. ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.

“For purposes of this part an eligible entity is—

- “(1) a State educational agency;
- “(2) a county agency;
- “(3) a municipal agency;
- “(4) a local educational agency;
- “(5) a nonprofit corporation; or
- “(6) a consortia thereof.

“SEC. 4414. APPLICATIONS.

“Each eligible entity desiring an award under this part shall submit an application to the Secretary that shall include—

“(1) a description of the proposed research project, including a designation from which local educational agency or agencies eligible students will be selected to participate in a choice program;

“(2) a description of the annual costs of the project;

“(3) a description of the research design that the eligible entity will employ in carrying out the project;

“(4) a description of the project evaluation that will be conducted by an independent third party entity, including—

“(A) the name and qualifications of the independent entity that will conduct the evaluation; and

“(B) a description of how the evaluation will measure the academic achievement of students participating in the program, parental satisfaction and the effect of the project on the schools and agencies designated in paragraph (1);

“(5) a description of how the eligible entity will ensure the participation of students selected for the control group;

“(6) a description of the assessment that the eligible entity will use to assess annually the progress of participants in the research project in grades 3 through 8 in mathematics and reading and how it is comparable to assessments used by the agency or agencies described under paragraph (1);

“(7) an assurance that the eligible entity will assess all students that are participating in the program or in the control group at the beginning of the project;

“(8) an assurance that the eligible entity will report annually to the Secretary on the impact of the project on student achievement, including a discussion of the meaning and an attestation of validity of the achievement data;

“(9) an assurance that, if the number of students applying to participate in the project is greater than the number of students the project can serve, participants will be selected by lottery;

“(10) a description of how the amount that will be provided directly to students for tuition, fees, transportation, or supplemental services will be determined;

“(11) an assurance that schools participating under this part will abide by the nondiscrimination requirements set forth in section 4419;

“(12) an assurance that eligible students receiving assistance under this part will not be defined by reference to religion and that grants will be allocated on the basis of neutral, secular criteria that neither favor nor disfavor religion, and will be made available to children attending secular and nonsecular institutions on a nondiscriminatory basis; and “(13) an assurance that no private school will be required to participate in the project without its consent.

“SEC. 4415. PRIORITIES.

“In awarding grants under this program, the Secretary shall give priority to applications that—

“(1) provide students and families with the widest range of educational options;

“(2) target resources to students and families that lack the financial resources to take advantage of available educational options;

“(3) are of sufficient size to have a significant impact on the public and private schools of the community that the project serves;

“(4) propose using rigorous methodologies and third party evaluators with experience in evaluating school choice proposals; and “(5) propose serving students of varying age and grade levels.

"SEC. 4416. USE OF FUNDS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A grantee may reserve up to 10 percent of its award for research and evaluation activities, of which not more than 2 percent may be used for administrative purposes.

"(b) GRANTS TO STUDENTS.—A grantee shall use at least 90 percent of its award to provide grants to eligible students, who shall use the grants to—

"(1) pay the eligible educational expenses, including tuition, fees, and transportation expenses required to attend the school of their choice, but in no event more than $5,000 per student; or

"(2) purchase supplemental educational services.

"(c) ASSISTANCE.—All grants provided to students under this part shall be considered assistance to students rather than to schools.

"SEC. 4417. ELIGIBLE STUDENTS.

"For purposes of the activities funded under this part, an eligible student is defined as a student who—

"(1) is eligible for a free or reduced-price lunch subsidy under the National School Lunch program; and

"(2) attended a public elementary or secondary school or was not yet of school age in the year preceding participation in this program.

"SEC. 4418. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Each grantee receiving an award under this program shall, beginning with the second year of the project, report annually to the Secretary regarding—

"(1) the activities carried out during the preceding 12 months with program funds; and

"(2) the results of the assessments given to students participating in the program and students selected for the control group.

"(b) PERFORMANCE REPORTS.—In addition, each grantee shall, in the third year of the research project, report annually to the Secretary regarding—

"(1) the academic performance of students participating in the project; and

"(2) parental satisfaction; and

"(3) changes in the overall performance and quality of public and private elementary and secondary schools affected by the project, as well as other indicators such as teacher quality, innovative reforms, or special programs.

"(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees an annual report on the findings of the reports submitted under subsections (a) and (b), and include the comments of the independent review panel in accordance with section 4420(c)(2).

"SEC. 4419. NONDISCRIMINATION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A private school participating in the scholarship program under this part shall not discriminate on the basis of race, color, national origin, or sex in carrying out the provisions of this part.

"(b) APPLICABILITY AND CONSTRUCTION WITH RESPECT TO DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF SEX.—

"(1) APPLICABILITY.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, subsection (a) shall not apply to a private school that is controlled by a religious organization if the application of subsection (a) is inconsistent with the religious tenets of the private school.

"(2) SINGLE-SEX SCHOOLS, CLASSES, OR ACTIVITIES.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to prevent a parent from choosing, or a private school from offering, a single-sex school, class, or activity.

"(3) CONSTRUCTION.—With respect to discrimination on the basis of sex, nothing in subsection (a) shall be construed to require any person, or public or private entity to provide or pay, or to prohibit any such person or entity from providing or paying, for any benefit or service, including the use of facilities, related to an abortion. Nothing in the preceding sentence shall be construed to permit a penalty to be imposed on any person or individual because such person or individual is seeking or has received any benefit or service related to a legal abortion.

"(c) CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to alter or modify the provisions of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act or the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

"(d) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to prevent any eligible institution which is operated by, supervised by, controlled by, or connected to, a religious organization from employing, admitting, or giving preference to, persons of the same religion to the extent determined by such institution to promote the religious purpose for which the private school is established or maintained.

"(2) SECTARIAN PURPOSES.—Nothing in this part shall be construed to prohibit the use of funds made available under this part for sectarian educational purposes, or to require a private school to remove religious art, icons, scripture, or other symbols.

"SEC. 4420. INDEPENDENT REVIEW PANEL.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish an independent review panel to advise the Secretary on technical and methodological issues and in overseeing the activities funded under this part.

"(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The Secretary shall appoint members of the independent review panel from among qualified individuals who are—

"(A) specialists in school choice research, as well as experts in statistics, evaluation, research, and assessment; and

"(B) other individuals with technical expertise who will contribute to the overall rigor and quality of the evaluations.

"(c) POWERS.—The independent review panel shall consult with and advise the Secretary—

"(1) to ensure that the evaluations funded under this part adhere to the highest possible standards of quality with respect to research design and statistical analysis; and

"(2) to evaluate and comment on the degree to which annual reports submitted in accordance with section 4418 meet the requirements under paragraph (1) with such comments included with the report submitted to the appropriate Congressional committees.

"SEC. 4421. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"There are authorized to be appropriated $50,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each of the 4 succeeding fiscal years."

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me just say, Mr. Chairman, that we will have the votes on both these amendments later. I fully expect and hope with all my heart that this Chamber will have the heart to pass amendment No. 15. But should this Chamber simply not rise to that occasion, if we should find a lack of love in this body with respect to that amendment, I would offer this amendment.

This amendment solves the concerns we have about the money and introduces $50 million worth of new money to set up five demonstration programs where school systems can voluntarily decide would they like to try a choice program, a scholarship program, and families within those school districts can voluntarily decide would they like to participate. The amendment allows a chance to study the success of children who have this opportunity, to see if they do better when their parents exercise that influence over their educational life.

We have had a lot of debate. I have heard an awful lot of opinion. There are a great many people that oppose the opportunities of freedom and choice in public education, who think my arguments are full of hot air; and there are a lot of arguments I heard against my great ideas that I think are hogwash. But in an academic setting, the logical thing to do is put it to the test. Let us have five small demonstration projects, $50 million worth of new money, and an opportunity to see the one question that we need to see: Does it work for the children? Because in the end, Mr. Chairman, it does not matter, except that it works for the children.

Again, I will say if education in America is not for the children, education in America is lost. Do we dare, do we dare test an idea on behalf of children in America, an idea that says, little one, we dare to respect your parents?

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE).

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the previous amendment and to this small $50 million project. Vouchers are simply bad business. It is bad policy for our Nation's schools.

It is ironic that the sponsors of this legislation are fighting for voucher provisions while the title of the bill is Leave No Child Behind. If we take dollars continually out of the public school system, we are going to leave many, many children behind.

My objection to the voucher plans are multilayered and logical. First, there is an important question of accountability for the public expenditure of public money.

Secondly, the dollar amount that the President requests would average about only $1,500 per student to spend on alternative education. This is far from enough money. We would be better off fixing the schools that are failing so that all of the students would benefit, not just a handful here and a handful there.

Third, the results from current voucher plans are mixed. I heard the other side talk about how great they were and everybody were winners. For example, a State-sponsored independent review of Cleveland's voucher program found there was no significant advancement made between the students who used the vouchers and students who did not. So this panacea that we are talking about may not be what we hear on this other side.

Lastly, a serious question of the constitutionality of using public money for religious schools surfaces in this debate, Mr. Chairman. We would be much better off using this time to discuss proven, effective ways to educate our children, like the Harriet Tubman School in Newark that I know about, and the Ann Street School in Newark that are public schools that are working so that we can lower class size, improve teaching quality, and have more Federal resources for improving the physical structure of our schools. We want to have school modernization.

As a former teacher, I strongly oppose vouchers.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LIPINSKI), a cosponsor of the amendment.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the majority leader for yielding me this time, and I rise today in strong support of the ArmeY-DeLay-Watts-Lipinski amendment to H.R. 1. This amendment creates a school choice demonstration research program that would research how effective school choice is in improving the academic performance of low-income disadvantaged students.

I first became interested in school choice in 1979, when, as chairman of the Chicago City Council's Education Committee, African American Aldermen brought this issue to my attention. They told me that the only true way to reform the poorly performing schools was to provide for school choice.

The heightened national popularity for school choice has led more and more school districts and more and more State legislatures to consider various parental choice proposals. This amendment would allow five educational agencies to voluntarily participate in school choice research programs. I stress that the amendment builds upon the success of current school choice programs, not by taking funds away from public schools, but by authorizing new funds.

This amendment will allow some students to move from failing schools to safe and academically sound schools. I do sincerely believe that the competition that choice will provide will motivate the public school system to do a better job across the board for the well-being of all students.

Vote for this amendment and my colleagues will be able to bear witness to disadvantaged students succeeding because of school choice.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS).

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the voucher proposal that has just been addressed, and also to the pilot proposals that are with us right now.

We have to ask ourselves why would we have a pilot program? And when we have pilot programs, we do want to demonstrate that there is merit to them. And we often want to demonstrate that there is merit in going beyond a particular community or a particular charismatic leader who puts together a program.

□ 1315

Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to my colleagues that if we are really trying to bring the pilot to scale that is being proposed here today, we have to look at the communities and the communities in which they will realistically be brought to scale.

If I can offer San Diego for a moment, we surveyed the number of private school slots available in San Diego, and we surprisingly found a realistically good number: 1,666 slots. Out of that, 1,300 were religious schools. The rest were identified as nonreligious, but we are looking at a unified school district of 132,000 students. Yes, it sounds innocent to have a pilot program; but would we ever be able to bring that up to scale? You can probably demonstrate that it has merit. I do not question that. You can do that in select areas.

Mr. Chairman, we are trying to go beyond that. We are trying to truly leave no child behind. Bringing a pilot program to scale in communities that really do not have the resources is unrealistic; and I believe it is unfair to the population that we are trying to reach.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment be extended by 5 minutes on each side.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Without objection, each side will control 5 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS).

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong, strong, strong support of the ArmeY-DeLay-Watts-Lipinski amendment to H.R. 1. Given the importance of education to our Nation's future prosperity and security, I think it is vital, absolutely vital, to try new, competitive approaches to improving the education of all schools, but particularly public education in this country. If we want to be sure we are leaving no children behind, we must at the very least research the effectiveness of school choice programs.

We need to study whether they improve the academic performance of low-income disadvantaged students; or whether they do not. In my judgment, instituting a national school choice pilot program is a modest but important step. This program in no way reduces our current commitment to public education. I believe it enhances it.

For years Congress has debated the benefit of school voucher programs, yet there is insufficient evidence on the cost-benefit of these programs. Today we have an opportunity to establish five demonstration programs that allow us to measure the performance of students who receive these choice scholarships.

Why would anyone oppose an opportunity to scientifically measure choice benefit programs? Why would we oppose it? Measure it. We may be right; we may be wrong. Measure it. We need this amendment to pass in order to have this opportunity.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA).

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendments on vouchers. I speak as a representative of South Texas, a representative who has served on local school boards, on the Texas State Board of Education, and now here in the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

I want to talk about the myths and facts about school vouchers. School vouchers are going to hurt the vast majority of kids who get left behind in the public schools. I am talking about students in special population programs that include bilingual education students, limited English proficiency students. I am talking about migrant students who need special programs. I am talking about the challenged and disabled students and the gifted and talented students not given challenging programs and trained teachers in their field, teachers who are not teaching in their major of study.

There are many myths about vouchers, and in the area that I come from in South Texas, $1,500 does not pay a year of private school attendance in the private schools that I have in South Texas.

Many of these schools charge tuition fees far more than the $1,500 average that is being offered. The American public has consistently opposed voucher proposals. Not one single statewide voucher proposal has passed. One does not need to be a nuclear scientist to figure this out. Every poll in the past 30 years has shown that the public is opposed to vouchers.

When President Bush came in, he listened to hundreds of leaders in education throughout the country; and he learned very quickly that vouchers were not the answer to raise the level of education attainment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues that we all get together and oppose the two amendments regarding vouchers.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. WATTS), a sponsor of the amendment.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, 4 years ago I stood here on the floor of the House and voted for an amendment that would have given opportunity scholarships to parents whose kids were in failing schools. Regrettably, that did not pass.

I do not know how many boys and girls since then have been failed by poor schools. I do not know how many dropouts would be graduating today with a good education had those scholarships been there to help them.

Today we have an opportunity to offer parents a choice and students a chance. This amendment sets up five demonstration programs with parental choice which would help kids get out of violent and failing schools which have a monopoly on many of our children. Children in failing schools deserve better than the status quo.

Mr. Chairman, I remind my colleagues that their constituents support parental choice. Once more, African Americans overwhelmingly support parental choice, three out of four in some polls. So, too, should my colleagues on both sides of the aisle support the modest proposal to allow parents to choose what school works best for their children.

Frederick Douglass said, "Some people know the importance of education because they have it." He said, "I know the importance of education because I did not have it."

Let us not force some kids to come to that sad reality. Let us pass this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment, give parents a choice and give students a chance.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY).

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I heard the gentleman on the other side of the aisle refer to this money as new money. Well, this is not new money. This is money that is not being appropriated for the modernization of our schools, it is not being appropriated for smaller classrooms so there can be better discipline and the children can get more personal attention. It is not being appropriated for more teacher recruitment or mentoring or professional development so that all of the things that we know really would improve the education of our children in public schools could be done. Those are the things that work.

That is what my colleagues tell us vouchers will do, is get those kinds of circumstances, yet they are unwilling to make the commitment in our public schools to see that happen. They would rather privatize education.

Mr. Chairman, we have had privatized education before. It was pre-Horace Mann. What we got as a result was some very exclusive people that could afford an education and many who could not. One of my colleagues on the other side said the only hope for America is this voucher program passing.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is close to correct. What hope is in this country is a free public education for all Americans, whatever their social and economic background. That is where we ought to be focusing our attention. False hope is a solution that gives out too little money to pay for tuition, that selects only a few and gives them that too little money, that does not guarantee them a place in any particular school, that does not have them go to a school that has standards to which they are held. Just because at Yale the President is preaching mediocrity in education is a virtue does not mean we have to fulfill that promise here.

In 10 different voucher petitions across this country, the concept did not just get beat, it got hammered. When the American public understands that these voucher proposals do not pay for full tuition, do not guarantee them a school where they want to go, and does not fulfill the promise, they vote against it.

If we want hope for our children, let us make sure that all of our public schools have all of the resources they need to do the things that we know work: Modernize the buildings that they are in; give them smaller classrooms; give them good teachers with good recruitment and good professional development programs.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to reject this voucher proposal.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I have to ask my colleagues: What do we have to fear? This is a program of $50 million of new money, and the money will not come from any public schools, that says let us pick out five cities in America and let us give them a chance to try private school choice. And then let us study the issue. Let us study what happens in those five cities, and let us learn from it. That is all it is. It is very simple.

The bill that we have before us aims to improve public education. I think it is a bold plan. I think it will in fact improve public education. What do we have to fear in allowing five cities an opportunity to try private school choice to empower parents?

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOEHNER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TIERNEY. What do we have to lose by actually modernizing our schools? But my colleagues were not willing to do that. What do we have to lose by having more classrooms?

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the point is the bill we have before us will improve public schools. And we have got all types of innovations that will help public schools, but we should not fear this.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOEHNER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TIERNEY. I am still waiting to hear the answer. What does the gentleman fear about modernizing the public schools that exist? What does the gentleman fear about making smaller classrooms in the public schools that exist?

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, all of that will in fact happen under the bill that we have before us; but I do not think that we have anything to fear with an amendment like this.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I can answer the question what do we have to lose. Primarily what we have to lose is this country's basic commitment to the little red schoolhouse. That is what America was built on. As communities organized, they formulated the public community school. It opened the doors of opportunity.

And as the slaves were freed, and even before so, they knew that education was a key element to their success, and they moved themselves to the little red schoolhouses and other schoolhouses that were promoted by local governments. As immigrants came, they were able to improve their status in life as we opened the doors of education.

Mr. Chairman, what this legislation does, and what the Cox amendment does that wants to cut $3.5 billion, it takes away our serious commitment to education.

I believe in public schools and private schools. You can get a good education in private schools; but you can get a very good education in public schools. What we should be focusing on now is smaller class sizes, increased teacher salaries, and recognizing that every one of our children can learn.

Mr. Chairman, why not an amendment to increase parental involvement? Do not give up on your public schools. Get involved in the State boards of education and your local boards. Get involved in the local PTAs, but if you begin to dismantle the public school system, what we are built on, what the European greatness is built on, what the South American greatness is built on, we do not see them abandoning their public schools, then we begin to undermine and misrepresent to the American public that we can siphon off $2 and $3 and get a good education.

Mr. Chairman, I am offended by the advertisements that are on television that show that single parents can open the doors of opportunity for their children with a voucher worth about $10.

What we need to do is invest in our public schools: Build beautiful, brilliant public schools; recruit excellent teachers; have smaller class sizes, and again to analyze.

If we look at existing voucher programs, we can study all we want. The Milwaukee program exists. We do not need any pilot programs to know whether vouchers work. We need an actual commitment to closing the digital divide, of enhancing the teaching and the intellect of our young people, of putting them all in the same boat. When they are all in the same boat, that boat rises together.

Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed that we spend our time doing this. I know the intentions are good, but I believe our commitment to America's greatness is a commitment to America's public schools.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to public school vouchers because they are not the solution to fixing public schools. Vouchers divert scarce funds away from public schools—which 90% of all students in this country attend. Siphoning off limited public school funds from low-performing schools leaves the children in those schools with even fewer resources. Further, vouchers benefit those students already attending private schools. Almost no private schools have tuition rates lower than the amounts provided by vouchers.

Vouchers will only be an experiment, not something that we know will improve the education of our children. We need to understand what makes a school successful, and not simply assume that market forces of performance bonuses and penalties will make the necessary difference in our schools.

Those who look at what makes a good school, whether it is public or private, have noticed that they have a lot in common. A successful school has high academic standards and a challenging curriculum for all children; a safe and orderly environment; qualified teachers; and parent involvement.

If we want to improve our nation's schools, we should provide resources to reduce classroom size, facilitate academic training for teachers, create mental health clinics, and boost parent involvement in their child's education.

There is a long tradition in the United States that supports the notion of a free public education for all of our nation's children. By instituting school vouchers we would be placing a price tag on the cost of education for those in our society who are least able to afford the penalty.

I am a vocal advocate on the behalf of our nation's children, because they are also our nation's future. As leaders of this great nation must keep our focus on what is best for our children—by rejecting the idea of public vouchers.

School vouchers are not a fix for what is wrong with our nation's education system. School vouchers to some may seem like a relatively benign way to increase the options that poor parents have for educating their children. In fact, vouchers pose a serious threat to values that are vital to the health of American democracy. These programs subvert the constitutional principle of separation of church and state and threaten to undermine our system of public education.

The Houston Independent School District (HISD) is the largest public school system in Texas and the seventh largest in the United States. Our schools are dedicated to giving every student the best possible education through an intensive core curriculum and specialized, challenging instructional and career programs. HISD is working hard to become Houstonians' K–12 school system of choice, constantly improving and refining instruction and management to make them as effective, productive, and economical as possible.

As long as there exist a disparity in funding among school districts within states, and a disparity of education funding K–12 among the states there will continue to be disparities in the education of disadvantaged youth especially taking into consideration the socioeconomic limitations of these communities to augment the educational experience of their children. This must and should be acknowledged by the education reform legislation that we pass and send to the President's desk. We know the realities of education in the United States are that many children are left behind, not at the discretion of the teacher, school district, parent or child, but under the pressures presented by a lack of adequate funding and teacher training.

The fact that this bill is actually increasing the budget expenditure for education should not make us forget that the budgets for education in the past were woefully underfunded. This pattern of underfunding education has existed not only in the budget for education, but in the smaller specific appropriations measures designed to address reduced and free lunch, support the education of individuals with disabilities, and compensation for teachers.

I would like to encourage my colleagues to reject school vouchers for our nation's children and vote against any vouchers being added to this bill.

□ 1330

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO).

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, not too long ago a gentleman was testifying in front of a committee here in this Congress, a gentleman by the name of Al Shanker, late president of the AFT, American Federation of Teachers. When asked by the committee why the AFT was not doing more to help children, why was it not doing more to bring about reform, he said something that was very candid and was almost incredible. He said, when children start paying union dues, I will start representing the interests of children.

Now, everybody got upset about that. A lot of people attacked him. I said right on, because of course he was being very honest. That is exactly what the AFT and the NEA care about. They are unions.

Now, would it not be nice to have this debate framed on the basis of our true feelings about this issue and why we are going to vote one way or the other on vouchers, on school choice? Is it because we really have the interest of kids at heart, or is it because we know the system, the NEA, the AFT, the PTA, the NASB and all the other organizations I have listed there on that chart, we know they are opposed to vouchers but in our hearts do we not believe, every single one of us in here, in our hearts do we not believe that giving those kids an opportunity, a key to the lock that may be on the door to stop them from getting a good quality education, is where we should be? That is what we should be casting a vote on here, not the system.

Mr. Chairman, I have right here, this is title XX of the U.S. Code, 3,200 pages of school law that Federal Government has passed, and we are going to add another 1,000 pages to it pretty soon.

We are going to probably pass another part of this adding another 1,000 pages. All of it to do what? To tell schools how to be good schools, how to provide quality education; 4,000 pages of rules. This does not count the regulations. We could not even fill this room with all the regulations written about it when we could do one thing instead to actually provide true accountability, and that is to pass this one amendment. It could take the place of all the rest of this because we put accountability into the right hands, into the hands of parents. They will make the decision about what is the good school, not us.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SOLIS).

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition of the two vouchers proposals that are before us today. In our committee on the Committee on Education and the Workforce, we, I thought, came to an agreement where we were not going to put forward these kinds of projects. Obviously, this is not what is occurring before us today, and I am saddened because the people that I represent in my district, the 31st Congressional District, most of whom are low-income, bilingual, Asian and Latino students, are crying out right now for education as a priority.

No deja ningun estudiante detras (do not leave any student behind), and that means those children I represent in my district. Those children want better schools. They want smaller class size. They want parental involvement. Those initiatives are not before us in this education proposal, and I have to say that in my first year or first few months here as a Member of the committee I thought that perhaps there could be an agreement on a bipartisan level here, and I thought that we would be able to realize that reality here on the floor.

I see what is happening that somehow Members on the other side have become captive to another voice, and that voice is saying "deja estos ninos, dejalos." That means "leave these kids behind." And I am saying that the American public, the American public, those voters that I represent, do not want to be left behind. They want to see a better tomorrow. They want to see more funding for our schools that are crippled right now, that do not have adequate teachers, that do not have enough textbooks, that do not have maybe one single computer in their classroom.

In my district, L.A. Unified, where maybe 30 students are there in the fourth grade learning English but do not have the luxury of taking home a book because there are not enough supplies and materials to do that, private schools is not the answer. There are not enough private or parochial schools in my district to facilitate the room. We cannot even find land that is not contaminated to build a school, and my colleagues probably have heard about that debacle in Los Angeles, the Belmont Learning Center. We need to expand educational opportunities for all. That is the American dream for my constituents. That is the American dream para todos los ninos (for all children).

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. VITTER).

Mr. VITTER. Mr. Chairman, the opponents of this choice amendment vehemently oppose five demonstration projects, and instead they want a lot of new Federal programs and money for careful education reform. There is just one little flaw in that approach, and that flaw is that we have been passing new Federal education programs for careful education reform over the last 35 years.

We have been tinkering with the public education system over the last 35 years. We have been increasing money at the Federal and State and local level over the last 35 years, and student achievement has been declining over those same last 35 years.

There are some other constants in those 35 years. American public education remains an enormous monopoly. It used to be the second biggest monopoly on earth after the Soviet state. Now it is the biggest monopoly.

What is another constant? That parents, poor parents, have no choice about where to send their kids to school.

Mr. Chairman, after 35 years of failure, why do we not simply try something fundamentally new, in a careful, pilot-demonstration-project sort of way?

The gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) asked for an amendment for increased parental involvement. This is it. What better way to get increased parental involvement than, once and for all, to empower parents over the system, the education bureaucracy? This is empowering parents.

So let us try something new and try to turn that declining student achievement around.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very special day in the House of Representatives when those who support this amendment are overwhelmed with compassion for the parents of low-income children. That is not the case when we bring a tax bill to the floor and they refuse to make their tax credit refundable so low-income families can have it. That is not the case on a normal day on this floor, when no legislation to provide health insurance to the 44 million uninsured people of America is brought to this floor.

That compassion is sorely lacking when there has been a commitment by the majority not to move a bill to raise the minimum wage of many of those parents that we are talking about today. This is a very special day when compassion for those families seems to come to the forefront. A year-long, a life-long commitment to that compassion would defeat this amendment and pass legislation that would provide health care and housing and jobs and real opportunity for those families we hear about from the proponents of the amendment. Defeat this amendment for real compassion.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK).

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the important point here is that we are trying to find ways to improve public school systems. I sat for 2 years with the gentleman from Michigan talking about dollars to the classroom.

They are right, we have to get the dollars to the classroom. Let us remember that the Federal dollars are only about 7 or 8 percent of the total budget. Ninety-two percent comes from the local district.

We ought to have confidence in the local school districts to provide the education that these youngsters need.

Why do we want to spend this limited amount of Federal dollars that we are trying to allocate to these poor districts and spend it out in the private sector, into private schools? If the private entities want to participate in the education of our poor, disadvantaged children, they can do it now. They can take State dollars. They can go in and take local dollars. There is no prohibition. They are free to do it, and they are welcome to do it. They can experiment all they want to. They can set up demonstration projects, but for heaven's sakes do not take the limited Federal dollars that we are trying to allocate for these poor districts.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, here I am again. There is a great song by Johnny Cash and Ray Charles, a song titled, "I am Like a Crazy Old Soldier Fighting a War on My Own." I feel that way sometimes on this question of scholarships for children.

I fight this fight, it seems, every year. Sometimes we win. Sometimes we lose. A couple of years ago, we got it through the House, we got it through the Senate, got it to the President. Bless his little old heart, he could not find it in his heart to sign that legislation. It would have given an opportunity to some youngsters here in D.C.

I keep asking myself, why do I keep fighting this fight? It is not about children in my district. Certainly it is not my children in my family. It is mostly about children I will probably never see, but it is about some youngsters I have seen working with the Washington Scholarship Fund. I, for several years now, have kept 15 or so little ones on scholarship, managed to get folks to chip in and watch them, watch the brightness in their mamas' eyes when they see the hope, the chance to get a little guy out.

I remember one little fellow, Kenny. He came to us. Darryl Green brought him over and introduced him. Poor little guy was scared half to death, over weight, unhappy, shy. We got him a scholarship. He got out of the school where he was frightened. He got into another school. The nuns were a little tough on him I heard, but they loved him and he learned.

I saw him about a year later. He was the life of the party. He was a happy boy. I saw school choice work in that child's life.

I also saw it work when he got a scholarship from the best private high school in Washington, D.C., a high school that people from his neighborhood rarely get a chance to attend. Probably got a lot of congressional children there, but they do not have very many people from Kenny's neighborhood. I have seen his mama watch her boy have something she never thought she had in her life, a chance.

We saw Ted Forstmann and John Walton try the same idea all over America, and we saw the families line up, the parents line up. I saw the disappointment in one mama's eyes in Chicago and right here in D.C., when the money that Forstmann and Walton brought to town was not enough and there just was one scholarship short for her child.

We saw the sadness and, bless his heart, I saw Ted Forstmann reach into his own wallet and bring out enough money so that baby could have a scholarship, too. We saw it work in those lives.

We saw it work when Virginia Gilder tried it in Albany, New York. We saw it work in California. We saw it work in Milwaukee. Wherever we have seen children with a chance, we have seen it work in the lives of the children. But it is more than that. We have seen the schools improve, as one superintendent said, when they had a choice program, privately funded.

His exact words were, we have to get better or we will lose our children. It is a wake-up call for some of those 6,000 schools up there that are always on the Education Department's list of failed schools. It is a chance.

Now, since none of these programs I am talking about were sponsored by the government, we are free to ignore them, pretend they are not there. Do not look at the evidence. Do not accept the facts. They are something special. We do not need to pay regard to that evidence. We can keep our opinions pure and free from any adulteration from facts and keep our allegiances strong to those who fear freedom and choice and prefer control and mandating.

Yes, my heart is in this. It is not an idea with me. It is about children, children that capture the heart, children whose faces shine because they got a chance, and mothers with hope. And I am tired. I am tired of the baloney. I am tired of the hogwash. I am tired about the masquerade. I am tired of the fear.

Hope is a wonderful thing. I have seen it work in the lives of babies and children. I have seen it work to the improvement of schools.

Fear is a horrible thing. I am hoping this time it will be different. I am hoping this time when we take that card out of our pocket and we face an amendment on this one very small effort, shucks, this government even in the Education Department itself will waste $50 million before the sun sets on this day. We know that. One small effort, where we would find it impossible to ignore the facts of the matter. That is what the fear is about.

□ 1345

The fear is that if we really have a government program where we really give it a legitimate test and it is run through the Department of Education, we will not be able to ignore the fact that it works in the schools and it works for the children. That is a mighty frightening thing, to be afraid of the truth, should it come out. Of course, if one is afraid of freedom, one should fear the truth.

So I ask my colleagues, all of them: we have a chance today to vote on this. Take this card out of your pocket and look at that card. For once, just once in our lives in a congressional career, put the special interests aside, put the ideological high-boundedness aside, put the institutional considerations aside. Just once, just give me a vote for the kids, just once. Let us put the kids ahead of all the rest of us. That is what this is about. It is only about the children. Bless their little hearts. They try so hard and we can be so damnably callous.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, for purposes of closing the debate, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GREEN).

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to follow my colleague from Texas, because we could not be any more different, I guess.

I have two children that went to public schools and they did very well. They did not come to D.C., but they went to schools in my own district in urban Houston.

This is a good bipartisan bill. It raises the authorization levels to amounts that we hope to be able to match, and I hope that next year we will do it and this year, with the appropriations.

Vouchers go the opposite way of the intent of this bill. It takes money away from public schools. Public education is not a monopoly. We as parents already have that choice. The statement I heard that there has been a monopoly for 35 years and the failure of the public school system is outrageous. Who do we think has been running this country for the last 35 years? The 95 percent of the people who went to public schools in this country. The product of our public schools are the ones who run it.

This amendment is a slap in the face of thousands of educators and parents who believe in public schools every day and work hard. I have been to every public school in my district and I will take my colleagues to the depths of the inner city in Houston and show them quality education in the public schools.

There is another country western song my colleague may remember. The teachers and the parents and everyone who works hard every day to make our public schools work, they may want to say, "take this job and shove it."

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Chairman, since coming to Congress my goal has been to ensure that the federal government is a better partner in building more livable communities. Access to quality public education is a key component of a community that is safe, healthy and economically secure.

The public knows and has demonstrated at the ballot box and public opinion surveys that not only the federal government must make investment in our public schools its top priority, but providing private school vouchers undercutting precious resources for our public schools is not the way to improve education.

Unlike public schools, which serve all children, private schools are not obligated to accept any student. Students who are most vulnerable and are often more difficult and expensive to educate are left out. In fact, a Department of Education report showed that if required to accept special needs students, 85% of private schools said they would not participate in a voucher program. When all students do not have equal access to education, it is work to divert critical funding from our public schools.

In the two cities that have voucher programs, Milwaukee and Cleveland, their effectiveness has been inconclusive. Milwaukee's program, after 10 years, has shown little or no improvement in student achievement relative to comparable public school students. However, what these cities have shown is that vouchers have led to greater class and race segregation in classrooms, they are draining significant financial resources from public schools, and are primarily serving students already in the private school system. In Milwaukee, two-thirds of voucher recipients were already in private schools or just beginning kindergarten, in Cleveland, three-fourths of recipients were already enrolled in private schools or just beginning kindergarten.

The Committee has labored to provide more accountability and more public school choice in this legislation. Reject the amendments for vouchers—they are a step in the wrong direction on both counts.

Mr. BROWN of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the foundation upon which every American child's future is based begins with a quality education. This amendment provides a vehicle to ensure this ideal becomes a reality. Every child deserves a good education, not just those whose parents can afford to send them to a different school.

In the past, the solution to America's education problem has been to simply throw money at it. While the federal government has spent billions of dollars on education, there are still countless children trapped in failing school systems. This amendment acknowledges that money alone does not provide for a quality education, but instead requires strengthening the framework of America's schools; in other words, fundamental reform.

To achieve this vision for reform, it is essential to close the achievement gap and provide disadvantaged students with the same opportunities as other children. In recent years, society has increasingly forgotten those children who have not been afforded the basic needs with which to fulfill their dreams. It is unacceptable that in the twenty-first century nearly 70 percent of inner city and rural fourth-graders cannot read at a basic level. Illiteracy has far-reaching consequences that affect social development and opportunities for successful employment.

Many lawmakers, including myself, want to involve parents more on education. Why shouldn't parents have the right to send their children to the school of their choice? Students need opportunity and parents need options. This amendment is the first step in giving parents choice and students hope. Unfortunately, many of my colleagues are against this type of parental choice. Let me address three of their concerns.

First, parental choice opponents say this option would take federal funds away from the public schools that most need the money. Let me be clear—the last thing we want to do is take money away from public schools that need to improve. This amendment does not take money away from public schools; instead, the amendment includes an additional authorization of $50 million to fund the demonstration projects and the related research. $50 million is a small price to pay for the opportunity to test the effectiveness of this type of parental choice.

Second, parental choice opponents say we don't know if private school choice contributes to improved education, either for those who go to the private school or for those left in the public school. Let's change that; let's increase our level of knowledge. Let's do a demonstration that will provide the research data we need to make this determination. If there is any possibility that this type of parental choice will improve education, then can we afford not to try?

Intuitively, of some disadvantaged students transfer from a failing public school to a private school, and the failing public school still receives the same funding, the result is increased per student funding and smaller class sizes in the public school. Therefore, school choice should contribute to improvements in education, not only for students who transfer to a private school, but also for the students remaining in the public school. Let's test this theory to make sure it really happens. This amendment provides the accountability, measuring, and research we can rely on to make future parental choice program decisions.

Finally, parental choice opponents claim that the majority of the American people are against private school choice. Even if that is true, don't we have the obligation to provide a voluntary demonstration project for those who support private school choice; those who don't have any other choices? This amendment provides for up to five demonstration projects. The projects are completely voluntary. Therefore, we may have five demonstration projects going, on a first come, first served basis. On the other hand, if no one wants the private school choice option, we will have zero demonstration projects going. Let's not base our entire policy on what opponents say the majority believes, if we have another option. This amendment provides that option.

The political reality is that H.R. 1 will not pass if complete private school choice is included in the bill. However, the other part of the political reality is that H.R. 1 may not pass if some type of private school choice is not included. This amendment is our last chance to include private school choice to make final passage of H.R. 1 more likely. We need education reform. We need to pass an elementary and secondary reauthorization bill. We need H.R. 1. I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment; it might make the difference between education success and education failure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 17 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 17 OFFERED BY MR. AKIN

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 17 offered by Mr. AKIN:

In section 104 of the bill, at the end of section 1111(b)(4) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 104), add the following:

“(L) be tests of objective knowledge, based on measurable, verifiable, and widely accepted professional testing and assessment standards, and shall not assess the personal opinions, attitudes, or beliefs of the student being assessed.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise reserved for the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN).

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to deal with this question of accountability. We have talked about it. Of course the reason that testing is in the bill is because we care about accountability. I do think there is a problem and that is that there is no way to have accountability without objective test questions. So our amendment simply requires that the test questions be objective, that they be based on measurable and verifiable data.

In other words, if we had five educated people take a look at a particular test question and they read it over, what they would say is that the answer is clearly A and it is not B, C, or D. So that is the purpose of this amendment, is simply to say, if we want accountability, we need objective questions.

Now, there are some questions that appear in tests sometimes, one might think that they are all objective, but some are not. Here is an example. Do you think that this is a good story, or how interesting did you think the story was? Those are subjective questions and we are saying that those are not a good basis for trying to do accountability. They are not objective. These questions did actually appear on some various tests from different States.

Our amendment goes also to a second point, and that is that the amendment prohibits the assessing of personal opinions, attitudes or beliefs. I do not believe there is anybody who thinks it is reasonable for us to be testing a kid and measuring them up or down based on what their religious persuasion is or their political persuasion or things that are personal attitudes or beliefs, and so we do prohibit that type of question.

The amendment also allows for a full range of testing strategies.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to enter into a colloquy with the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AKIN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not his amendment would prohibit essay tests.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intent to prohibit essay, short answer or any other types of questions on the test.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that response.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. We have no opposition to this amendment with the gentleman's explanation that he just gave that there is no intent here to prohibit essay or short responses on test questions, and we support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH).

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for yielding me this time. I welcome the fact that we are able to find some agreement amidst what could be contentious, because when we discuss the issue of education reform in any district with someone of any political party, the one thing that keeps coming up is the notion of accountability. Yesterday, this House went on record saying that we would have sufficient measurements of accountability.

What the gentleman from Missouri, my friend, does with this amendment is reaffirm the objective criteria which should be the watchword for this.

The Federal Government should not micromanage nor try to evaluate feelings, perceptions, opinions. What we seek to do here is use objective criteria to maintain that sense with this House on the record with this amendment, and I welcome this unanimity, if you will, with reference to the amendment, and I commend the gentleman from Missouri for bringing the amendment to our attention. I urge its passage.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), a member of the committee.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) for yielding me the time.

I want to take us back to yesterday's key vote on maintaining the testing provisions in this bill that really are the guts, the soul of this bill, in terms of accountability, in terms of trying to fairly and objectively measure these children's performances, find out the weaknesses, and then remediate those weaknesses.

We had a strong bipartisan vote yesterday to maintain these tests. But I think many of us, as the author of this amendment must have, many of us have reservations about these tests. I want to continue to say as we go forward that one, these tests need to be diagnostic in nature. They should not be high stakes tests, they should not drive teachers to necessarily always teach to a test; they need to be motivated and aligned with standards so that we find and remediate problems that children have and try to help them solve those problems so that they can be promoted to the next grade level. Diagnostic is key in all of this, and I hope we work on this in conference.

The second concern for me will be the appropriation level. This authorization is good, it is healthy, and we are going to have a vote later on on the Cox amendment, and we are going to see in this body how many members, when they talk about their concern for the poor, their concern for title I students, their compassion, their compassionate conservatism, we are going to really see if they want to spend this money on new ideas to remediate children, or if really they would rather spend the money on repealing the estate tax for the wealthiest people. We want to reform the estate tax, but there are a lot of people that would repeal it for everybody. So that will be a key amendment, and that will be a key as to how we allocate our resources around here in the future.

So again, to conclude, diagnostic tests that help children and do not result in high-stakes teaching to tests, and sufficient appropriations to match this authorization level opposition to the Cox amendment later on that would cut $2 billion out of this authorization level.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, this is an important amendment and one that I am encouraged will be adopted, because it does make absolutely clear and moves us in the direction of insisting upon testing that is objective in nature, that which relies on, or is oriented toward academic skills and proficiency on core academic subjects. It underscores the reality that I think we all need to be aware of, and that is that testing does have a direct impact on curriculum ultimately, and if we are capable of narrowing the content of testing to those skills that are the subjective components of classroom learning, it makes it more likely that curriculum will not be simply built only according to the tests.

But ultimately, this testing data needs to be useful to someone. It needs to be useful either to the government, which is what H.R. 1 that is before us suggests, or it will be useful to parents, and which the amendments that will be voted on a little later and perhaps maybe in another time from now, we will be able to get closer to the President's vision and his Leave No Child Behind plan that parents will have the ability to use this important testing data to choose a school that that is in the best interest of their child.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume just to say that we have no opposition to this, but I would like just for a second to follow up on what the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) said, because I think as we try to determine the role, the proper role, if you will, for testing, I think that the gentleman from Indiana made some very good points. We ought not to be, and I think that the concern of people who voted against testing in many instances, in talking to them, was that we were trying to use tests for things that they were not properly designed for.

The States are controlling this, but I think they clearly have to start thinking about, does this test accurately give us a picture that allows us to make some assessments, or is that an improper use of that exam, and what vehicles could we use to do the diagnostic work that the gentleman talked about so that we could then concentrate the resources on a child that is struggling with math or with reading and get that child up to speed.

□ 1400

The test does not necessarily tell us that, so we would hope that in this consideration of the proper role of testing that the States would think that through, because obviously, as we see around the country, there are many communities, many parents, many educators who are very, very concerned about the valid use of testing.

I certainly believe that is a key component of the accountability provisions of this law, and I think this amendment helps us in that regard.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding.

I congratulate the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN) for his amendment, and thank him for his willingness to work with Members on both sides of the aisle to bring about an amendment that gets us to truly objective tests, that provides safeguards to make all of us as policymakers more comfortable with the steps we are taking in this bill.

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. RYUN).

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his amendment, because if we truly want to measure objective improvements, then testing must be done on an objective basis.

Is it not common sense to require test questions which measure what a student knows, rather than how he feels? Requiring a student to share personal opinions, attitudes, and beliefs does little to measure how he is doing and what he has learned in school.

Most troubling is that subjective test questions lack a verifiable right answer. Who determines what the correct answer is?

Here is an example: After reading a paragraph on a test, how would one answer this question: "Do you think this is a good story? You have three choices. A is yes, B is no, and C is I don't know." Would we get the right answer?

This question actually took place on a test, and it tells us nothing about the student's knowledge or understanding of the subject.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and require testing to cover only objective knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 18 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 18 OFFERED BY MR. STEARNS

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 18 offered by Mr. STEARNS: In section 1116(b) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as proposed to be amended by section 106 of the bill, insert after paragraph (5) the following and redesignate any subsequent provisions accordingly:

“(6) ADDITIONAL NOTIFICATION.—Not less than once each year, each State educational agency shall provide the Secretary with the name of each school identified for school improvement under this subsection.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise reserved for opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I am offering to H.R. 1 would require that the State educational agencies make known in the form of a report to the Department of Education those schools that States identify as not making adequate progress in educating our children.

The Department of Education would then be required to send a report to Congress with this same information. This information would be a valuable resource, both to the Department of Education in carrying out its responsibilities, and, of course, to Congress in determining the level of funding needed.

A school enters an improvement status when it fails to meet those State targets for improving student performance. These targets, of course, vary from State to State. Once identified for improvement, schools, with support from their districts, are given assistance and resources to improve student achievement.

The number of title I schools across the country identified as needing improvement may be over 8,000. I say they may be, because we do not actually know which schools the States have identified as failing our children.

Numbers alone do not tell us how long individual schools have been in improvement status.

Under current law, the Department of Education is prevented from gathering this valuable information, which greatly hampers them in determining the needs of a low-performing school so they can better support State and local reform efforts.

Instead of this creating more work for the local educational agency, this amendment, Mr. Chairman, actually relieves them of the burdensome task of having to respond to individual requests from the many programs that use this information. In effect, it streamlines the efforts of all who are involved in the effort to provide the best education to our children.

Specific information on those schools identified is important so that we can assess which schools are not meeting State improvement goals. The information will also provide a baseline for determining the number of schools that improve.

Mr. Chairman, $23 billion is a large amount of money, so it is imperative that in this body we are responsible and fully aware as to how this money improves our local schools and, of course, if it exceeds our expectations.

The President's plan involves great accountability. This amendment is only an extension of that principle. This amendment is insistent upon requiring that all schools be held accountable by name. Individual schools will no longer hide behind an anonymous number. If we are sincere in wanting to “leave no child behind,” we must first know those children who are at risk.

This is by no means an effort by the Federal Government to garner greater control of the local schools. Rather, Mr. Chairman, it is about facilitating access to very important information.

So this is a simple idea and a very simple amendment. It shines the light of day on those schools in greatest need. My amendment lifts the veil on those schools that are found to be failing and enables the Department of Education and, yes, the United States Congress, to address those needs.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we have examined the amendment. We have no opposition to it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS) will be postponed.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 19 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 19 OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 19 offered by Mr. TRAFICANT:

In the matter proposed to be inserted as part E of title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 by section 801 of the bill, insert after section 8520 the following:

“SEC. 8521. SENSE OF CONGRESS; REQUIREMENT REGARDING NOTICE; USE OF AMERICAN-MADE STEEL.

“(a) PURCHASE OF AMERICAN-MADE EQUIPMENT AND PRODUCTS.—In the case of any equipment or products that may be authorized to be purchased with financial assistance provided under this Act, it is the sense of the Congress that entities receiving such assistance should, in expending the assistance, purchase only American-made equipment and products.

“(b) NOTICE TO RECIPIENTS OF ASSISTANCE.—In providing financial assistance under this Act, the head of each Federal agency shall provide to each recipient of the assistance a notice describing the statement made in subsection (a) by the Congress.

“(c) USE OF AMERICAN-MADE STEEL.—A school system receiving financial assistance under this Act for construction shall use American-made steel for such construction and shall comply with the requirements of the Buy American Act.”.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) and a Member opposed will each control 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time in opposition not otherwise taken.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I have been offering buy-American amendments in this Congress for a number of years. I believe this is a good bill; and I want to commend my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), and one of the fine leaders on our side of the aisle, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), for a good bill.

Certainly there can be some improvements. However, there are some concerns that I have and some recommendations that I want to make. I want to make this to the Republican leadership, even though I know there are other complicating issues that would surround the issue of construction.

I believe the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS) are exactly right. We in Congress have built a number of prisons, and I do not demean the Congress for such action. But, Mr. Chairman, we have put but little money into construction of school facilities.

I do not believe we have to put a ton of money into it, Mr. Chairman. It could be a 20 percent participatory matching thing if local money and State money is available. But I think in conference or in some mechanism, the Republican leadership should look at that issue.

What the Traficant amendment says is that, number one, on any funds expended under this bill, it is the sense of Congress that when making purchases, they shall buy and we should buy American-made products. But it also says that a notice shall be given of same by the Secretary when awards are made.

There is one last provision. It deals with the hope and what I think is the righteousness of placing some construction money in with attachments, even if it is just 10 percent, 15 percent, for those hard-pressed communities that cannot afford to build new schools, where they have trailers outside, Mr. Chairman.

It says when they make such construction, if they receive money under this bill, they shall use American-made steel in such construction.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT), has a very good amendment. We certainly do not have any problem with it. Certainly I support the buy-American amendments that the gentleman from Ohio has offered over the years.

To the extent some money in this bill could be used for school construction, I certainly do not have any problem with the gentleman's amendment and will accept it.

Mr. Chairman, on an unrelated issue I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Chairman, it was my intention later today to offer an amendment to allow for a Straight A's pilot program to give States additional flexibility to demonstrate how they could achieve better student performance by replacing Federal programs with innovative programs at the State or local level.

However, I will not be offering the DeMint Straight A's amendment today. Yesterday, I met with the President and the Vice President, and we agreed that the State and local flexibility provision will remain a top priority for the final bill, but that this important idea would be best served if I withdraw the amendment at this time or did not offer it.

I want to thank the President for his assurance that he will use all the resources available to him to make sure that Straight A flexibility for States and local school districts is a part of the final education reform bill.

I also shared with the President that without the Straight A's language, I would be unable to support the current bill on the floor today. While I am reluctant to not vote for the bill, I feel I must, given the absence of key education reform provisions on flexibility and choice.

It is my hope and expectation that this important Straight A's flexibility provision will be included in the House-Senate conference bill. Mr. Chairman, Straight A's is a good education reform policy, and the pilot program is worthy of inclusion in the final education package.

The DeMint Straight A's amendment would have allowed seven States and 25 local school districts the option of entering into a performance agreement with the Secretary of Education. Under approved, results-oriented contracts, State and local school districts would be able to combine funds from a few or all of the eligible Federal formula grant programs that they administer at the State level and would be free from most of the administrative costs of those individual programs.

In exchange for this flexibility, participating States and local schools would have to meet their performance objectives for improving student academic achievement.

Mr. Chairman, this House has already passed an even less restrictive version of Straight A's last year, so most of us have already confirmed that we believe the flexibility provided in Straight A's is exactly what America needs.

I know we all want the same outcome: excellent schools all across the country which provide all children access to a solid education. In order for that to happen, we cannot continue the status quo. We need to declare failure as unacceptable, challenge the status quo, and provide the mechanisms necessary for positive change to occur.

This amendment would not have required any State or school district to participate. It would be a pilot program to give a few States and local school districts around the country the opportunity to break the mold, to be innovative in their approach to education.

Under Federal law, all they run into is red tape. This would give them the open door to truly meet the needs of their students and work to close the achievement gap in the manner that best suits their State and local districts.

The bottom line is that States and local schools must show that their students are learning, not that the bureaucrats are checking the right boxes to continue Federal funds. The freedom would be refreshing.

□ 1415

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), my distinguished friend.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) for yielding me the time.

We on our side of the aisle, Mr. Chairman, support the sense of the Congress amendment to both buy American steel and also conform to the Buy American Act.

We wish we would have had the opportunity to have a school construction amendment on the floor so that this amendment would even mean more.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to the colloquy that just took place with the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT), I want to continue to say that I strongly support this bipartisan bill.

However, with the inroads towards removing some flexibility at the local level and delivering dollars directly to the classroom yesterday with the Tiberi amendment, I am glad that we will not go any further on the DeMint amendment and that this conference, I hope, will not go any further.

I think if we continue to go through a Straight A's sloganeering, bumper sticker approach that we will lose bipartisan support for this bill left and right and that the tight middle that has held this bipartisan agreement together could erode very quickly.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to close with these comments. I have served with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, now for a number of terms. The gentleman is one of the more distinguished Members from the State of Ohio.

I say to the gentleman from Ohio, I am making an appeal to the gentleman. I do not care if it is 10 percent, 15 percent, I think it is not just good for America, it is good for Democrats, it is good for Republicans, it is good for all of our schools to have at some point in conference some money put in for construction.

I know there are other issues concerned with it, but we need to handle those issues, even if it is just a 10 percent commitment. But when the local tax people, the local residents are raising taxes to build schools and some of them are impoverished, like in my community, and when the States are willing to help, we should be a participant in that process.

There should be no trailers outside of schools that are dangerous to our children.

Mr. Chairman, with the fine job the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) has done, I am going to support the bill; and I commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER).

I am asking the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) to give that consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) on his amendment. No one in America wants their child to go to a bad school. We know the difficulties of building new school buildings across the country are very different.

In our home State of Ohio, the State government was never involved in the building of school buildings until recently. As the gentleman knows, in Ohio, the State government now has a pool of funds to help needy districts build the school buildings they need.

I and many of our colleagues have believed for some time that allowing school construction to remain the purview of local school districts and States is the appropriate role for them and not the appropriate role for us.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOEHNER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, the only thing I would like to say is to qualify for that money, my impoverished city, the major city, Youngstown, already hard-strapped, did go ahead and raise $134 million. They destroyed every other option they had. Certainly, some participatory construction money from the Federal Government would not hurt us. After all, we are building prisons in those same cities.

Mr. Chairman, I am asking the gentleman and his leadership just to consider that. It may not need to be a big percentage, but I think in good faith there should be some participatory involvement by the Federal Government in the construction of safe schools.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

SEQUENTIAL VOTES POSTPONED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments on which further proceedings were postponed, in the following order:

Amendment No. 15 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY);

Amendment No. 16 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY);

Amendment No. 10 offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA);

Amendment No. 13 offered by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD);

Amendment No. 18 offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS); and Amendment No. 19 offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the second vote in this series.

AMENDMENT NO. 15 OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the ayes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will redesignate the amendment.

□ 1537

So the amendment was agreed to.
The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, earlier today, I was unavoidably delayed during the vote on the Traficant Amendment to H.R. 1. Accordingly, I was unable to vote on rollcall No. 140. If I had been present I would have voted "yea."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, on rollcalls Nos. 136, 137, and 140, I was at a subcommittee on Appropriations hearing. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay" on 137, "nay" on 136, and "yea" on 140.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 20 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 20 OFFERED BY MR. BRADY OF TEXAS

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 20 offered by Mr. BRADY of Texas:

Strike part D of title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as proposed to be added by section 203 of the bill, and insert the following:

"PART D—TEACHER LIABILITY PROTECTION"

"SEC. 2301. SHORT TITLE."

"This part may be cited as the 'Paul Coverdell Teacher Liability Protection Act of 2001'."

"SEC. 2302. FINDINGS AND PURPOSE."

"(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

"(1) The ability of teachers, principals and other school professionals to teach, inspire and shape the intellect of our Nation's elementary and secondary school students is deterred and hindered by frivolous lawsuits and litigation.

"(2) Each year more and more teachers, principals and other school professionals face lawsuits for actions undertaken as part of their duties to provide millions of school children quality educational opportunities.

"(3) Too many teachers, principals and other school professionals face increasingly severe and random acts of violence in the classroom and in schools.

"(4) Providing teachers, principals and other school professionals a safe and secure environment is an important part of the effort to improve and expand educational opportunities.

"(5) Clarifying and limiting the liability of teachers, principals and other school professionals who undertake reasonable actions to maintain order, discipline and an appropriate educational environment is an appropriate subject of Federal legislation because—

"(A) the scope of the problems created by the legitimate fears of teachers, principals and other school professionals about frivolous, arbitrary or capricious lawsuits against teachers is of national importance; and

"(B) millions of children and their families across the Nation depend on teachers, principals and other school professionals for the intellectual development of children.

"(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this part is to provide teachers, principals and other school professionals the tools they need to undertake reasonable actions to maintain order, discipline and an appropriate educational environment.

"SEC. 2303. PREEMPTION AND ELECTION OF STATE NONAPPLICABILITY."

"(a) PREEMPTION.—This part preempts the laws of any State to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with this part, except that this part shall not preempt any State law that provides additional protection from liability relating to teachers.

"(b) ELECTION OF STATE REGARDING NON-APPLICABILITY.—This part shall not apply to any civil action in a State court against a teacher with respect to claims arising within that State if such State enacts a statute in accordance with State requirements for enacting legislation—

"(1) citing the authority of this subsection;

"(2) declaring the election of such State that this part shall not apply, as of a date certain, to such civil action in the State; and

"(3) containing no other provisions.

"SEC. 2304. LIMITATION ON LIABILITY FOR TEACHERS."

"(a) LIABILITY PROTECTION FOR TEACHERS.—Except as provided in subsections (b) and (c), no teacher in a school shall be liable for harm caused by an act or omission of the teacher on behalf of the school if—

"(1) the teacher was acting within the scope of the teacher's employment or responsibilities related to providing educational services;

“(2) the actions of the teacher were carried out in conformity with local, State, and Federal laws, rules and regulations in furtherance of efforts to control, discipline, expel, or suspend a student or maintain order or control in the classroom or school;

“(3) if appropriate or required, the teacher was properly licensed, certified, or authorized by the appropriate authorities for the activities or practice in the State in which the harm occurred, where the activities were or practice was undertaken within the scope of the teacher’s responsibilities;

“(4) the harm was not caused by willful or criminal misconduct, gross negligence, reckless misconduct, or a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of the individual harmed by the teacher; and

“(5) the harm was not caused by the teacher operating a motor vehicle, vessel, aircraft, or other vehicle for which the State requires the operator or the owner of the vehicle, craft, or vessel to—

“(A) possess an operator’s license; or

“(B) maintain insurance.

“(b) CONCERNING RESPONSIBILITY OF TEACHERS TO SCHOOLS AND GOVERNMENTAL ENTITIES.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any civil action brought by any school or any governmental entity against any teacher of such school.

“(c) EXCEPTIONS TO TEACHER LIABILITY PROTECTION.—If the laws of a State limit teacher liability subject to one or more of the following conditions, such conditions shall not be construed as inconsistent with this section:

“(1) A State law that requires a school or governmental entity to adhere to risk management procedures, including mandatory training of teachers.

“(2) A State law that makes the school or governmental entity liable for the acts or omissions of its teachers to the same extent as an employer is liable for the acts or omissions of its employees.

“(3) A State law that makes a limitation of liability inapplicable if the civil action was brought by an officer of a State or local government pursuant to State or local law.

“(d) LIMITATION ON PUNITIVE DAMAGES BASED ON THE ACTIONS OF TEACHERS.—

“(1) GENERAL RULE.—Punitive damages may not be awarded against a teacher in an action brought for harm based on the action of a teacher acting within the scope of the teacher’s responsibilities to a school or governmental entity unless the claimant establishes by clear and convincing evidence that the harm was proximately caused by an action of such teacher which constitutes willful or criminal misconduct, or a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of the individual harmed.

“(2) CONSTRUCTION.—Paragraph (1) does not create a cause of action for punitive damages and does not preempt or supersede any Federal or State law to the extent that such law would further limit the award of punitive damages.

“(e) EXCEPTIONS TO LIMITATIONS ON LIABILITY.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The limitations on the liability of a teacher under this part shall not apply to any misconduct that—

“(A) constitutes a crime of violence (as that term is defined in section 16 of title 18, United States Code) or act of international terrorism (as that term is defined in section 2331 of title 18, United States Code) for which the defendant has been convicted in any court;

“(B) involves a sexual offense, as defined by applicable State law, for which the defendant has been convicted in any court;

“(C) involves misconduct for which the defendant has been found to have violated a Federal or State civil rights law; or “(D) where the defendant was under the influence (as determined pursuant to applicable State law) of intoxicating alcohol or any drug at the time of the misconduct.

“(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to affect subsection (a)(3) or (d).

“SEC. 2305. LIABILITY FOR NONECONOMIC LOSS.

“(a) GENERAL RULE.—In any civil action against a teacher, based on an action of a teacher acting within the scope of the teacher’s responsibilities to a school or governmental entity, the liability of the teacher for noneconomic loss shall be determined in accordance with subsection (b).

“(b) AMOUNT OF LIABILITY.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Each defendant who is a teacher, shall be liable only for the amount of noneconomic loss allocated to that defendant in direct proportion to the percentage of responsibility of that defendant (determined in accordance with paragraph (2)) for the harm to the claimant with respect to which that defendant is liable. The court shall render a separate judgment against each defendant in an amount determined pursuant to the preceding sentence.

“(2) PERCENTAGE OF RESPONSIBILITY.—For purposes of determining the amount of noneconomic loss allocated to a defendant who is a teacher under this section, the trier of fact shall determine the percentage of responsibility of that defendant for the claimant’s harm.

“SEC. 2306. RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.

“Nothing in this part shall be construed to affect any State or local law (including a rule or regulation) or policy pertaining to the use of corporal punishment.

“SEC. 2307. DEFINITIONS.

“For purposes of this part:

“(1) ECONOMIC LOSS.—The term ‘economic loss’ means any pecuniary loss resulting from harm (including the loss of earnings or other benefits related to employment, medical expense loss, replacement services loss, loss due to death, burial costs, and loss of business or employment opportunities) to the extent recovery for such loss is allowed under applicable State law.

“(2) HARM.—The term ‘harm’ includes physical, nonphysical, economic, and noneconomic losses.

“(3) NONECONOMIC LOSSES.—The term ‘noneconomic losses’ means losses for physical and emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, physical impairment, mental anguish, disfigurement, loss of enjoyment of life, loss of society and companionship, loss of consortium (other than loss of domestic service), hedonic damages, injury to reputation and all other nonpecuniary losses of any kind or nature.

“(4) SCHOOL.—The term ‘school’ means a public or private kindergarten, a public or private elementary school or secondary school (as defined in section 14101, or a home school.

“(5) STATE.—The term ‘State’ means each of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, any other territory or possession of the United States, or any political subdivision of any such State, territory, or possession.

“(6) TEACHER.—The term ‘teacher’ means a teacher, instructor, principal, administrator, or other educational professional that works in a school, a local school board and any member of such board, and a local educational agency and any employee of such agency.

“SEC. 2308. APPLICABILITY.

“This part applies to any claim for harm caused by an act or omission of a teacher if that claim is filed on or after the effective date of the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 without regard to whether the harm that is the subject of the claim or the conduct that caused the harm occurred before such effective date.”

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY).

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Safe schools for students and teachers concerns us all, and from the shootings in Columbine to the recent shootings at Santana High School, all of us debate in this Chamber how to make our schools safer, how to make sure that our teachers and students are safe and return home safely each year. While we may disagree on some of the ways to do that, we are, in a bipartisan way, strongly supportive of returning order and discipline to our classrooms, and that is what this amendment is about: protecting teachers and schools from frivolous lawsuits when they responsibly maintain order and discipline in the classroom.

Schools are becoming more and more dangerous. Teachers tell us they do not feel safe in their own school. They tell us they are afraid to discipline unruly students, afraid to stop fights among those students, afraid to even defend themselves. The reason is that teachers may face an expensive and career-damaging lawsuit by overzealous lawyers. And, worse yet, there is a good chance they will be humiliated again when their responsible decision to maintain order in the classroom is not backed up by the principals and the school boards who face constant threats of expensive, frivolous, harassing lawsuits. In the end, it is the children who suffer.

As the American Federation of Teachers have said in their report on how to prevent violence in our schools, it is low-performing schools who suffer from the lack of safe and orderly learning environments. Teaching and learning are almost impossible to achieve in an environment of disorder, disrespect and fear. As our teachers tell us, no one has ever learned in the classroom where one or two kids take up 90 percent of the time through disruption, violence or threats of violence. That is why in poll after poll, educators rank discipline and safety high on their list of education concerns. So do we as parents, and so do the students.

This is what this bill does. This bill ensures that dedicated teachers trying to maintain a safe classroom are not afraid of being hauled into court for doing the responsible thing. This measure establishes a national shield to protect teachers, principals and other education professionals, including our school boards, who take responsible actions. The amendment does not protect educators or school boards when they engage in willful, reckless or criminal misconduct, when they engage in criminal acts, in violations of State or Federal civil rights laws, inappropriate use of drugs or alcohol, or behave with a conscious, flagrant indifference to the rights or safety of an individual harmed. We preserve States' rights with an easy opt-out, and we do not affect State law or local rules regarding corporal punishment.

Let me tell my colleagues what one teacher from Houston wrote me. "In another classroom," he wrote, "two girls had a fight today. The teacher got knocked down, was hit twice in the head and when he fell to the ground, was kicked twice by the girls. This teacher could not touch these girls to separate them. We have been told over and over again, do not touch the students, even to defend yourself. It is recommended that you do not touch the child. Seven little letters tell us why: Lawsuit." This teacher wrote, "Do they have any idea what teachers go through on a daily basis? We only want to be protected. Is a little peace of mind in the classroom too much to ask?"

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This amendment is advertised as providing liability protection for teachers, but the amendment defines "teacher" to include not only those that my colleagues and I might think of as teachers, but also any individual who works in a school, any member of the school board, any employee of a local education agency, as well as the school board and local education entity itself.

Immunizing every responsible individual and then immunizing the school system itself, as the Brady amendment would do, means that nobody would be responsible to a parent when a child is injured by a negligent act or omission at the school. The Brady amendment would ensure that schools will virtually never be accountable to parents regarding the safety and discipline for their children.

For example, the Brady amendment would eliminate accountability for negligent hiring decisions and would place schools and children at risk. Often, we have people who are hired as professional hall guards or monitors. This amendment would immunize principals and administrators who fail to make proper background checks and hire a violent or sexual predator as disciplinarian. Because the school administration is also immunized, nobody would be responsible.

□ 1545

There would be immunity for school administrators who single out African American students or members of another protected class for discipline and punishment in violation of their civil rights, or a school employee who negligently restrains a student, and the student is injured or dies as a result. Then no one would be responsible, so no one will take precautions to make sure that these things do not happen.

School boards and educational agencies owe the highest duty to our schoolchildren. They ultimately are responsible for every teacher or principal's decision regarding discipline or punishment of students. This bill would not only shield teachers, but also school boards and local governments from any responsibility.

The theme throughout the reauthorization of ESEA has been accountability of schools to parents and children. This amendment would violate that goal by providing immunity to school administrators, school personnel, school boards, and local education agencies for actions that harm the health and welfare of our children that they owe a duty to protect. I ask that Members vote no on this amendment.

I would also point out that the National Education Association has come out against this amendment. They say that the amendment provides for immunity for every responsible party in the school and the school system itself. The amendment would eliminate all responsibility to parents when a child is injured by disciplinary actions.

Mr. Chairman, I include for the RECORD the letter from the National Education Association.

The letter is as follows:

NATIONAL EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 21, 2001.

House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: On behalf of the National Education Association's (NEA) 2.6 million members, we urge your opposition to the Brady amendment to the ESEA reauthorization bill (H.R. 1) that would in effect remove all accountability for disciplinary actions that result in harm to the health or welfare of students.

NEA does not oppose efforts to strengthen liability protections for education employees. Unlike the McConnell amendment in the Senate ESEA bill (S. 1), however, the Brady amendment provides immunity for every responsible party in a school and the school system itself—including the school board and local education agency as entities. This amendment would eliminate all responsibility to parents when a child is injured by disciplinary actions.

Immunizing school boards and local education agencies will not improve discipline in the classroom. Instead, the amendment will place students at risk, while undermining the focus on accountability to parents and children central to the ESEA bill.

We urge your opposition to this dangerous amendment.

Sincerely,

MARY ELIZABETH TEASLEY,
Director of Government Relations.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, this bill holds all teachers, all school boards, all educators equally accountable for willful, reckless, criminal misconduct, criminal acts, negligence, gross negligence, violations of State and Federal laws.

I would point out, it is endorsed by our secondary school principals, our elementary school principals, and many teachers and parents.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE).

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his amendment, and for yielding time to me.

One of the chronic complaints we hear about public education is a lack of discipline. In fact, I hear more about that than any other single issue from our public schools today, and the concerns expressed by teachers that they might be sued if they attempt to discipline students.

In fact, their concerns are not unfounded. Thirty-one percent of all high schools have faced lawsuits or out-of-court settlements in the past 2 years. Teachers are not only wary of intervening physically in student confrontations, but there are times when teachers have to make judgment calls about disciplining a child whose behavior is distracting rather than dangerous.

Some teachers err, frankly, on the side of leniency. The result has been a steady erosion of the teachers' ability to maintain order in the classroom. This addresses this problem by freeing teachers, principals, and school board members from meritless Federal lawsuits when they enforce reasonable rules.

The amendment language is very modest and narrowly tailored. The amendment only deals with Federal causes of action that might be brought against teachers or principals who act in a reasonable way to maintain order and discipline in the classroom. There is absolutely no protection for reckless or criminal misconduct.

Also, the amendment does not protect teachers when they violate State or local law. For instance, the teacher immunity provided under this amendment would not override State law towards claims such as negligence, assault, or battery as they are governed by State law.

I strongly believe school officials must be protected if we are serious about helping them maintain a school environment where teachers can teach and students can learn. I urge an aye vote on the amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to what is clearly a well-intended amendment that I believe will create significant confusion.

No one can dispute the need or desirability of reinforcing the notion of teachers and other school professionals that they need to maintain order in the classroom. I think the gentleman's point that there are some frivolous lawsuits is indisputable.

My concern about this amendment is that I think it fundamentally misunderstands the role of the courts versus the role of this Congress. This amendment would impose a hard and fast and rigid set of rules upon virtually every classroom situation, and do so in a way that could not foresee certain circumstances. As a result of this, I believe it would actually breed litigation.

Let me give two examples. I do not believe it is inherently obvious from this language as to whether or not an act of slander or libel by a teacher or by a school professional is or is not actionable under this provision.

Secondly, the definition of "school" or "within the scope of employment" is a bit curious. What about a driver's education instructor who is behind the wheel of a car and negligently operates the car in the process of teaching a student how to drive?

I do not know what the answer to those cases should be, but I do know this, that this House as a legislative body is ill-equipped and ill-prepared to answer one of those questions on a case-by-case basis in advance of the incident's taking place.

I think the gentleman's intention to protect the ordinary carrying-out of school disciplinary measures is quite laudable and quite desirable, but I think the ambiguity of language in suggesting which causes of action would be preempted or excluded by this amendment and which would not, and the ambiguity of language in suggesting what the "scope of employment" means, means that this very well-intentioned attempt to avoid litigation would in fact wind up creating it.

In summary, I believe we should defeat this amendment because of those ambiguities.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. KELLER).

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Brady amendment to add teacher liability protection to the President's No Child Left Behind Act of 2001. This is a commonsense reform that protects teachers from frivolous lawsuits when they take steps to maintain order and discipline in the classroom.

For example, imagine a scenario where we have a disruptive student, and the teacher tells him to go to the principal's office. The student says, "I am not going to do what you want. I am going to do whatever I want. You are not going to tell me what to do. I will sit here all day if I want."

Under that scenario, the teacher would probably go get another teacher and have no choice but to physically remove the child from the classroom as he was being disruptive and take him to the principal's office. Under that scenario, those same teachers could then be subjected to a frivolous suit for unlimited compensatory and punitive damages.

This is a problem that happens all too often. I think our teachers deserve better. Interviews with public school teachers reveal a common theme. It is always a small percentage of the students who cause virtually all of the problems.

Two-thirds of our public school teachers say discipline is a serious problem in the schools. Eighty-eight percent of those same teachers say academic achievement would improve substantially if the troublemakers were removed.

Teaching is a noble profession. We ask a lot of them. We pay them nothing. The least we can do is protect them from frivolous lawsuits. I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the Brady amendment.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in a letter from the National Education Association, which represents 2.6 million members in this country, they urge defeat of the Brady amendment. Just let me read from that letter.

"On behalf of the National Education Association's 2.6 million members, we urge your opposition to the Brady amendment to the ESEA reauthorization bill, H.R. 1, that would in effect remove all accountability for disciplinary actions that result in harm to the health or welfare of students."

It goes on to say, "Immunizing school boards and local education agencies will not improve discipline in the classroom." Instead, the amendment will place students at risk while undermining the focus on accountability to parents and children central to the ESEA bill. We urge your opposition to this dangerous amendment."

I would commend these words to the Members.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank my colleague for yielding time to me and for sponsoring this amendment.

As part of our broader efforts to make schools safer, H.R. 1 provides limited civil litigation immunity from civil causes of action for teachers, principals, and other school administrators who take reasonable actions to maintain school discipline. This will allow teachers to remove violent and persistently disruptive students from the classroom without fear of legal repercussions.

The amendment before us strengthens the bill by providing teachers, administrators, and school board members immunity from State causes of action as well, and if a State does not want the immunity protections to apply, then State legislatures may in fact opt out of these provisions.

While it may seem like common sense that teachers should be able to take reasonable efforts to keep their classrooms under control, the idea of disciplining students has come under fire over the years. In light of recent school tragedies, it is even more important than ever to support teachers who take reasonable actions to maintain order and discipline.

Nearly 65 percent of public school teachers have suggested that discipline is a serious problem in their schools, and about 88 percent think that student achievement would improve if chronic troublemakers were removed from the class.

As I noted earlier, the idea behind this provision is to make schools safer. The President's plan also includes more funding for safety and drug prevention programs, as well as after-school activities. It also requires States to report to parents on whether a school is safe, and the bill nearly triples funding for character education programs that try to instill values like honesty, respect for others, and responsibility into the curriculum.

This amendment will save schools from having to waste money on frivolous lawsuits, and ensure that taxpayers' dollars go where they should go, to the classroom, not to a bunch of lawyers.

I congratulate my colleague, and urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GRAVES), one of our newer Members interested in safe and orderly schools.

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Chairman, too many teachers have told me that they are afraid to discipline unruly students for fear that they may face an expensive, career-ending lawsuit. It is time to take the lawyers out of the classroom.

Mr. Chairman, it is time to shield those responsible educators from frivolous lawsuits so our children may learn in a safe school. Responsible teachers should not be afraid of violent bullies with intimidating attorneys. Teachers should not fear a lawsuit because they attempt to break up a fight in gym class or on the playground. Teachers must be able to control the classroom to keep their students safe.

I have introduced legislation that, like this amendment, would provide legal protections to teachers who make reasonable actions to maintain order and discipline in the classroom. I rise today in strong support of this amendment that will protect our teachers and empower them to do what they were hired to do; that is, teach our students.

I would like to commend the gentleman from Texas on his great work on this amendment.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, we have passed this exact language twice through this House, Republicans and Democrats. We have protected equally from frivolous lawsuits our teachers, our principals, our educators, and our school boards. Our principals and teachers tell us that is so important, because if the school board does not back up the principals and teachers, all we have done is open a loophole for more violence, more bullying, more threats, and more harassing lawsuits.

At a time when we always fear another Columbine, the last thing we need is an open loophole, an invitation to harassing lawsuits against the educators who need to maintain order in their classroom.

Let me close with this. Members of Congress are often asked: "What are you doing to stop school violence? What are you doing to make our schools safer?" Today we have the opportunity to answer, because today we have a clear choice, a choice between dedicated teachers and students who want to learn, or threatening, disruptive bullies and their reckless attorneys.

It is time to take the lawyers out of the classroom and to restore order and discipline so our teachers can teach, our children can learn, in truly safe schools. That is the right choice.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Senate passed an amendment similar to this, but it had a significant difference. The Senate amendment, while providing liability protection to teachers, principals, and educators as individuals, it never thought to provide immunity to school boards and local education authorities as entities.

□ 1600

Immunizing every responsible party in a school and then immunizing the school system itself, as this amendment would do, means that no one will be responsible to a parent when a child is injured by an act or an omission with regard to discipline.

This amendment would ensure that the schools would virtually never be accountable to parents regarding the discipline and safety of their children.

So, Mr. Chairman, if no one is responsible for injuries negligently inflicted upon our children, no one will have an incentive to protect children from negligent acts.

This amendment will not improve school safety and it should therefore be defeated.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 21 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 21 OFFERED BY MRS. MINK OF HAWAII

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 21 offered by Mrs. MINK of Hawaii:

In subparagraph (A) of section 1116(b)(3) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.), as amended by section 106 of the bill—

- (1) strike "and" at the end of clause (vii);
- (2) strike period at the end of clause (viii) and insert "; and"; and
- (3) add at the end the following:

"(ix) ensure that a mentoring program is available to teachers in the school who have been in the teaching profession for 3 years or less, which provides mentoring to beginning teachers from exemplary veteran teachers with expertise in the same subject matter that the beginning teachers will be teaching, to the extent practicable be school-based, and provides mentors time for activities such as coaching, observing, and assisting the teachers who are mentored."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time in opposition not otherwise taken.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK).

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered out of my very great concern that what we have established by law and what we have built upon in H.R. 1 is a formula for the determination of when schools are deemed not to be providing adequate education to the children. They are referred to in a wide variety of ways as failing schools or schools that are not performing up to the standards.

Consistent with this policy of trying to bring in accountability to the provision of Federal funds, we have provided for an additional number of tests from third grade to eighth grade, in an effort to try to maintain a steady pool of information as to whether the schools are failing or not.

There are processes developed in H.R. 1 to promote efforts that we feel would help to bring these schools up to standard and allow the children to proceed and to achieve in the basic courses of reading and literacy and in math and science.

One of the things that we have always discussed in our deliberations about failing schools is that it is the lack of resources in most cases that compound the problems, not just the lack of funding, but the fact that they cannot attract into these schools qualified teachers. They are not connected with the Internet. They lack the assistance of various resource teachers. They do not have the textbooks. They are in remote areas which compounds the problems.

What happens in these remote areas is that there is a constant turnover of the teachers, and what we often find in my schools in the remote areas is that graduates that are just out of the colleges of education are the ones that are sent to teach in these schools that are already having a difficult time.

Mr. Chairman, these teachers fresh out of the college of education are highly motivated. They have gone through a very rigorous course of education, but when they hit the classroom itself, many of them tell me that they need assistance. That is exactly what my amendment seeks to provide. It says in the case of failing schools, there should be a mentoring program which is made available to the teachers that are assigned to these failing schools that have been teaching for 3 years or less.

The principals from 14 schools met with me recently and they identified this as one of the major benefits they want for their schools. If they had the assistance of an additional teacher or a mentor it would help to build confidence in the new teacher. The mentor could come from within the school system and would be paid an additional amount of money to provide help, support, confidence-building by going over the lesson plans to bring these teachers along.

This will contribute enormously to the retention factor, too. These young teachers assigned to the remote areas, to the failing schools are the ones who tend to leave immediately after their 3-year probation period comes about. With support instead of moving into the bigger cities where they prefer to live, they could be encouraged to stay.

Mr. Chairman, I think that this amendment will go a long way to helping the children, bringing these schools up to par, helping to retain the teachers by giving these new teachers the confidence that what they have sought in their careers is important and that we are providing this additional service because they are important.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me congratulate the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) for all of her efforts this year as we have gone through the development of the bill that we have before us.

I can tell my colleagues as a member of the negotiating team on the other side, she was a fierce advocate for the positions that she has taken for many years. I can tell my colleagues that as someone who has less experience in these areas than the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), her service to our group was invaluable.

The amendment that she brings to us today is an important one. Under the current bill that we have before us, H.R. 1, it does require schools that have been designated as low-performing to develop a 2-year plan for how they will turn the school around.

The plan must include scientifically based research strategies, high-quality professional development, numerical goals for progress and other matters which improve the academic quality of the school.

The amendment would ensure that mentoring is made available for teachers who have been in the teaching profession for 3 years or less. I think this is a valuable addition to the plan that we have before us, and I would ask all of my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), my colleague who has been a member of our working group.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate this display of bipartisanship also. I think for those who are concerned that Title I should perform better, this amendment would certainly help teachers, especially the newer teachers, to enhance their skills; and I urge its adoption.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK)?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) is granted an additional 1 minute.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS).

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) for presenting this amendment.

Professional development for educators is an important strength of this reauthorization act. We know that studies repeatedly show that the quality of teachers is the single most important predictor of student success.

In California, we instituted a beginner teacher support program that provides the exact kind of support proposed in this amendment. My district in San Diego County initiated such peer-teacher mentoring in the 1980s, and years of experience have shown that it does two very important things.

It makes the new teacher more effective from the first week in the classroom, and it increases retention of new teachers beyond the 5-year burnout that is a cause of our undersupply of trained teachers. And in addition, where midcareer teachers are recruited under alternative credentialing, consistent on-site peer coaching is a necessity to their success.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on this proven program. Again, I thank the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) for presenting it.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK.)

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 22 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 22 OFFERED BY MR. WAMP

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 22 offered by Mr. WAMP:

In section 501 of the bill, strike section 5302 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501) and insert the following:

“SEC. 5302. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

“There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this part $50,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time otherwise reserved for opposition.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP.)

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, character education makes a difference. Character education works because it teaches time-tested principles like honor, respect, responsibility, and courage. It teaches children to become not only future business professionals, doctors and technicians, but good citizens and decent human beings as well.

President Bush clearly recognizes the importance of values in our society and is committed to seeking a better education for our Nation's children. The President has included our character education initiative in his reform proposals.

Mr. Chairman, a valueless education is no education at all. At the foundation of all knowledge, there must exist a fundamental set of principles that distinguishes right from wrong and good from bad. As a matter of fact, academia used to believe in a value-neutral or a value-free education, and now many people in academia say that we must have a value-based educational system so that knowledge can rest on the difference between right and wrong.

Character education is taught in all 50 States. Thirty-two States have passed legislation either mandating or encouraging the teaching of character education in school. However, some schools do not have enough money to add this important curriculum, and this amendment will give them this capability.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to say that the character-education movement has grown out of my hometown, Chattanooga, Tennessee. Today, the Center for Youth Issues Inc., a 501(c)(3) non-profit organization, provides materials and/or programs on character education to more than 26,000 schools Nationwide and impacts more than 10 million students in all 50 States.

Since 1981, this organization, working through its school-based organizations, STARS, Students Taking a Right Stand, has found acceptance and great success in public school systems across America. My wife and I have been involved in STARS, and we really believe in its work.

Education experts know well if we teach character and build good citizens, we will not need metal detectors at school entrances, bars on the windows or other measures that are more appropriate for the penal system than for the school system.

Yesterday, I participated in a Court TV program on bullying in schools. And, frankly, this character trait of respect, if all of our students embraced it and learned it and know to respect others throughout the educational process, we would not have the youth violence problem that is surfacing in so many schools.

Congress must act to support character education. To provide that support, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) and myself introduced H.R. 228, the Character Counts for the 21st Century Act.

Mr. Chairman, this is very similar to the language in H.R. 1 which will authorize the U.S. Education Department to provide grants to promote character education.

Our amendment before us today is bipartisan. The gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) is a champion of strong public education. Character education is backed by a diverse coalition ranging from Miss America Angela Perez Baraquio to President Bush.

I laud the bill of the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member, that includes $25 million annually for character education. But by doubling it to $50 million, we will double the number of schools that might qualify. Our amendment raises it to $50 million per year.

There are 53 million children in our schools. Spending less than a dollar on each child so they learn right from wrong and good from bad is the right thing to do. Much has been asked of American education, and the Congress should settle for nothing less. Improving education has become a priority of both political parties.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman BOEHNER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member, and their excellent staffs.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1615

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the chairman of the committee and the ranking member for their support and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) for working together in this bipartisan manner on this very important measure, doubling this bill's funding for character education.

Last Congress, the gentleman from Tennessee and I had the opportunity, along with 22 other Members in this body, to serve on the Speaker's Bipartisan Working Group on Youth Violence that really addressed this issue after the Columbine tragedy. This came out as one of the unanimous recommendations of that commission as a way to prevent violence among our young people.

As a former State superintendent of my State schools, I understand firsthand that character education really works. In a number of schools in my district, in Wake County, Johnston and Nash, it is providing leadership.

This amendment will build on those efforts and provide more of our young people with the education on the basic values.

Mr. Chairman, it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. MCINTYRE), another proponent of character education.

Mr. MCINTYRE. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this amendment by the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

John Whitehead once said that "children are the living messages we send to a time that we will not see." We have to ask ourselves what kind of messages are we sending through our children. Yes, of course they need the knowledge and skills in the classroom to prepare for the global economy; however, we must remember that schools also serve as an important tool to help build citizenship.

As one who has volunteered the last 20 years in the classroom myself long before I came up here to Washington, I know that we have an opportunity, a golden one, to work with our teachers and educators to help our children. Children spend about 1,500 hours a year in front of the television, 900 hours a year in school.

This is a golden opportunity for us to help develop good character and support what our schools can do to help our children. Character is developed over time by teaching by example, by learning, and by practice. It is developed through character education.

I strongly support this amendment and urge all my colleagues to do so.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ROSS).

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman, I stand here before my colleagues today as the proud son of public school educators, as the father of two children growing up in the Prescott public schools back in my hometown. I stand here in support of character education.

I have talked a lot about safer schools and smaller class sizes, about the need to put respect for teachers and discipline back into the classroom; and, yes, I have talked a lot about the need for more character education. We must focus more through character education on things like respect and citizenship. I think we need to get back to some of the basics in education. We need to teach our children. We must strive for them to do academically, but we must also strive to help them become good citizens and future leaders for all of us.

I am pleased to stand here today in support of this bipartisan amendment. I hope it demonstrates that a lot of us are truly trying to put our children and are truly trying to put progress before partisanship.

Mr. ETHERIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me close for our side on this debate by saying that this House has a chance to make character education work all across America. It works in those schools that we now have it in because it teaches our children to view the world through a moral lens and to understand that their actions really do have consequences.

Character education works to improve order, discipline and the respect in our classroom, and to reduce the incidence of violence. The research we have done in North Carolina for schools that have it, violence goes down and academics go up.

It teaches children to become not only successful children and students, but also good citizens and decent human beings as well. We must not only educate our children's minds, but their hearts as well.

I believe if we can seize this moment and provide a national commitment to character education for our children, then we will not need metal detectors, bars on the windows, or other punitive measures that are more appropriate for a penal system than for our school system.

Mr. Chairman, I encourage my colleagues to vote yes on the Wamp-Etheridge amendment.

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce and a man who has come up with an excellent work product in this bill.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Tennessee for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I thank both the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP) and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. ETHERIDGE) and others for supporting this because I do think that character education is a valuable effort that needs to happen in our schools.

When we grew up, we had two parents at home by and large teaching us character, teaching us the valuable lessons that we needed to be good citizens, to be good students, and to respect one another. All of those values were reinforced in the schools that we went to.

But today, unfortunately, we do not have mom and dad both at home raising their children. We have a different society than we had when many of us grew up. For a lot of children, especially children in poorer school districts, they may never see their parents.

The kind of values that we are talking about and the kind of character education that this plan would call for I think has to happen, because if we do not intercept these children in school and help them develop these values, they will never develop those values because they are not being reinforced at home like when we were all growing up.

It is a good amendment. We ought to vote for it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair understands that amendment No. 23 will not be offered. Therefore, it is now in order to consider amendment No. 24 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 24 OFFERED BY MR. HILLEARY

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 24 offered by Mr. HILLEARY:

After part A of title IX of the bill, insert the following (and redesignate provisions accordingly):

PART B—EQUAL ACCESS TO PUBLIC SCHOOL FACILITIES

SEC. 921. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Boy Scouts of America Equal Access Act".

SEC. 922. EQUAL ACCESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no funds made available through the Department of Education shall be provided to any public elementary school, public secondary school, local educational agency, or State educational agency, if the school or a school served by the agency—

(1) has a designated open forum; and
(2) denies equal access or a fair opportunity to meet to, or discriminates against, any group affiliated with the Boy Scouts of America or any other youth group that wishes to conduct a meeting within that designated open forum, on the basis of the membership or leadership criteria of the Boy Scouts of America or of the youth group that prohibit the acceptance of homosexuals, or individuals who reject the Boy Scouts' or the youth group's oath of allegiance to God and country, as members or leaders.

(b) TERMINATION OF ASSISTANCE AND OTHER ACTION.—

(1) DEPARTMENTAL ACTION.—The Secretary is authorized and directed to effectuate subsection (a) by issuing, and securing compliance with, rules or orders with respect to a public school or agency that receives funds made available through the Department of Education and that denies equal access, or a fair opportunity to meet, or discriminates, as described in subsection (a).

(2) PROCEDURE.—The Secretary shall issue and secure compliance with the rules or orders, under paragraph (1), in a manner consistent with the procedure used by a Federal department or agency under section 602 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d-1).

(3) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—Any action taken by the Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be subject to the judicial review described in section 603 of that Act (42 U.S.C. 2000d-2). Any person aggrieved by the action may obtain that judicial review in the manner, and to the extent, provided in section 603 of that Act.

(c) DEFINITIONS AND RULE.—

(1) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(A) ELEMENTARY SCHOOL; LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY; SECONDARY SCHOOL; STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The terms "elementary school", "local educational agency", "secondary school", and "State educational agency" have the meanings given the terms in section 8101 of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as in effect after the effective date of this Act).

(B) SECRETARY.—The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Education, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights of the Department of Education.

(C) YOUTH GROUP.—The term "youth group" means any group or organization intended to serve young people under the age of 21.

(2) RULE.—For purposes of this section, an elementary school or secondary school has a designated open forum whenever the school involved grants an offering to or opportunity for 1 or more youth or community groups to meet on school premises or in school facilities before or after the hours during which attendance at the school is compulsory.

SEC. 923. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Notwithstanding section 5, this part takes effect 1 day after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY).

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud to be before this House today with an amendment in support of one of our most revered institutions, the Boy Scouts of America. I find it interesting that this amendment comes immediately after the previous amendment regarding character education, because the Boy Scouts of America have been in the business of character education for many, many years.

My amendment is very simple. It states that, if a school allows groups open access to its facilities, it must allow equal access to the Boy Scouts. All over the country the Boy Scouts are under attack and being thrown out of public facilities that are open to other similarly situated groups. From Florida to California, the Boy Scouts are being removed, not because they support an illegal right, but as retribution for the Supreme Court's ruling in the Boy Scouts of America versus Dale.

The Boy Scouts won this case, but they have repeatedly once again defended this right in court. Thus far, the courts upheld the Boy Scouts' first amendment rights in assembly and speech and overturned their removal from public meeting areas such as schools. However, more and more schools continue to act, and the Scouts repeatedly have to get an injunction in court.

This amendment is designed to stop this wasteful cycle in litigation and harassment. If one allows for an open forum for other groups to meet, it is only fair to allow equal access to the Boy Scouts.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my objection is not because I object to the Boy Scouts. My objection is to intolerance. Since the Boy Scouts of America fought all the way to the Supreme Court for the right to discriminate, school districts, county governments, businesses and charitable groups like the United Way chapters have been breaking their ties with the Boy Scouts of America.

This effort to stand up to the Boy Scouts' discriminatory policy is not a fringe movement; it is part of the mainstream belief that intolerance in any form is un-American.

It is amazing to me that the proponents of this amendment support intolerance by revoking Federal funds unless a school or school district supports discriminatory policy and at the same time would take local control away from a school or a school district.

Whether one agrees with the Boy Scouts or not, anyone who believes that local communities should have local control over their own schools will surely want to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, I would just say that this is not unprecedented, this sanction in this amendment. We do this also with regard to school prayer. We do it with regard to military recruiters if schools decide to discriminate against the military and not allow them in. This sanction is not without precedence.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the important amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY) to protect the freedom of association of the Boy Scouts of America that is inherent in the Constitution of the United States of America.

Mr. Chairman, it is a sad, sad day in this country when the Boy Scouts of America, an institution recognized as a pillar of moral strength, is increasingly denied access to school facilities based on its membership or leadership criteria.

Mr. Chairman, in an era where the headlines have been graced with atrocious incidents of kids killing kids, the rise of drugs and violence in our schools, it is shocking that this Congress would stand by those who point to the Boy Scouts and order them out of our schools.

High school students in the State of Indiana can be asked to watch MTV programs to fulfill a course requirement, but the prospect of allowing the Boy Scouts of America to meet in the same building is somehow offensive to the Constitution of this great land.

The Boy Scouts of America is a model of integrity, strong ethics, devotion to God and the public good. Closing school doors to them is at minimum misguided, and at the most it is extremism.

The Founders of this Nation fought for one Nation under God. The phrase "In God we trust," Mr. Chairman, graces the walls of this very Chamber as testimony to this historic truth. Let us in this place by this amendment make it possible for the next generation of Americans to embrace those same timeless values.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment that, if those words are believed by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) on the other side of the aisle, then it would make sense that all boys, not just some boys can be members of Scouting.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT).

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, let us be clear. This amendment does nothing, nothing for the Boy Scouts. They are already well protected, not by some statute, but by the Constitution. That constitutional principle is already well established.

Under the first amendment, they cannot be denied for the use of any public forum that is made available to other groups. For example, back in 1968, a Federal Court of Appeals upheld the right of the Ku Klux Klan to use a high school gym for a Klan meeting. In this past March, a Federal District Court applied the same principle to the Boy Scouts when a school board in Florida attempted to deny them the use of school facilities. So my colleagues do not have to worry about the Boy Scouts. They are well protected now.

The reality is that this amendment is not about the Boy Scouts. It is about a conservative social agenda that holds passionate views about sexual orientation. The Boy Scouts' policy on sexual orientation is well known. That is fine. The gentleman is entitled to his views, and the Boy Scouts' are entitled to their views. But they ought not to be entitled to use the Congress of the United States to make a political statement that promotes intolerance and discrimination.

Vote no on the Hilleary amendment.

□ 1630

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER).

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

During the last series of votes, 68 Republicans voted against the President on the most important provision of his Leave No Child Behind plan, and that was the portion that would have allowed students to be educated in private institutions if their public institution had failed them. That is unfortunate, because that was the heart of the bill.

And since we are not going to allow students to go to private institutions, it makes perfect sense that we should now adopt this amendment to at least allow the private institutions to come into the schools and help educate children. In this case, we are talking about the Boy Scouts of America, which, as we just heard from the previous speaker, there are some here in Washington who are willing to associate the word "intolerance" with the Boy Scouts of America, which, of course, is just absurd.

The Boy Scouts of America are anything but that. They are extremely tolerant and extremely open and they are a fine organization that has a long history in helping to provide guidance and support and education to the young boys of America who will ultimately become some of America's best leaders, many of whom serve right here in the United States House of Representatives and over across the Capitol.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is an important one, because it does really level the playing field and it speaks specifically to an organization that deserves our support here in the Congress, and one that has been the target of an unfortunate and pernicious kind of discrimination. This amendment is very much consistent with the President's plan. Consistent amendments to the President's plan have been kind of in short supply this afternoon, but this is one I think we can wholeheartedly endorse, and I hope the House does.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). The Chair advises that the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY) has 15 seconds remaining and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY) has 1½ minutes remaining.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Chairman, let me just say first that the Boy Scouts, I think, reflect the standards, of course, that we hope for in terms of all young men in our country, and so that is why I believe that this amendment would be dangerous in terms of restricting the use of Federal funds from schools and school districts that choose to stand against the Boy Scouts' discriminatory policies.

Now, this amendment is really unnecessary. It is an unwarranted intrusion into a local school district's ability to set standards for the use of their own facilities. I am very concerned that Congress would eliminate vital funds for our children's schools simply because their school system stands up against discrimination. It also bestows upon the Boy Scouts and other youth groups unique rights that are not available to other student-led groups.

The first amendment already guarantees the Boy Scouts the right to use any school or public facility to the same extent and in the same manner as any other group allowed to use those facilities. So the Hilleary amendment will transform these schools into open forums requiring them to allow anti-gay groups to use school premises regardless of a local school board's decision on the matter. So I urge a "no" vote on this amendment.

Mr. HILLEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time and finish by saying that the Boy Scouts are not protected. They are the target of many, many votes of harassment, in my view, and this is simply to point out they should not have to use their precious resources to claim their constitutional rights in court, nor should the school systems have to use up their precious resources defending against the Boy Scouts in court. This just sets it right for them, and I urge all my colleagues to vote for this amendment.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time and, in closing, I would like to point out I have a letter before me that has been signed by 22 organizations, such as the National PTA, the National School Boards Association, the National Association of Secondary School Principals, and the National Rural Education Association, among many others.

Mr. Chairman, we should vote against this because it is not necessary in the first place, but a vote against this amendment would be a vote telling our children that all children are important, not just some children.

Mr. Chairman, the letter I referred to earlier is submitted for the RECORD as follows:

MAY 22, 2001.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: We are writing today to urge you to reject the "Boy Scouts of America Equal Access Act" which was offered as an amendment to the Leave No Child Left Behind Act of 2001 (H.R. 1). This amendment would deny all Federal education funding to any school district or state education agency that has been found to "discriminate" against the Boy Scouts of America, or any other youth group that denies membership to gays and lesbians.

The Hilleary amendment is an unnecessary, unwarranted intrusion into a local school district's ability to set standards for the use of their own facilities, and bestows upon the Boy Scouts and other youth groups unique rights that are not available to student-led groups.

The amendment is unnecessary because the First Amendment already guarantees the Boy Scouts the right to use public school facilities, to the same extent and in the same manner as any other group allowed to use those facilities.

At the same time, the amendment is an unwarranted intrusion into the decision-making of local school boards because it mandates the creation of an "open forum" any time a school lets one community group use their facilities. The Hilleary amendment decrees that such an action transforms the school into an "open forum," therefore requiring the institution to allow the Boy Scouts and any other anti-gay youth group to use school facilities or premises—regardless of the school's intention or the local school board's decisions on the matter.

We, the undersigned organizations, strongly urge you to oppose this amendment. The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. HILLEARY).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 25 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 25 OFFERED BY MS. VELÁZQUEZ

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 25 offered by Ms. Velázquez:

In section 501 of the bill, in section 5123(h) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (as proposed to be amended by such section 501), insert after paragraph (2) the following:

"(3) IN-KIND CONTRIBUTIONS.—Each State that requires an eligible entity to match funds under this subsection shall permit such entity to provide all or any portion of such match in the form of in-kind contributions.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take the time in opposition, since no one is here to take it.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) will control the 5 minutes in opposition.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ).

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First and foremost, Mr. Chairman, I would like to recognize the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), as well as the members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce for all their hard work on the bill we have before us today.

The amendment I am offering will make it easier for needy schools to obtain 21st Century Community Learning Grants. 21st Century Community Learning Grants provide funding to schools in disadvantaged communities that, in collaboration with other public and non-profit agencies and organizations, run before- and after-school programs designed to improve academic achievement. The services they provide include tutoring, technology training, expanded library services, arts and music education, recreational activities, and programs to promote parental involvement and prevent drug use and violence.

These services can mean all the difference to a struggling student or a failing school. However, H.R. 1, as currently drafted, permits States to require grant recipients to provide matching funds equal to the amount of grant. Although the bill also requires States that choose to implement such a matching requirement, to do so on a sliding fee scale, this still is a burdensome requirement on prospective grantees that lack access to fund, the same prospective grantees that are most in need of 21st Century Community Learning Programs.

By only allowing monetary contributions to be used to meet the matching requirements, we eliminate many neighborhoods from eligibility and we underestimate the value of in-kind contributions. These centers serve some of our poorest communities, and this language has the potential to cripple plans for those schools located in States with matching requirements. Obviously, this is a risk we cannot afford.

My amendment will make it easier for the neediest grantees to put together competitive applications by allowing them to count in-kind contributions toward a matching requirement. Although many grantees in disadvantaged communities lack access to funds, they do not lack access to resources. By allowing grantees to count in-kind services, such as volunteer time and donated equipment, we will not only be providing an opportunity to a needy school, we will also be encouraging investment and support from the surrounding community.

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment's efforts to eliminate obstacles to much-needed funding for disadvantaged schools and communities. Let us give all students the tools they need to strive for excellence. Let us make sure no child is left behind.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentlewoman from New York for her contribution to this bill. As we all know, the 21st Century Community Learning Center Program is one that does, in fact, require a local match. For some smaller communities or some faith-based or community-based programs, their ability to come up with the matching funds to do these programs is somewhat limited.

I do think that allowing in-kind services as part of the match does provide more flexibility for these programs at the local level. It is a very good amendment, and I am happy to support it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 26 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 26 OFFERED BY MR. KIRK

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 26 offered by Mr. KIRK:

At the end of title VI of the bill, add the following:

SEC. 607. SENSE OF CONGRESS RELATING TO FULL FUNDING OF THE IMPACT AID PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) More than 90 percent of resources for school districts in the United States are raised from State and local property taxes.

(2) School districts that are affected by the presence of the Federal government, such as Federal property that is not subject to taxation, must still provide educational services to children who are federally connected by such activities of the Federal government.

(3) To mitigate this loss of funding, Congress has made "impact aid" payments to local educational agencies to reimburse the agencies for the costs of educating federally connected children.

(4) From 1950 to 1969, Congress provided full funding for the impact aid program to help defray the costs of educating federally connected children.

(5) For fiscal year 2000, Congress provided only 46 percent of the costs of educating federally connected children.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the House of Representatives, Senate, and Administration should work together to provide full funding for the impact aid program in future fiscal years in order to meet the needs of school districts affected by a Federal presence; and

(2) the full funding of the impact aid program will ensure that federally connected children will continue to receive a quality education.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and a member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is about Impact Aid. If we are concerned about military pay, if we are concerned about military housing, if we are concerned about military health care, we also need to be concerned about the children of military personnel. That is why we support Impact Aid.

The average school district in America, the $10 million school district, gets $9 million from local resources and only $1 million from the Federal Government. But what happens if we cannot tax that housing? In many military districts, Indian reservations, and other facilities, kids flood into the school districts, but we have no dollars attached. The Impact Aid program makes up the difference, but it has made up the difference in an inadequate way.

From 1950 to 1969, the Federal Government fully funded the Impact Aid program, but now only 46 percent of the needs of military kids and other kids are met. This amendment is the start of a process where we will build consensus behind the Impact Aid program. For us, we make a statement today that the needs of military kids and other kids must be met by fully funding Federal Impact Aid.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time in opposition, even though I am actually in support of this measure.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. DAVIS) will control the 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, Impact Aid is a program that is over 50 years old, yet for the last 30 years Congress has failed to fund the program fully. This program is designed to offset the losses school districts suffer in property taxes when Federal lands reduce their tax rolls but provide many children to be educated. This funding is critical to balance the local school district income so that the educational programs for all the students of the affected district is not diminished.

The issue, Mr. Chairman, is one of fairness. The level at which Impact Aid is currently funded does not begin to offset the costs for educating a child. Generations of military families have been based in San Diego and Coronado in my district, and developments of federally-owned housing are home to children throughout the area. We are very proud of the opportunity to serve the children of our military forces. Congress should be equally proud of providing the full funding that it promised half a century ago.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) for bringing this forward.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN), my Democratic colleague and partner in this effort.

Mr. LARSEN of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for bringing this important issue to the attention of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, just last month I attended a ceremony, a welcome home ceremony in Oak Harbor, Washington, in my district; a welcome home ceremony for the 24 crew members of the plane that was downed in China. Oak Harbor has been the home of Naval Air Station Whidbey Island for many years, and 7,000 people turned out for this homecoming event, showing the commitment that the town of Oak Harbor has made to the presence of Naval Air Station Whidbey in my district.

This amendment today, Mr. Chairman, would express the sense of Congress that the Federal Government must recognize that commitment, must recognize the sacrifice that communities all over our country are making. This sense of Congress amendment would say that the Impact Aid program should have guaranteed funding for districts that so desperately need it.

□ 1645

Whether it is Oak Harbor or Marysville, which is the home to the Tulalip Indian Reservation, these communities depend heavily upon funding; and I ask this body to support this amendment.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY).

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LARSEN) to fully fund Impact Aid. I am proud to join them in this amendment and I commend these two freshman Members for their initiative and commitment to education for their constituencies.

While many of us know Impact Aid is the Federal Government assistance program to local school districts where there is a large Federal presence, many of my colleagues may not know what Impact Aid means to cities such as New York City, my home city.

$5.8 million goes to New York City annually in Impact Aid funding to help improve the quality of education for over 70,000 children who live in public housing. As representative of the largest public housing complex in the U.S. and of thousands of working New York families who make minimum wage and send their children to public schools, full funding for Impact Aid is critical to make sure that America provides educational opportunities to all of our children, no matter where they live and no matter what their income level is.

While I thank the Committee on Education and the Workforce for recognizing the importance of Impact Aid to communities throughout the country, there is more that can be done. Last year $900 million was allocated for Impact Aid when the true need is closer to $1.5 billion.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment and urge my colleagues to fight for full funding of Impact Aid in conference with the Senate.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY) representing West Point.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Kirk-Larsen amendment expressing the sense of Congress that Impact Aid programs should be fully funded.

I join my colleagues in their efforts to ensure that children in federally impacted school districts receive quality education. Like many of my colleagues, I represent a highly impacted, actually the most highly impacted school district in the United States of America. Adjacent to West Point, the Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District exists between Federal land, State land, and the Hudson River. This unique positioning means that over 90 percent of the land in the school district is nontaxable. Without Impact Aid, this school district is unable to raise the revenue necessary to educate its students.

The increase in funding for section 8002, which applies to land-impacted districts, has helped the Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District undertake capital improvements, hire new teachers, tutors, and reinstate the college advanced placement courses which they had to cut.

However, this section and the entire Impact Aid program is still not fully funded. As we continue to debate improvements to our children's education, we absolutely must not forget those military children sitting in classrooms in federally impacted school districts. We rely on Impact Aid funds for a quality education. Support the Kirk amendment and support full funding for Impact Aid.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Kirk-Larsen amendment expressing the Sense of Congress that the Impact Aid Program should be fully funded.

I join my colleagues in their efforts to ensure that children in federally impacted school districts receive a quality education.

Created in 1950, the Impact Aid Program addresses the increased burden felt by school districts that host military children or have nontaxable federal lands.

On behalf of the 1,500 school districts and 1.5 million federally connected students across the country who rely upon the Impact Aid funds for a good education, I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

The Impact Aid program is equally important to an additional 17.5 million children whose education is linked to the eligibility of their school, or their classmates, to receive Impact Aid funding.

Like many of my colleagues, I represent the most highly impacted school district in the U.S. that relies upon the Impact Aid Program.

Adjacent to West Point, the Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District, in Orange County, NY exists between federal land, state land, and the Hudson River.

This unique positioning means that over 90 percent of the land in the school district is non-taxable.

Without Impact Aid, this school district is unable to raise the revenue necessary to educate its students.

The increase in funding for Section 8002, which applies to land impacted districts, has helped the Highland Falls-Fort Montgomery School District undertake capital improvements, such as hiring new teachers, tutors and reinstating College Advanced Placement courses.

This is quite a contrast to prior years when they were faced with the possibility of closing their doors.

However, this section and the entire Impact Aid Program is still not fully funded.

As we continue to debate improvements to our children's education, we must not forget those military children sitting in classrooms in federally impacted school districts.

We rely on Impact Aid funds for a quality education.

Support the Kirk amendment and support full funding of the Impact Aid Program.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Kirk amendment which expresses the sense of Congress that the Impact Aid program should be fully funded. Fully funding the Impact Aid program will greatly help the vast numbers of local school districts which have lost tax revenue as a result of a large Federal presence in their district.

This especially holds true of my congressional district in New Mexico which has a large number of schools which depend on Impact Aid funding and who educate a large number of Native American students.

The last time this program was fully funded was 1950 through 1969. Since that time, the funding levels for Impact Aid have not kept up with the amount required to cover the Federal Government's obligation to this program.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot stress how important this program is to the more than 1,500 school districts and 1.5 million children across the country who depend on this program for a quality education. I urge all of my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with everything that the gentleman said, except that I think it should be called the Kirk, Larsen, Davis, Udall, Crowley, Hayworth, Kelly, Edwards and Hayes amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), chairman of the committee.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois for bringing this sense of Congress to the floor today.

Mr. Chairman, as a Member who does not have Impact Aid in my district, when I came to Congress, I was wondering what is this and why do we do it. Over the years, Members who have large military and civilian Federal employee impact in their district, do in fact receive funds because we do not as the Federal Government pay taxes in those communities.

I want to congratulate the gentleman from Illinois for bringing this resolution here. I think in the few months he has been here he has done a great job in making sure I am fully aware of how important Impact Aid is to his district and how important it is to other Members' districts. It is a good resolution. We ought to push the appropriators, including Mr. Chairman, that we should in fact fully be funding Impact Aid.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, to conclude on this amendment, I want to salute the bipartisan leadership on this. We have an equal number of Democrats and Republicans concerned.

Under the Constitution, the number one mission of our government is national security; but I think education also comes as a top priority, and it is the education of military kids, Indian kids, and kids coming off of Federal property that is a key Federal responsibility.

We have fallen behind, Mr. Chairman. We used to fully fund this program. We now only fund 46 percent. So by adopting this amendment, I think we can unscure the achievement and begin the consensus building that we need to fully fund the needs of military, Indian and other related kids for Impact Aid.

Mr. Chairman, the children of military families are the most likely to be joining the military in the future. So for our country's own national defense, making sure that quality education is available on or near military, Indian reservations, and other Federal facilities is critical. I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, it has been a pleasure for me to join with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) and our colleagues on both sides of the aisle on this issue. As a school board member in San Diego from 1983 to 1992, I felt like we were always going to lobby on behalf of these students. We always had to make a case for these students. It does not seem right that we had to make a case for the children of the families who were fighting for this Nation's security.

Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that we are working together on this today, and I certainly hope all of my colleagues will join us on a strong "aye" vote.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, Impact Aid is a crucial element of the basic financial support for schools in my Congressional District in North Carolina. Just as local taxes support other school districts, Impact Aid bridges the gap in counties where the Federal Government is a major landowner. In some cases, Impact Aid supplies a significant portion of school districts' operating budgets.

As one of the over 150 members of the Impact Aid Coalition, one of the largest bipartisan coalitions in Congress, we have worked together to support our local school systems. Full funding for this program will fulfill the federal government's commitment not only to our local school systems but the families of our military men and women and those citizens who are affected by Federal properties. I will continue to work with the appropriators for full funding for this crucial education program and I commend my colleague from Illinois for continuing to support this program.

Mr. SHROCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of this amendment which recognizes the importance of Impact Aid. In the Commonwealth of Virginia, over 60,000 students of military families attend federally impacted schools. Their parents make many sacrifices to support our national defense. We must provide these students with the quality education that they deserve. By making the Impact Aid an entitlement, the Federal Government will once again become a full partner with the taxpayers in federally connected districts as they, together, provide the revenue needed to deliver a free public education not only military to dependent students, Native American students and other eligible students, but to all students enrolled in federally connected school districts. I urge each Member of Congress to recognize its intent by supporting this bipartisan effort to fully fund the Impact Aid Program.

Mrs. DAVIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BONILLA). All time for debate on this amendment has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. KIRK. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK) will be postponed.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 27 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 27 OFFERED BY MR. HOEFFEL

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 27 offered by Mr. HOEFFEL: In section 5214(b)(1) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as proposed to be amended by section 501 of the bill, add at the end the following: "Such a description may include how the applicant will provide release time for teachers (which may include the provision of a substitute teacher).".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, although I do not oppose the amendment, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL).

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for their support for my amendment.

This amendment would add new flexibility to the Federal funds provided in this bill in the enhancing education through technology program to clarify that our school districts on their own initiative can use these funds to provide for the associated cost of leave time so that teachers can be trained in technology.

When I was first elected, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make sure I knew as much about the public schools in my district as I could. I wanted to hear from the educators in my district about their needs. I sent out a survey to each of the school districts. I started and continue to hold regular education round tables open to parents and teachers, principals and superintendents. I learned a lot about my district and the schools in my district. They obviously put a high priority on educating children, and they want to use the highest and best technology.

I represent a suburban district. We are fortunate to have the resources so that most of my school districts have a good amount of hardware, of computers and so forth, so they are able to provide computers for teachers and students. But I discovered that the biggest problem in my district was getting the teachers trained on technology and to keep them up to date on technology.

Mr. Chairman, the training courses are available to the teachers, but it is difficult in many cases for the school districts to make the time to get teachers out of the classroom in order to be trained.

This amendment would make it clear that school districts can use this Federal money as part of their application for funding under the enhancing education through technology program to apply for leave time and other associated costs to make sure they can get their teachers out of the classroom on a regular basis as they see fit at the local level to keep them trained and updated on technology.

This amendment will go a long way to help the professional development of teachers. While in this bill we are determined to leave no child behind, let us make sure we leave no teacher behind as well. I ask my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his contribution on the technology assistance for local schools. The amendment brought to us by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL) would increase local flexibility for how they can use the technology money. I think it is a valuable addition, and urge Members to adopt it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) for his leadership and his support on this particular bill and his hard work in the committee to bring forward this excellent bill. I thank again the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the ranking member.

Mr. HONDA. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Hoeffel Amendment because I believe that in order for schools to perform at 21st century levels, we must provide them with 21st century technology and training.

Our teachers and administrators must be better trained if we are to maximize the use of computers and the Internet in schools. The Hoeffel Amendment will ensure that while classroom teachers seek out advanced technology training that their districts will support them. This amendment truly reflects our willingness to put our money where our mouth is. This amendment says we support our teachers.

Through my experience as a high school teacher and principal, I know that high achievement is dependent upon the learning environment. That means up-to-date, safe buildings, high quality teachers, and goods tools to promote learning.

We need to work with teachers and high tech businesses to integrate technology into classroom curriculum. We also need to encourage high tech businesses to lend their employees to our schools in order to ensure the most up-to-date technology skills.

I urge my colleagues to support the Hoeffel Amendment.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. HOEFFEL).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 28 printed in House Report 107-69.

AMENDMENT NO. 28 OFFERED BY MR. COX

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 28 offered by Mr. Cox:
In part E of title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as proposed to be amended by section 801 of the bill—

(1) redesignate section 8520 as section 8521 (and correct any cross-references accordingly); and

(2) insert after section 8519 the following:

“SEC. 8520. AGGREGATE INCREASE IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002 EQUAL TO 11.5 PERCENT.

“Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act—

“(1) for fiscal year 2002, the aggregate amount of funds authorized to be appropriated under this Act shall be $20,528,782,360 (representing an increase of 11.5 percent over the aggregate amount appropriated for programs under this Act for fiscal year 2001); and

“(2) for each subsequent fiscal year covered by this Act, the aggregate amount of funds authorized to be appropriated under this Act shall be the amount appropriated for the preceding fiscal year, increased by 3.5 percent.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 143, the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) each will control 10 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. Cox).

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to more closely conform the spending levels in H.R. 1 to the budget that has been adopted by the Congress and by this House and to the budget that has been submitted to us by the President.

□ 1700

In their letter of support for this legislation, the administration, on May 15, 2001, wrote as follows: “The administration supports House passage of H.R. 1, which reflects the themes of no child left behind, the President’s comprehensive proposal to reform the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965.

“The administration urges the House to refine the committee bill; to maintain fiscal discipline. The bill,” the administration says, “contains excessive appropriation authorization levels.”

Here is what the letter says specifically about that: “The total appropriation,” according to the Office of Management and Budget, “contained in H.R. 1 as reported exceeds the President’s total request by over nearly $5 billion for fiscal year 2002. The administration has produced a responsible budget that includes significant increases for key education programs, while also maintaining fiscal discipline government-wide. The administration urges the House to pass a bill that is closely aligned with the President’s budget.”

This amendment will implement President George W. Bush’s commitment to an 11.5 percent increase in funding for education. This amendment provides that the total of all the funding increases in this bill, in the first year, will represent an 11.5 percent increase over fiscal year 2001.

This is a rate of growth proposed for all Department of Education programs by the President. In fact, this amendment authorizes more funding than the President proposed in his budget and certainly more funding than we proposed in our budget.

This 11.5 percent increase authorized in this amendment will authorize approximately $1.5 billion more for fiscal year 2002 than did H.R. 1 as introduced. For all subsequent years, the amendment authorizes further increases in aggregate funding of 14 percent. This increase in subsequent years is in line with President Bush’s original budget request for K–12 education programs.

This amendment more than triples the percentage increase in K–12 funding in our budget resolution. This amendment guarantees that increases in education spending and increases for the Department of Education will make it the most significant recipient of additional funds of any cabinet agency. This is the largest increase in Federal spending for any cabinet agency.

Mr. Chairman, the Bush administration is urging amendment of H.R. 1 to more closely conform to the President’s budget. Our choice is to spend a great deal more, 11.5 percent, or to in fact bust the budget so much to make this bill so unrecognizable that we are jeopardizing other education programs that are not covered by this bill if we intend to live within the overall projection of an 11.5 percent increase in funding for education.

I, therefore, urge adoption of this amendment, which is a very moderate approach to resolving the problem, because it is a much bigger increase in spending than was proposed by the administration. It is a bigger increase than was proposed in our own budget. It is a bigger increase than was in H.R. 1 as introduced. It is consistent with the 11.5 percent increase across the board for education that the administration proposes; and yet it maintains fiscal discipline, something we should be teaching our children as we act here in Congress responsibly with a very good bill to improve education.

It is important to live within a budget. Certainly an 11.5 percent increase in these programs, the largest increase of any cabinet agency, is something that we should all be very, very proud of. I urge adoption of this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I have always believed that education, the education dollar, is really an investment dollar. It should really be part of our capital budget. It is a very important area of our national life, and we worked closely on these figures within the committee and reached bipartisan support for these figures in the committee, not without the knowledge of the White House.

Now, the White House submitted the budget, but White Houses are even permitted to adjust figures. We worked closely with Sandy Kress from the White House as we, in a bipartisan way, crafted what we figured were figures that should be the authorization levels for these programs.

Now, albeit we will have to fight for the appropriations for these things, I have always said that the authorization is much like a get-well card. If I have a friend who is ill, I will send my friend a get-well card indicating my sentiment and the value of my friend; but what my friend really needs is the Blue Cross card to pay the bills.

This is what the committee, the authorizing committee, agreed upon were figures that would address the needs of education in this country. We did not do this in a vacuum in secret from the White House. Mr. Sandy Kress was with us most of those times as we discussed this. So I would assume the White House certainly wants this bill to be passed. I know they have been working very, very hard on both sides of the aisle to get this bill passed.

So let us give the White House a chance in some informal way to adjust its figures that it had in its budget.

What did we do in the committee? We did double the title I program over 5 years to $17.2 billion to raise the academic achievement of our low-income children. We have all talked about the importance of title I.

We increased resources for teacher quality by $1.3 billion to $3.6 billion. We have school districts throughout this country that have what I call “bus stop” teachers. They have teachers who are not qualified, they are not certified, not qualified to teach in their field. That is unfair to our students so we increased money for teacher quality.

We set aside $500 million to turn around our low-performing schools. We have to identify those low-performing schools by having some standards and some good assessment, and we will turn those schools around hopefully with these dollars.

We invest $750 million for students with limited English proficiency, a $290 million increase. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA) worked very hard on that issue. It increases an area that is very, very important for our national life.

It increases education technology to $1 billion, an increase of $128 million.

These figures were arrived at in the full light of the day with the awareness of the White House, and the White House in the last few days has been pushing for enactment of this bill. I would urge that this amendment be turned down.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX). The Cox amendment is responsible public policy to allow for an 11.5 percent increase in elementary and secondary education funding over last year's level. This amendment authorizes more money for K-12 programs than did H.R. 1, "leave no child behind" legislation as introduced.

By standing here today and supporting the Cox amendment others may make claims that this is a gutting or cutting amendment of the whole bill; that this for some reason would make me less of a pro-child or pro-education Member of Congress.

Let me be clear on a couple of things. First, this amendment allows for a significant amount of increased spending for education over the current appropriation levels.

Secondly, it is not as if money alone will put us on the path to education reform in this country. We all know that we have spent over $120 billion Federal dollars on title I programs for disadvantaged children since the program began in 1965, with $80 billion in the last decade. We have little improvement to show for all of this spending.

The achievement gap has not closed. In fact, despite increased spending, test scores remain stagnant.

We should not subsidize failure. We should not pour more money into the status quo. As we provide for more funding, we should ask for results.

In my life before Congress, I was a quality consultant, and we worked a lot on improving qualities in corporations; and we found that just putting more money or energy behind the current processes seldom improved very much at all. It was only when we let the people who were actually on the front lines have the flexibility and authority to actually change things that quality could actually be improved. Measuring output and setting minimum standards did very little to improve quality.

America, in just about every other segment, has understood that changing the process can improve the quality.

I know we all desire the same outcome. We want better schools and better education for all of our children across this land. To secure the future for our children, I believe that the answer is not money alone but that embracing some real reform concepts that we have talked about here today.

I believe that when we give teachers and principals and parents more flexibility and authority at the local level, we can actually change things. And until we do, just flooding the system with more money is not going to work.

We have a very responsible proposal by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) to increase funding over a level last year that was also substantially increased. Let us give time for our reforms to work. Let us fund it at an 11.5 percent increase, more money for reading and all the critical programs we have talked about, and then review in a year or two and see how we can continue to improve.

I urge all of my colleagues to support the COX amendment as a practical measure.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Without objection, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) will control the time in opposition.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. There is a basic agreement in this bill that would be completely rejected and violated if this amendment were enacted. And the agreement is this: many of us who frankly have some misgivings about annual testing held together yesterday and with a bipartisan majority rejected an amendment that would have removed annual testing from this bill. Here is what the annual testing will tell us: schools that are overcrowded, that have minimal parental involvement, that have teachers teaching out of field, in dilapidated facilities, that are not safe, will have low test scores. That is what the annual testing is going to tell us.

What we also know is that fixing that problem will require better teachers teaching in field to smaller classes with better technology in more modern, safer facilities, with greater parental involvement, with breakfast programs, with after-school programs, with tutoring and summer school, and all of the other elements that make a school successful. That costs money.

If we do not follow up on the other part of this agreement and provide for the doubling of title I funding that is authorized by this bill, then this bill is nothing but a cruel hoax on the lagging schools and the struggling students of this country.

The amendment does a public service, I must say. It points out the difference between the rhetoric of the administration and the reality of the budget resolution approved by this House and by the other body. Perhaps by the rules we are bound by that resolution, but by our commitment to better education and by our commitment to the principles that underlie this bill we are not. We should reject this amendment and adhere to this deal.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER).

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the gentleman's amendment. Over my 10 years in Congress, I have often come down on this floor to argue for a balanced budget, to argue for a line item veto, to argue against a space station that is now an additional $4 billion over budget, as someone who believes that money is not the answer to all of our problems.

□ 1715

In this bill, we have crafted a bipartisan agreement that says, very carefully, we will test more children and diagnostically use those tests to try to help remediate many of these children in title I schools in some of the poorest areas of America, in schools where some of these children do not have computers, where they have textbooks with missing pages that are 30 years old. They have roofs falling down on top of them, and they have schools that sometimes are delayed opening by 3 and 4 weeks because of plumbing problems.

Now, I would love to be a political consultant and put commercials together in the next election which would kind of say on these votes coming up, here was a vote to put $3 billion toward the poorest children in America and help in a bipartisan way get them a good education, or another vote to give the taxpayers of this country a $1.35 trillion tax cut. We did not have enough room to help the poorest kids in America, but we sure had plenty to go even higher than a $1.35 trillion tax cut.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bipartisan agreement to help on bipartisan testing, to help remediate in diagnostic ways the poorest kids in the poorest districts. Let us defeat this amendment and move forward to conference with a bipartisan bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remaining time for the purposes of closing to the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK).

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding me this time.

What I think this House needs to bear in mind as we consider this very, very important amendment is that the structure that we have put forth is a formula which really puts the Federal Government into the position of elaborating very strict standards that the school districts that are eligible for this funding under title I and other titles must meet in order to receive the funding. And then, on top of that, pursuant to the President's recommendation, we have now said that the schools have to test these children in every grade from 3 to 8. Why are we doing all of this testing if we are not going to help these children and the schools meet their requirements of success? Leave no child behind. We cannot test, evaluate, have standards, require the schools to meet them and not come up with the necessary resources.

So I urge this House to keep faith with what the President has said, leave no child behind, keep faith with what the bipartisan committee has done in recommending H.R. 1, and it was a very difficult task; there are lots of things that I would like to see in this bill, school construction, smaller classrooms and other things, but we came together with a core agreement. The Republicans had to make some concessions, the Democrats made concessions, but we have an understanding that this is what it takes to reform education in America, to make sure that the poorest among us have an opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, we have lifted up the hope and faith of the people of this country, the teachers and the families who believe that what we are doing means something when we double the funding for title I. It is not an empty phrase, it is not a percentage over what we did last year. This is a new thrust to try to meet the responsibilities of this country. Yes, local school districts and the States have the primary responsibility for education, but the Federal Government is saying, we want to help. Do not diminish that promise of help by cutting before we even get to the table to negotiate with the appropriators on the money necessary to produce equal opportunity for our kids in this country.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the debate be extended by 5 minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFER).

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Our schools are important enough and our children matter enough that we ought to be willing to spend a lot of money, frankly, on education, if that spending comes along with real, meaningful reform that has the promise, offers the promise of improving our schools.

The President proposed meaningful reform, and he also proposed spending 11.5 percent in increases over last year's spending on education. Now, the reform has been ripped out of the bill. The choice has been taken out of the bill. The President proposed school choice in his Leave No Child Behind provision; that is gone. The flexibility provisions are not even going to be brought up on the floor. That is gone. What we have are some testing provisions, all of which can fit easily within the 11.5 percent increase that the President proposed for the whole plan. H.R. 1 now is just a fraction of the plan, yet we are spending even more money than the President proposed.

In an effort to try to be consistent and at least stick to what the President originally had suggested this Congress do, he stood right here in front of us, he brought this plan with him and described it, he brought his budget proposals and suggested that the government should grow at a rate of 4 percent, but he made the exception with the Department of Education, that the Department of Education should grow at a rate of 11.5 percent over the next year, nearly 3 times more than the rest of government.

Those reforms, I believe, were important, and I regret that they are no longer part of H.R. 1. But the Committee on Education and the Workforce prepared this chart and I would refer Members to it. It shows that way back in 1990, we had an expenditure of about $18.6 billion. That has grown this year to $42.1 billion. This is a huge escalation in growth and spending in the size of the education bureaucracy, yet test scores in the country remain stagnant.

The message here is that throwing more money at the education problem clearly has no impact whatsoever on the improvement of academic performance of our students; reform does. However, we decided reform is not important in H.R. 1. Let us at least give the President a victory on his spending proposals. Let us adopt the Cox amendment at 11.5 percent.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

I want to again focus our attention on the fact that the amendment that is before us calls for an 11.5 percent increase over last year in funding for the programs covered by this legislation.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my colleagues on this side of the aisle have already laid out the situation that we find ourselves in. Passage of this amendment, in fact, breaks the arrangement and the deal that we have with respect to this legislation.

Let us look at why we have added the increases that we have in this legislation. We have added the increases in this legislation because we think they are important to bringing about the reforms that many in this Congress have said, many on both sides of the aisle, but also what clearly this President of the United States has said that he wants to achieve in terms of the results. Yes, that chart that was just held up by the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFER), and earlier held up a number of times by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), tells us a story that we are not particularly proud of. But that is because in the past, generally, when we have authorized this legislation, we have not put in the accountability provisions that are in this bill.

So these school districts that have among the highest percentages of poor children of any school districts in the Nation, very often they are also the poorest school districts because they do not have very high assessed evaluations, so certainly they are not receiving the resources that are necessary that they receive, or we would not have this program, because the States have already made the determination to not provide them the equalized funding.

But among these, the poorest school districts with the poorest children, as the President will point out, and the poorest performing children, under this legislation, within 4 years they are going to have to have a qualified teacher in every classroom. Today they have teachers on emergency credentials. Today they have teachers on provisional credentials. They are going to have to get those teachers trained, certified and qualified to teach in the subject matter in which they are teaching. That does not come free. They are going to be held accountable, not just for the average, how the average child is doing in the school district, but they are going to be held accountable for every poor child, for every minority child, for every limited English-speaking child in that school district. They are going to have to have the results that suggest that they are making the yearly progress. They are going to be held to yearly standards on making that progress according to the standards selected by the States.

That is why we need new resources. That is why it is not a question of whether it is 11 percent or not, it is a question of whether or not we are adequately prepared to fund and to provide these kids an opportunity and a first class education. Because even with this effort, almost all of these children will not have the financial resources available to them that many of our children have had available to them in the schools where they have gone. That is why they are among some of the least performing schools in our system.

So let us understand that this is a very different arrangement than what the Congress has done in the past. There is a huge lobby in this town that is against this bill, because they are for the status quo. They are not for testing. They are not for accountability. They are just for Federal dollars. And what we have said in this legislation is we are not going there again. We are not going to have this, the first education bill of the millennium. We are not going to have this, when we just put the money on the table. As the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) says, they just come by and take it. No, if you want to sign up for this, you are going to be held accountable and you have to have first class programs for all of the children, all of the children, and they deserve them.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SHADEGG), the chairman of the Republican Study Committee.

Mr. SHADEGG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

I want to first associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFER), who pointed out that it is regrettable that much of the reforms that were in this legislation that would have improved education across America are gone. But I really want to focus my remarks now on the Cox amendment and why I think it is such a good amendment.

The gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) who spoke before the last speaker on the other side, in her remarks, said that we should not begin this process by cutting; indeed, that that would be a serious mistake. Well, make no mistake about it: there is no cutting going on in this bill or in the Cox amendment, nor is there any cutting going on in education spending.

Since the Republican Party became the majority in this Congress, we have more than doubled the funding for K-through-12 education. Indeed, we have increased it by 109 percent. That is not a cut of spending by any stretch. In the Cox amendment, we triple funding. As a matter of fact, as this chart shows, we triple the rate of funding increase from the original H.R. 1 for K-through-12 education. We go to the President's proposal of an 11.5 percent spending increase next year, the highest of any cabinet level agency in the country. So for someone to talk about cutting, they are simply not getting the facts straight. A tripling of the rate of spending is not cutting. This is a fiscally responsible amendment, which I urge my colleagues to adopt.

□ 1730

Let us look at some of the other facts.

The Cox amendment matches the President's Department of Education budget request. The Cox amendment authorizes more funding for K through 12 education programs than did H.R. 1, as introduced. The Cox amendment authorizes more funding for K through 12 programs than the President's budget.

On top of that, the Cox amendment guarantees that the Department of Education will receive the single largest increase in spending of any cabinet agency.

This is a reasonable amendment. It is a fiscally prudent amendment. To call it cutting is to misrepresent the facts. I urge my colleagues to join me in passing the Cox amendment.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me say this about this amendment to cut these education monies for the poorest children in our society and the poorest school districts in our society.

Mr. Chairman, we have to put it in context. We have to put it in context. We are going to finish this bill in the next hour. Then we are going to have a motion to go to conference on a tax bill, a $1.3 trillion tax bill that is going to spend 13 times as much on the top 1 percent of taxpayers in this country than we are going to spend in all of this legislation.

Some on that side of the aisle would think that the rich do not have enough money and the poor have too much. This money is absolutely essential in this bill if in fact we are going to bring about the reforms that almost every Member in this body has said that he or she wants for their school districts, for the children who reside in those school districts, and if we are in fact going to have those reforms result in the results that we all say we want in terms of the performance of our students.

They can chop the money, but they should not come telling me they want the same results. They cannot bring about these reforms on the cheap. They cannot do that. So if we put it in the context of what else this Congress is doing, we tried to explain, it would be difficult to do a first class job on education and also to have a $1 trillion tax cut, but they have made those choices.

However, we ought not now, in the same night we are going to do the $1 trillion tax cut, take away from the poorest children in this country their one chance at education, opportunity, and accountability that they have been denied for so very long. That is what we have to understand.

That is why we have got to reject the Cox amendment and stay with the bill that was reported from the committee, that was reported out with overwhelmingly bipartisan support.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), for his hard work on this legislation. I intend to vote for it. I support the accountability that is in this bill. I support the President's aim to make sure that no child is left behind. I support the whole of the President's request, including in particular the President's request to this House that we amend this bill as it was reported to committee to make it more closely conform with the President's budget and our own budget.

The President has proposed an 11.5 percent increase in education programs. Our own budget proposed a 3.2 percent increase in funding for the K through 12 programs that are the subject of this bill.

My amendment increases H.R. 1 as introduced, increases the budget that has already been passed by this House so that the total of programs funded by this bill are increased next year by 11.5 percent. If we do not adopt this amendment, the rate of increase will be 23.5 percent.

I have school-aged kids. They are in second grade, first grade, and preschool. I care a lot about their future, which is why I am so supportive of this big increase in support for education, continuing the major increases in funding that we have experienced over the last several years.

But I worry about their future, not just in education but also in Social Security and in Medicare. I want the future for them to be just as great in the job market as it has been recently during the 1990s. I hope we can have some tax relief so those jobs will be there.

If we go way beyond the 3.2 percent increase in our budget, way beyond even the 11.5 percent that is called for in this amendment, then our appropriators, my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and on this side of the aisle who are striving to maintain our responsible budget, will have to cut other education programs that are not covered by this bill. That is not what anyone here wants.

Mr. Chairman, let us honor the President's request to more closely conform this bill to his and our own budget. Let us live within a budget. Let us honor our children. Let us honor their future. Vote yes on the Cox amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. SHIMKUS). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) will be postponed.

PREFERENTIAL MOTION OFFERED BY MR. GEORGE MILLER OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of my motion. I do so to once again outline the accomplishments of this legislation, and to buy a bit of time for some of our Members who are currently in a meeting.

Mr. Chairman, we are bringing to a close here the debate on H.R. 1. I want to begin by thanking certainly all of the Members that have participated in that debate on this floor, on both sides of the aisle. It has been a spirited debate from time to time, but that is because we have very strongly-held views in this House about education, and we have different views about how that education should be carried out, and the Federal role and involvement in education in this country.

It is honorable and it is important that this House allow that kind of debate, and I appreciate the fact that the Committee on Rules did in fact make in order the amendments that they did. I wish they would have made in order more of the amendments from this side of the aisle so we could have debated school construction and class size reduction, but we were not able to do that.

However, I think, as Members can see from the debate over the last 2 days, it is very clear that this subject matter captures the interest and the imagination of the Members of Congress. They all have very strong feelings on it.

All of us have spent a great deal of time when we were back in our districts visiting schools, talking to schoolteachers, talking to parents, talking to children, going through the process over and over again at all different levels.

It is clear that this is the foundation of our society. This legislation is tough. This legislation is comprehensive. This legislation is controversial. However, I think in fact that the work product that we have put together here is one that we can all be proud of, and I think as we bring about this first reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of this millennium, that we truly are setting out on a different course.

We are setting out on a different course because the President wants to change the direction, and because Members of Congress on a bipartisan basis want to change the direction of the use of Federal dollars and the purposes for which they are used.

This legislation has called together a coalition, again from both sides of the aisle, but even within our own caucus. Some of the suggestions made here, and some of, in fact, the key suggestions, were brought to us in our caucus by the New Democrats, who helped us reach agreement with the Republicans on flexibility, something we have talked about for many years.

It has been very controversial, there has been great resistance to it, but in this legislation in fact we have worked it out. I want to thank those Members for that.

I also want to make clear that I do not want to overlook, as we get to the end, the work that has been done by the staff. The members of the working group spent a lot of time talking about this legislation, but our staff spent much, much more time, as did the staff of all of the Members of the Committee, in bringing about this agreement.

We worked on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays on this legislation, and the staff worked Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays, Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays on this legislation, and very often late at night. I think the work product reflects that. This committee is very fortunate to have people with a great deal of institutional memory and with a great deal of skills and talent and knowledge about this subject matter.

We have warred over some of these topics and we have agreed on some of these topics, but I think that is why in fact we again were able to produce this work product in this Congress this rapidly, and with this level of agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

SEQUENTIAL VOTES POSTPONED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments on which further proceedings were postponed, in the following order:

Amendment No. 20 offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY);

Amendment No. 26 offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK);

Amendment No. 28 offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first vote in this series.

□ 1819

Mr. CALVERT changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 143, the Cox of California amendment, I inadvertently voted "yea" on rollcall No. 143. I intended to vote "nay."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. There being no further amendments in order under the rule, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD "An Evaluation of the Florida A-Plus Accountability and School Choice Program." The report was prepared by Jay P. Greene, Ph.D., Senior Fellow, The Manhattan Institute for Policy Research and research associate, Program on Education Policy and Governance, Harvard University.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Jay P. Greene is a senior fellow at the Manhattan Institute for Policy Research and a research associate at Harvard University's Program on Education Policy and Governance (PEPG). He has conducted evaluations of school choice programs in Milwaukee, Cleveland, Charlotte, and San Antonio. He has also investigated the effects of school choice on civic values and integration. His publications include the chapters, "Civic Values in Public and Private Schools," and "School Choice in Milwaukee: A Randomized Experiment," in the book, Learning from School Choice, published by the Brookings Institution in 1998; "The Effect of Private Education on Political Participation, Social Capital, and Tolerance," in the Fall 1999 issue of The Georgetown Public Policy Review; and "The Texas School Miracle Is for Real," in the Summer 2000 issue of City Journal. He has been a professor of government at the University of Texas at Austin and the University of Houston. He received his Ph.D. from the Government Department at Harvard University in 1995. Dr. Greene lives with his family in Weston, Florida.

AUTHOR'S ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This report was prepared under contract with Florida State University as part of a grant from the Florida Department of Education to evaluate the A-Plus Program. Additional support was provided by Harvard University's Program on Education Policy and Governance (PEPG). Professors Richard Feiock and Tom Dye of Florida State University and Professor Paul Peterson, Director, PEPG, Harvard University, served as principal investigators on this project. Rob Fusco and Tom Dye provided valuable research assistance.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

By offering vouchers to students at failing schools, the Florida A-Plus choice and accountability system was intended to motivate those schools to improve their academic performance. Under this plan, each public school in Florida is assigned a grade, A through F, based on the proportion of its students passing the Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test (FCAT). Students attending schools that receive two "F" grades in four years are eligible to receive vouchers that enable them to attend private schools or to transfer to another public school.

This report examines whether schools that faced the prospect of having vouchers offered to their students experienced larger improvements in their FCAT scores than other schools.

The results show that schools receiving a failing grade from the state in 1999 and whose students would have been offered tuition vouchers if they failed a second time achieved test score gains more than twice as large as those achieved by other schools. While schools with lower previous FCAT scores across all state-assigned grades improved their test scores, schools with failing grades that faced the prospect of vouchers exhibited especially large gains.

The report also establishes that the FCAT math and reading results are highly correlated with the results from a nationally recognized standardized test, the Stanford 9, which suggests that the FCAT is a reliable measure of student performance.

This report shows that the performance of students on academic tests improves when public schools are faced with the prospect that their students will receive vouchers. These results are particularly relevant because of the similarities between the Florida A-Plus choice and accountability system and the education initiatives proposed by President George W. Bush.

The Purpose of the Study

The Florida A-Plus Program is a school accountability system with teeth. Schools that receive two failing grades from the state during a four-year period have vouchers offered to their students so that those students can choose to leave for a different public or private school. The theory behind such a system is that schools in danger of failing will improve their academic performance to avoid the political embarrassment and potential loss in revenues from having their students depart with tuition vouchers.

Whether the theory behind the A-Plus Program is supported by evidence is the issue addressed in this evaluation. While it is plausible that the incentives provided by an accountability system with teeth should be an impetus for reform, it is also plausible that the A-Plus system would not produce meaningful academic improvement. Perhaps schools would develop strategies for improving the grade they received from the state without actually improving the academic performance of students. Perhaps schools would not have the resources of policy flexibility to adopt necessary reforms even if they had the incentives to do so. Perhaps the incentives of the accountability system interact with the incentives of schools politics to produce unintended outcomes. In short, whether the A-Plus system is successful in improving student achievement is a matter that cannot be resolved without reference to evidence.

The evidence presented in this report suggests that the A-Plus Program has been successful at motivating failing schools to improve their academic performance. In addition, the evidence presented in this report suggests that we should have confidence that the improvement in academic achievements is a real improvement and not merely a manipulation of the state's testing and grading system.

A Brief Description of the A-Plus Program

The Florida A-Plus Program assigns each public school a grade based on the performance of its students on the Florida Comprehensive Assessment Tests (FCAT) in reading, math, and writing. Reading and writing FCATs are administered in 4th, 8th, and 10th grades, while the math FCAT is administered in 5th, 8th, and 10th grades. The scale score results from these tests are divided into five categories. The grade that each school receives is determined by the percentage of students scoring above the thresholds established by these five categories or levels. If a school receives two F grades in a four-year period, its students are offered vouchers that they can use to attend a private school. They are also offered the opportunity to attend a better-performing public school.

The FCAT was first administered in the spring of 1998. Following the second administration of the exam in 1999, only two schools in the state had received two failing grades. Both of those schools, located in Escambia County, had vouchers offered to their students. Nearly 50 students and their families from those two schools chose to attend one of a handful of nearby private schools, most of which were religiously affiliated. When the FCAT was administered in 2000, no additional schools had their students offered tuition vouchers because none had failed for a second time.

Additional information on the FCAT and A-Plus Program can be found at the Florida Department of Education's FCAT web site at <http://www.firn.edu/doe/sas/fcathome.htm> or its home page at <http://www.firn.edu/doe/>.

Other Research on Voucher and Accountability Systems

Many states have testing and accountability systems. Some, such as the New York Regents Exam, date back many years. Others, such as the Michigan Educational Assessment Program, are relatively new. States also vary in the difficulty of the tests they administer, the grades to which tests are administered, whether passage is required for promotion or graduation, and whether sanctions or rewards are attached to student and/or school performance.

Despite the increasing prominence of testing and accountability systems as a tool for education reform, the effectiveness of those systems has been the subject of limited systematic research. Additional research in this area is particularly important given the centrality of accountability systems in many state and federal education reform proposals. The attractiveness of such proposals would be increased if stronger empirical evidence were produced to show that widespread testing and grading of schools provided incentives to schools to improve their performance. Evidence on the effects of using vouchers as a sanction for chronically failing schools would speak to whether accountability systems are likely to be more effective at inspiring improvement if vouchers were part of the program. On the other hand, evidence that widespread accountability testing produced results that were subject to manipulation or failed to inspire improvement would argue against the adoption of such policies. And if the evidence failed to show special gains produced by the prospect of vouchers at failing schools then a voucher component of the policy would be less desirable.

The greatest amount of research attention has been devoted to evaluations of the accountability system in Texas. The Texas Assessment of Academic Skills (TAAS) has been in existence for a decade and is the most comprehensive of the state testing systems. Students in Texas are tested in 3rd through 8th grades in math and reading. In addition, passage of an exam that is first offered in 10th grade is required for graduation. The state is also phasing-in requirements that students pass exams in order to be promoted to the next grade.

The extensiveness of TAAS, its centrality in education policy in Texas, and the fact that the governor was a candidate for president attracted considerable attention to the program. Linda McNeil and Angela Valenzuela of Rice University and the University of Texas, respectively, issued a report with a series of theoretical and anecdotal criticisms of TAAS, but presented no systematic data on the educational effectiveness of the program.¹ Walter Haney of Boston College has written about the relationship between TAAS and minority dropout rates, but again has not systematically evaluated the effect of TAAS on educational achievement.²

The most systematic research on TAAs has appeared in two, somewhat contradictory, reports from the Rand Corporation. The first report, with David Grissmer as its chief author, was released in July of 2000.³ It analyzed scores from the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP), a test administered by the U.S. Department of Education, to identify state policies that may contribute to higher academic performance. It found that states like Texas and North Carolina, with extensive accountability systems, had among the highest and most improved NAEP scores after controlling for demographic factors. The report featured a lengthy comparison of student performance in California and Texas to highlight the importance of TAAS in improving academic achievement, as measured by the NAEP.

The second report, with Stephen Klein as its chief author, was released in October of 2000. It cast doubt upon the validity of TAAS scores by suggesting that the results do not correlate with the test results of other standardized tests. Because the other standardized tests are "low stakes tests," without any reward or punishment attached to student or school performance, there are few incentives to manipulate the results or cheat. It is therefore reasonable to assume that the low stakes test results are likely to be a reliable indication of student performance.⁴ Schools and students, however, might have incentives and opportunities to manipulate the results of high stakes tests, like the TAAS. Because Klein finds that the results of the TAAS do not correlate very well with the results of the low stakes standardized tests, he and his colleagues suggest that the TAAS scores do not represent the true academic performance of students.

Klein, however, cannot rule out alternative explanations for the weak correlation between TAAS results and the results of low stakes standardized tests. It is possible that the TAAS, which is based on the mandated Texas curriculum, tests different skills than those tested by the national, standardized tests. Both could produce valid results and be weakly correlated to each other if they are testing different things. It is also possible that the pool of standardized tests available to Klein is not representative of Texas as a whole. The standardized test results that were compared to TAAS results were only from 2,000 non-randomly selected 5th grade students from one part of Texas. If this limited group of students were not representative of all Texas students, then it would be inaccurate to draw any conclusions about TAAS as a whole.

In addition to comparing TAAS and standardized test results, Klein and his colleagues also analyzed NAEP results in Texas. Contrary to the findings of Grissmer and his colleagues whose Rand report was only released a few months earlier, Klein concluded that the NAEP performance in Texas was not exceptionally strong. This finding contradicted Grissmer's finding that strong NAEP performance in Texas confirmed the benefits of a high stakes testing system, like TAAS.⁵

A third examination of NAEP scores in Texas published in City Journal supports Grissmer's claim and refutes Klein's by finding that NAEP improvements were exceptionally strong in Texas while the TAAS accountability system was in place.⁶ The fact that these studies differ while all examining NAEP and TAAS results can be explained by the different time periods examined, the grade levels that are compared, and the presence or absence of controls for student demographics. Without discussing these issues at length, it is sufficient to say that there is some ambiguity regarding any conclusions that can be drawn from a comparison of NAEP and TAAS results. This ambiguity is created in part by the fact that the NAEP is administered infrequently and in only certain grade levels.

In addition to ambiguous research results, our expectations for A-Plus based on the experience of TAAS are further limited by the fact that the two accountability systems differ in one very important respect. The A-Plus Program is unique in that it uses vouchers as the potential sanction for low-performing schools, while the accountability systems in Texas, North Carolina, and elsewhere at most threaten schools with embarrassment or reorganization as the sanction for low performance. The incentives for schools to improve when faced with embarrassment or reorganization may not be the same as the incentives produced by the prospect of vouchers.

We could try to look at recent research on school choice to learn more about whether the prospect of vouchers motivates schools to improve. Unfortunately, while there have been several high-quality studies on the effects of vouchers on the recipients of those vouchers, there has been relatively little research on whether school choice provides the proper incentives to improve academic achievement in an entire educational system.⁷ Recent work by Caroline Minter-Hoxby and by the Manhattan Institute attempt to address whether vouchers would improve academic achievement in the education system as a whole by examining variation in the amount of choice and competition currently available in the United States.⁸ Some states and metro areas have more school districts, more charter schools, and other types of choice than others. The findings of both studies suggest that areas with more choice and competition experience better academic outcomes than areas with less choice and competition. While these results support the contention that voucher systems would improve the quality of education for the entire educational system, they are not definitive because they involve argument by analogy. It is possible that competition and choice that currently exist contribute to academic achievement while expanding choice and competition would not have similar benefits. A more direct examination of the effects of expanding choice and competition would address the question more definitively.

The Design of the Current Study

The Florida A-Plus Program offers a unique opportunity to researchers to examine the effects of an accountability system as well as the effects of expanding choice and competition. Because the A-Plus Program involves a system of testing with sanctions for failure, we can examine whether such a program motivates schools to improve. And because the sanction that is applied is the prospect of offering choice to families and competition to public schools, we can examine whether the prospect of choice and competition are effective motivators.

To address these issues we will conduct two types of analyses. First, we will want to determine whether the test that is used to determine school grades in the A-Plus accountability system is a valid test of student performance. Given the concerns raised by the Klein study regarding the validity of the TAAS in Texas, we will examine the validity of the Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test (FCAT) using the same analytical technique used by Klein. That is, we will identify the correlation between FCAT results and the results of low stakes standardized tests administered around the same time in the same grade.⁹

During the spring of 2000, Florida schools administered both the FCAT and a version of the Stanford 9, which is a widely used and respected nationally normed standardized test. Performance on the FCAT determined a school's grade from the state and therefore determined whether students would receive vouchers. Performance on the Stanford 9 (or the FCAT Norm Referenced Test as the state refers to it) carried with it no similar consequences. It is therefore reasonable to assume that schools and students had little reason to manipulate or cheat on the Stanford 9. If the results of the Stanford 9 correlate with the results of the FCAT, then we should have confidence that the FCAT is a valid measure of academic achievement. If the two tests do not correlate, one possible explanation for the low correlation would be that the FCAT results were manipulated so that they were no longer valid measures of student performance. Confirming the validity of the FCAT is important for ruling out the concerns raised by Klein and others before proceeding with other analyses.

Second, we will examine whether the prospect of having to compete to retain students who are given vouchers inspires schools to improve their performance. We would expect that the schools that had already received one F grade from the state and whose students would become eligible for vouchers if they received a second F to make the greatest efforts to improve their academic achievement. That is, if the prospect of choice and competition motivates schools to improve, then the schools that are in the greatest danger of having their students receive vouchers should experience greater test-score improvement than schools for which that prospect is not so imminent.

To test this proposition we examine the average FCAT scale score improvements for schools broken out by the grade they received the year before. If the A-Plus Program is effective, schools that had previously received an F should experience greater gains on the FCAT than schools that had previously received higher grades.

In short, the design of this study is to verify the validity of the FCAT results and then to determine whether those schools that most imminently face the prospect of having to compete to retain their students who have been offered vouchers experience the greatest gains in their FCAT scores.

Data Examined

The FCAT results examined were from the spring of 1999 and spring of 2000. The Stanford 9 results were from the spring of 2000. The Stanford 9 was not administered statewide in 1999. All test results were obtained from the Florida Department of Education.¹⁰ The FCAT was administered in 4th, 5th, 8th, and 10th grades, but not in all subjects. The Stanford 9 (or FCAT NRT, as it is described on the web site) was administered in 3rd through 10th grades, but the reading results from 10th grade were discarded because the state determined that there was a difficulty with their design. Because both kinds of tests were not available in all subjects in all grades, our analyses are confined to those grades and subjects for which results were available.

The Results of Correlating FCAT and Stanford 9 Results

It appears as if the FCAT results are valid measures of student achievement. Schools with the highest scores on the FCAT also have the highest scores on the Stanford 9 tests that were administered around the same time in the spring of 2000. It is also the case that schools with the lowest FCAT scores also tended to have the lowest Stanford 9 scores. We can know this because the school level results from both tests are highly correlated with each other.

If the correlation were 1.00, the results from the FCAT and Stanford 9 test would be identical. As can be seen in Table 1, the correlation coefficient is 0.86 between the 4th grade FCAT and Stanford 9 reading test results. In 8th grade the correlation between the high stakes FCAT and low stakes standardized reading test is 0.95.¹¹ This demonstrates an extremely high level of correlation between the tests.

TABLE 1.—VERIFYING THE VALIDITY OF THE FCAT RESULTS

Correlation between	Grade level
	4	5	8	10
FCAT reading and Stanford 9 reading	0.86	na	0.95	na
FCAT math and Stanford 9 math	na	0.90	0.95	0.91
Number of schools	1,514	1,514	508	356

All correlations are statistically significant at $p < .01$.
na=not available.

The math results of the two tests are also highly correlated. In 5th grade the correlation coefficient is 0.90. In 8th grade the FCAT and Stanford 9 school level results are correlated at 0.95. In 10th grade the correlation between the results of the two math tests is 0.91.

It is not possible to verify the validity of the FCAT writing test with this technique because there was no Stanford 9 writing test administered.

In the second Rand Corporation study of TAAS in Texas, Stephen Klein and his colleagues never found a correlation of more than 0.21 between the school level results from TAAS and the school level results of a low stakes standardized tests. In this analysis we never found a correlation between FCAT and standardized tests below .86. All of these correlations in Florida are statistically significant, meaning that the strong relationship between the results of the two tests is very unlikely to have been produced by chance.

While we cannot check the validity of the FCAT writing results, these analyses strongly support the validity of the FCAT reading and math results. Schools in Florida perform on the high stakes FCAT similarly to how they perform on the low stakes Stanford 9. Since schools would have little incentive to manipulate the results of the low stakes test, the fact that they confirm the high stakes test results is important confirmation that the FCAT measures are credible.

FCAT Improvements by State-Assigned Grade

Now that we have confirmed the validity of the FCAT results, is it the case that schools facing the imminent prospect of competing to retain their students experienced the greatest improvement in FCAT results to avoid that prospect? In fact, the incentives appear to operate as expected. Schools that had received F grades in 1999 and were in danger of having their students offered vouchers if they repeated their failure made the largest gains between their 1999 and 2000 FCAT results.

As can be seen in Table 2, the year-to-year changes in FCAT results for schools do not really differ among schools that received A, B, or C grades from the state. Schools that had received D grades and were close to the failing grade that could precipitate vouchers being offered to their students appear to have achieved somewhat greater improvements than those achieved by the schools with higher state grades. But schools that received F grades in 1999 experienced increases in tests scores that were more than twice as large as those experienced by schools with higher state-assigned grades.

TABLE 2.—COMPARING TEST SCORE GAINS BY SCHOOL GRADE

School grade given by State in 1999	Change in FCAT Scores from 1999 to 2000
	Reading	Math	Writing
A	1.90 (202)	11.02 (202)	.36 (202)
B	4.85 (308)	9.30 (308)	.39 (308)
C	4.60 (1223)	11.81 (1223)	.45 (1223)
D	10.02 (583)	16.06 (583)	.52 (583)
F	17.59 (76)	25.66 (76)	.87 (76)

The change for F schools compared to schools with higher grades is statistically significant at $p < .01$.

Math and reading scales are from 100 to 500.

The writing scale is from 0 to 6.

Number of schools is in the parentheses.

On the FCAT reading test, which uses a scale with results between 100 and 500, schools that had received an A grade from the state in 1999 improved by an average of 1.90 points between 1999 and 2000. Schools that had received a B grade improved by 4.85 points. Those that had a C in 1999 increased by 4.60 points. But schools that had a D grade in 1999 improved by 10.02 points. And schools that had F grades in 1999 showed an average gain of 17.59 points. The lower the grade that the school received from the state, the greater the improvement it made the following year. This improvement was especially large for schools that had received a D or F grade the previous year.¹²

Examination of the FCAT math results shows a similar pattern. Schools that had received an A grade experienced an average 11.02 point gain on a scale that ranged between 100 and 500. Schools that had a B gained by 9.30 points. Schools that had received C grades in 1999 showed 11.81 point gains, on average, between 1999 and 2000. While D schools had improved by 16.06 points from 1999 to 2000 on the FCAT math exam, schools that had received an F grade in 2000 made gains of 25.66 points. Again, the year-to-year gains achieved by schools that had previously received a D or F grade were significantly larger than those experienced by higher grade schools. The improvements realized by schools that had previously received an F grade were especially large.¹³

The FCAT writing exam, which has scores that go from 0 to 6, also shows larger gains for schools that had received an F grade. Schools that had received an A grade in 1999 improved by .36 on the writing test. Schools with a B grade had an average gain of .39. For C schools the improvement from 1999 to 2000 was .45. And for schools that had received a D grade, the improvement was .52 points on the FCAT writing exam. However, schools that had received an F in 1999 demonstrated an average gain of .87 points, about double the improvements for the other schools.¹⁴

The larger improvements achieved by schools that had received an F and were in danger of having vouchers offered to their students are all statistically significant. That is, the gains observed in the F schools differed from those in the other schools by an amount that is very unlikely to have been produced by chance.

A Hard Test of the Voucher Effect

To what extent were the gains produced by failing schools the product of the prospect of vouchers and to what extent were those improvements the product of the pressures of low performance?¹⁵ One technique for isolating the extent to which gains were motivated by the desire to avoid having students offered vouchers is to compare the improvements achieved by higher-scoring F schools to those realized by lower-scoring D schools. The idea behind this comparison is that high-scoring F schools and low-scoring D schools were probably very much alike in many respects.¹⁶ Both groups of schools had low previous scores and faced pressures simply to avoid repeating a low performance. Schools in both groups were also likely to face similar challenges in trying to improve their scores. It is also likely that a fair number of schools near the failing threshold could easily have received a different grade by chance. That is, random error in the testing may have made the difference between receiving a D or F grade for at least some of these schools. To the extent that chance is the only factor distinguishing those schools just above the failing line and those schools just below the failing line we are approximating a random assignment experiment, like those used in medical research.

While the low-scoring D schools and the high-scoring F schools may be alike in many respects and some may only be distinguishable by chance, schools in each category faced very different futures if they failed to improve. The schools with the F grade faced the prospect of having vouchers offered to students at their school if they failed to improve significantly while D schools did not face a similar pressure. A comparison of the gains achieved by low-scoring D schools and high-scoring F schools should help us isolate the gains that are attributable to the prospect of vouchers unique to those with the failing label. This comparison is a hard test for the effect of vouchers in motivating schools to improve because we are not considering all of the failing schools who faced that pressure and we are comparing against D schools that might have experienced some pressure from the prospect of vouchers to the extent that they anticipated the consequences of their experiencing a decline in future performance.

As can be seen in Table 3, the gains realized by high-scoring F schools were greater than the gains realized by low-scoring D schools.¹⁷ The improvement achieved by higher-scoring F schools on the reading test was 2.65 points greater than that achieved by lower-scoring D schools, although this difference fell short of being statistically significant. On the math test the higher-scoring F schools made gains that were 6.09 point greater than those produced by lower-scoring D schools. The difference between the two groups of schools on the writing test was .16, keeping in mind that the scale for the writing test goes from 0 to 6 instead of from 100 to 500 as is the case for the reading and math exams. The differences between these groups on the math and writing tests were statistically significant at $p < .01$ meaning that we can have high confidence that these differences were not produced by chance.

These gains made by the higher-scoring F schools in excess of what were produced by the lower-scoring D schools are what we can reasonably estimate as the effect of the unique motivation that vouchers posed to those schools with the F designation. Given that the higher-scoring F schools were very much like the lower-scoring D schools, the fact that those schools that faced the prospect of vouchers made larger gains suggests that vouchers provide especially strong incentive to public schools to improve.

The excess gains that we can attribute to the prospect of vouchers can be reported in terms of standard deviations, as is conventional in education research. The improvement on the reading FCAT attributable to the prospect of vouchers was a modest 0.12 standard deviations and fell short of being statistically significant. The voucher effect on math scores was larger 0.30 standard deviations, which was statistically significant. And the prospect of vouchers improved school performance on the writing test by 0.41 standard deviations, an effect that is also statistically significant.

To put the size of these effects in perspective, education researchers generally consider effect sizes of 0.1 to 0.2 standard deviations to be small, effects of 0.3 to 0.4 standard deviations as moderate, and gains of 0.5 or more standard deviations are thought of as large. For comparison, the effect size of reducing class sizes from an average of 25 students to an average of 17 students according to the Tennessee Star study was .21 standard deviations.¹⁸ The motivational benefits of the prospect of vouchers were larger than this class size reduction effect, at least on math and writing scores.

The math and writing results are significant at $p < .01$.

Discussion

The most obvious explanation for these findings is that an accountability system with vouchers as the sanction for repeated failure really motivates schools to improve. That is the prospect of competition in education reveals competitive effects that are normally observed in the marketplace. Companies typically anticipate competitive threats and attempt to make appropriate responses to retain their customers before the competition fully materializes. Similarly, it appears as if Florida schools that foresee the imminent challenge of having to compete for their students take the necessary steps to retain their students and stave off that competition.

While the evidence presented in the report supports the claims of advocates of an accountability system and advocates of choice and competition in education, the results cannot be considered definitive. First, the A-Plus Program is still relatively new and its effects might change, for the better or worse, as the program matures. Second, only two schools in the state have actually had vouchers offered to their students because the schools had received two failing grades. It remains to be seen whether the number of schools where students are eligible for vouchers grows in future years. If the number does not grow, it is possible that the prospect of having vouchers offered to students will not seem so imminent to schools and they will not face the same incentives to improve.

Third, one could offer alternative explanations for the results reported in this study. For example, critics might suggest that the findings reported in this study might be produced by manipulation of FCAT results that may be localized among schools that faced the prospect of receiving a second failing grade. That is, perhaps the high correlation between FCAT and Stanford 9 results does not verify the validity of the FCAT among F schools who may face particularly strong incentives to cheat or manipulate results. If one breaks out the correlations between the FCAT and Stanford 9 results by state-assigned grade and grade level of the test, however, we find that the correlations generally remain high even if we only examine F schools. As can be seen in Table 4, the correlation on the reading score is never lower than 0.77 and never below 0.79 on the math scores for F schools. And the correlations for the F schools are comparable to the correlations for schools with higher state-assigned grades. Focusing on correlations between the FCAT and Stanford 9 results only among F schools tends to refute the claim that cheating or manipulation may be localized among failing schools.

As another alternative explanation critics might suggest that F schools experienced larger improvements in FCAT scores because of a phenomenon known as regression to the mean. There may be a statistical tendency of very high and very low-scoring schools to report future scores that return to being closer to the average for the whole population. This tendency is created by non-random error in the test scores, which can be especially problematic when scores are “bumping” against the top or bottom of the scale for measuring results. If a school has a score of 2 on a scale from 0 to 100, it is hard for students to do worse by chance but easier for them to do better by chance. Low-scoring schools that are near the bottom of the scale are very likely to improve, even if it is only a statistical fluke.

In the case of the FCAT results, however, regression to the mean is not a likely explanation for the exceptional improvement displayed by F schools because the scores for those schools were nowhere near the bottom of the scale for possible results. The average F school reading score was 254.70 in 1999, far above the lowest possible score of 100. The average math score for F schools was 272.51 on the 1999 FCAT, also far above the lowest possible score of 100. And on the FCAT writing exam the average F score received a 2.40 on a scale from 1 to 6, also not likely to cause a bounce against the bottom. Given how far the F schools are from the bottom of the scale, regression to the mean does not appear to be a likely explanation of the gains achieved by F schools.

Another way to test for regression to the mean is to isolate the gains achieved by the schools with the very lowest scores from the previous year. If the improvements made by F schools were concentrated among those F schools with the lowest previous scores, then we might worry that the improvements were more of an indication of regression to the mean (or bouncing against the bottom) than an indication of the desire to avoid having vouchers offered to the students in failing schools. We can test this proposition by constructing a simple regression model that predicts the improvement in FCAT scores for those F schools with previous test scores below average for F schools, for those F schools with previous test scores above average for F schools, and for all schools based on how low their previous scores were. The below average F schools are our proxy for a regression to the mean effect. If their gains are not significantly greater than higher-scoring F schools, then we can reasonably exclude regression to the mean as a likely explanation. All F schools should have experienced a similar motivation to improve to avoid vouchers. But if regression to the mean were operating, then the lowest-scoring F schools should have made significantly greater improvements because they would be more likely to be bouncing against the bottom of the scale.

As can be seen in Table 5, the gains achieved by low-scoring F schools are not greater than the gains achieved by higher-scoring F schools. For analyses of the reading, math, and writing results the higher-scoring F schools experienced gains comparable to those gains experienced by low-scoring F schools. This means that all F schools, whether they were “bounding” against the bottom of the scale or not, produced similar improvements. According to these models, schools that faced the prospect of vouchers by virtue of having received an F grade made improvements on their reading FCAT that were approximately 4 points higher than would be expected simply from how low their previous score was. The exceptional gain achieved by F schools on the math FCAT was approximately 8 points and the exceptional gain on the writing FCAT was approximately one-quarter of a point on a 6-point scale. All of these results are statistically significant. These results are also consistent with the voucher effect estimated using the analyses reported in Table 3.

It was a general pattern that schools with lower previous scores made larger improvements. This effect of simply having an accountability system in place to put pressure on lower-performing schools operated across all grades, inspiring low-scoring A, B, C, and D schools to improve. But F schools made gains that were even larger than would have been expected simply given how low their previous scores were. The exceptional incentive that existed for schools that had an F grade was the desire to avoid the prospect of vouchers. We might therefore attribute this improvement realized by F schools beyond what would be expected given their low previous score as their “voucher” gain. Because higher-scoring and lower-scoring F schools experienced comparable exceptional improvements, we can have some confidence that this is a voucher effect and not a regression to the mean effect. And all schools, across all grades, faced some motivation to improve lower scores simply by virtue of having an accountability system in place.

It therefore appears as if two forces were in effect to motivate schools to improve. Schools had some motivation to improve simply to avoid the embarrassment of low FCAT scores. This motivation operated across all state-assigned grades. But schools with F scores had a second and very strong incentive to improve to avoid vouchers.

While one cannot anticipate or rule out all plausible alternative explanations for the findings reported in this study, one should follow the general advice to expect horses when one hears hoof beats, not zebras. The most plausible interpretation of the evidence is that the Florida A-Plus system relies upon a valid system of testing and produces the desired incentives to failing schools to improve their performance.

9. This technique addresses what is technically known as the concurrent validity of the FCAT. It does not address whether the letter grades assigned by the state are based on appropriate cutoff points in the test results. That is, this report does not address whether schools given an A in Florida truly deserve an A or whether D schools should really receive an F. To use a metaphor familiar to most students, this report only examines the validity of the test, not the validity of the curve used to assign grades.

10. The Florida Department of Education also has FCAT scores on its web site at <http://www.firn.edu/doe/cgi-bin/doehome/menu.pl>. However the web site only has scores for standard curriculum students in 1999 and all students in 2000. This study used scores for standard curriculum students in both years. Earlier analyses on these results from the web site do not produce results that are substantively different from those reported here. This suggests that the inclusion or exclusion of test scores from special needs students have little bearing on the conclusions of this evaluation.

11. The correlation between results of test averages for a school will be higher than correlations between the results of individual student test scores. Nevertheless, these school-level correlations are quite high.

12. The within sample standard deviation for the FCAT reading scores is 21.94, making the gain achieved by the F schools equivalent of .80 standard deviations.

13. The within sample standard deviation for the FCAT math scores is 20.59, making the gain achieved by the F schools the equivalent of 1.25 standard deviations.

14. The within sample standard deviation for the FCAT writing scores is .39, making the gain achieved by the F schools the equivalent of 2.23 standard deviations.

15. For a case study that documents the extent to which improvements at failing schools can be attributed to the prospect of vouchers, see Carol Innerst, "Competing to Win: How Florida's A-Plan Has Triggered Public School Reform," Urban League of Greater Miami, Inc., The Collins Center for Public Policy, Floridians for School Choice, The James Madison Institute, and the Center for Education Reform, April, 2000.

16. In fact, the high-scoring F schools had slightly higher average test scores from the previous year than did the low-scoring D schools. This is possible because the state-assigned grade is determined by the percentage of students above certain thresholds on the test score, not by the average test score for the school.

17. High-scoring F schools are those with previous scores that were above average for F schools. Low-scoring D schools are those with previous scores below average for their grade.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1 as reported by the Committee on Education and the Workforce. This bipartisan legislation strengthens education in this country.

As good as the bill before us is, it won't mean much if Congress does not provide the funding at the levels promised in H.R. 1. All of us need to understand what we're doing here.

We are pledging a significant increase in federal resources to elementary and secondary education in this country. In exchange, local school districts will increase the emphasis on educational standards and academic results. Under this bill, school districts will be held accountable for doing so.

There is an old saying that you can't have your cake and eat it too. I am concerned that this is precisely what a majority of this House has in mind when they promise increased federal funding for education today, only to vote to lock in an oversized tax cut later this week. This is a risky gamble. The increased aid for education we're voting for today, as well as the $1.35 trillion tax cut we will vote on later, are both predicated on future budget surplus projections that are anything but certain. The Congressional Budget Office has cautioned us that these surplus estimates are not written in stone. If we lock in an oversized tax cut, and the budget surplus evaporates down the line, there will not be enough money left to meet the promises we are making today to fund education.

Even if the surplus numbers turn out to be correct, the size of the tax cut would still threaten education funding since all of us know that the defense budget is still tentative pending completion of the Administration's strategic review. It's a near certainty that defense spending will rise by hundreds of billions of dollars beyond what is currently budgeted. The tax cut makes no allowance for this. We will have had our cake, but left our schools with crumbs and yet another unfunded federal mandate. This is the last thing we should do to our children.

Again, I urge all my colleagues to support education today by voting for H.R. 1. Just as importantly, I urge you to support education later this week when you are casting your vote on the tax cut.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, it was with great reservation that I will vote yea on final passage of H.R. 1, the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. The children of this country deserve the best education that is available, regardless of whether they attend a public or private school. I believe that there are parts of this bill that will serve these children and others that could see some improvement.

I am very pleased that this bill will double the authorization level for Title I over the next five years to $17.2 billion. This increase in funding will assist our schools in closing the achievement gap for disadvantaged students, something which is of vital importance to the children living in cities such as Detroit. This increase will be targeted to improve low performing schools through the investment of additional help and resources. I am also encouraged by the fact that this bill will permit parents of children in low performing schools to use Title I funds to provide supplemental educational services such as tutoring, after-school programs and summer school.

My reservations in voting for the passage of this bill stem from the fact that this bill does not include funds for new school construction. There are too many schools in this country that are falling into disrepair. Our children are crammed into overcrowded classrooms, and this bill does nothing to help resolve this problem.

I am also very concerned about the provision in this bill that requires annual math and reading testing of students in grades three through eight. I agree that testing is one way to assess the abilities of a student; however, I fear that these tests will be used to undermine schools in the inner city. Low test scores may very well lead to the closing of schools, when instead we should be providing these students with additional resources. Every child should be provided with the resources that will help them to excel academically. We must provide these children and their teachers with additional assistance and opportunities. I hope that these test results will serve to show us what schools and specific students need our assistance, and will not serve only as a reason to close down much needed schools.

In closing, I reiterate my support for the increase in Title I funding. The students in my district will directly benefit from these funds. I thank my colleagues for their support of this bill, and hope that in the future we will recognize the importance of funding new school construction as well.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1 and the technical changes to the Impact Aid program. Impact Aid compensates local educational agencies for the substantial and continuing financial burden resulting from federal activities.

Impact Aid is one of the only federal education programs where the funds are sent directly to the school district, so there is almost no bureaucracy. In addition, these funds go into the general fund, and may be used as the local school district decides. As a result, the funds are used for the education of all students.

Last year, the Defense Authorization Conference Report included the Department of Education Impact Aid Reauthorization Act of 2001 which contained a small school provision that addressed some of the concerns that small school districts have had with regard to funding levels. It was the intent of the provision to recognize two public school finance facts: (1) that small schools are significantly more expensive to operate; and (2) that the changes in the proration of available funds in the 1994 Impact Aid Reauthorization devastated small schools. The small school provision provided a funding floor for small school districts with fewer than 1,000 children who have a per pupil average lower than the state average. It also guaranteed these schools receive a foundation payment of no less than 40% of what they would receive if the program were fully funded.

However, there was an oversight on the part of the framers of the current law. The option to select the higher of the state or national average was not recommended for the current law. For this reason, I support the minor modification to the small school provision. The concept of a school district having the choice between the "higher of the state average or the national average" is already used in the payment calculation for the basic impact aid support payment and the heavily impacted district payment. Therefore, this technical correction is consistent with already existing Impact Aid laws.

By increasing its support of the Impact Aid program, the federal government can assist these schools in providing a quality education to thousands of children across the country. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill. Millions of students depend on the Impact Aid program for a quality education. Let's not disappoint them.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, which provides for reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. While I support the underlying bill, I opposed the rule, which prevented consideration of key amendments—including School Modernization and Class Size Reduction. In addition, the rule authorized consideration of several flawed proposals, including the Arney/Boehner/DeLay school voucher amendment, the DeMint Straight A's amendment, and the Cox amendment to drastically reduce the bill's authorization levels.

This bipartisan bill represents a compromise negotiated between Congressional Democrats, Congressional Republicans, and the Bush Administration, and contains important bipartisan provisions to improve the accountability of schools and school districts. As an original co-sponsor of the "3R's" legislation, I believe this compromise legislation is rightly focused on developing and implementing high standards in the core academic subject areas, while also holding schools accountable for academic achievement. This legislation also provides substantial new resources, totaling $4 billion in additional funds for elementary and secondary education in exchange for higher standards and tough accountability rules. To ensure higher academic achievement, H.R. 1 requires students in grades three through eight to be tested annually in math and reading. While testing is not a panacea and can be counterproductive in some instances, I believe we must ensure that parents, teachers and school administrators have a reliable gauge of student development. Testing must, however, be matched with sufficient resources to ensure children who do not score well can get the assistance they need to learn. This bill moves in that direction. If a school does not make adequate progress after one year, it would have to allow students to transfer to other public schools and the school would have to pay the students' transportation costs. I believe that each of these initiatives are vital to improve public schools and student achievement, and critical components to effective school reform.

While H.R. 1 takes a positive step towards helping students achieve academically, I believe we must also reject any amendments to divert public funds to private schools and provide block grant funding to the states. I strongly oppose any attempts to divert federal funds away from public schools and to private or parochial educational institutions. Vouchers would undermine the accountability for student achievement that is a strong component of H.R. 1. Furthermore, there is no evidence that vouchers will improve achievement for disadvantaged students. Vouchers do not increase parental choice, since the choice for admission would rest with private schools. Most importantly, I believe federal funding must be invested in proven public schools that help all students.

I am also opposed to any attempt to add Straight A's provisions to this bill, which regardless of its name, would undermine the federal role in education and would institute bad public policy. Essentially, the Straight A's proposal would block grant federal programs and erode meaningful involvement of parents and other school officials. The Straight A's provisions would take away any real accountability for how federal money is spent and severely weaken local control over the use of federal education dollars. The Straight A's proposal would allow states to block grant and use for other purposes federal funds that are now dedicated to specific national concerns, such as improving education for disadvantaged children, enhancing teacher quality, reducing class sizes and promoting high standards. Block granting federal funds will direct resources away from low income students with the greatest needs, and undermine accountability in education. I urge my colleagues to reject the Straight A's amendments offered today.

I also oppose passage of the Cox amendment, which would cut $2.3 billion from Fiscal Year 2002 authorized funding levels and prevent any real increases above inflation in future years. Mr. Speaker, if we are to consider a reduction in spending levels, we should do so through the appropriations process, not through consideration of this bill. Instead, we should support the bipartisan authorization levels provided in H.R. 1, which includes $5.4 billion for critical investments in ESEA programs. Without adequate resources, schools will be unable to provide real results and our Nation's children will suffer as a result.

Mr. Speaker, with passage of the underlying bill, we can strengthen our commitment to improving education through support for successful and cost-effective education programs. H.R. 1 strikes an appropriate balance in improving public schools and student achievement. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1 as offered today, and reject the Straight A's and school voucher amendments.

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to any amendment that would allow block granting of federal education programs, including Title I. There are various problems associated with some of the amendments that my colleagues are offering to H.R. 1, legislation that would reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act (ESEA). As you know, Title I of the ESEA provides targeted federal resources to help ensure that disadvantaged students have access to a quality education. The block granting of programs under Title I and other titles of the bill dilutes targeting for special needs populations. This would result in significant funding shifts among localities and would weaken accountability of federal funds.

For example, in Title III of H.R. 1, the current Bilingual Education Act (BEA), Emergency Immigrant Education Program (EIEP), and the Foreign Language Assistance Program (FLAP) are consolidated into one formula driven state grant. I oppose consolidation of these three programs because it would dilute federal resources to serve three distinct and separate student populations. Given the rising number of limited English proficient (LEP) students and the diverse needs of recent immigrant students, local schools need a targeted amount of federal resources to provide adequate services to each group.

BEA provides startup funds for schools to develop quality services for LEP students, whereas EIEP reimburses schools for the extra costs associated with helping newly arrived immigrant students succeed in school—services that go far beyond language classes. Finally, the third program to be consolidated under Title III is FLAP, which helps native English speaking students learn a foreign language. Consolidation ignores the distinctiveness of each of these programs and dilutes the funds available to students in need.

Mr. Speaker, while I applaud the bipartisan support for this legislation, I ask my colleagues to oppose any amendments that would consolidate federal funds into state block grants.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I want to praise President Bush for putting forth an education plan that offered children in failing schools a chance to get a better education. It is too bad that Democrats and supporters of the failing status quo were allowed to gut the legislation, H.R. 1, at the Committee level to remove any chance for failing schools to successfully improve their performance or to let parents have the option to move their children to better schools.

I believe that control of education should be retained at the local level. Last year, Illinois high school students led the nation in Advanced Placement scores. With a few exceptions we have good schools in the 8th District and I don't want to force local parents, school boards, and teachers into a one-size fits all approach that might work in New York City or Atlanta but not in Barrington or Wauconda.

One of the reasons I support tax relief, including eliminating the marriage tax penalty and doubling the child tax credit, is because it lets 70,000 married couples and families with 125,000 children in the 8th District of Illinois keep $162 million per year in their pockets. That is $162 million per year that families could spend in our district on education if they chose to do so.

When we send a dollar to the federal government from Illinois, we only get 73 cents back. In my district, we send more than $2 to Washington and only get a dollar back. With a return like this, it is easy to see why I support letting taxpayers keep more of their hard earned money and having parents decide locally how their money should be spent on education.

I believe the best way to improve education is to return dollars and decisions back home to the parents and teachers who know our children's names and their educational needs. That is why I am a cosponsor of The Dollars to the Classroom Act, a bill that directs federal elementary and secondary education funding for 31 programs directly to public school classrooms of this country.

Federal education funding is at an all-time high, and H.R. 1 increases it by a huge amount, yet student achievement continues to lag. Most Republicans in Congress want to give local schools more freedom to use new models to solve old problems while maintaining high accountability standards. H.R. 1 in its current form does not come close to accomplishing this worthy goal.

Former President Ronald Reagan, in a March 12, 1983 radio address to the nation on education, said, "Better education doesn't mean a bigger Department of Education. In fact, that Department should be abolished. Instead, we must do a better job teaching the basics, insisting on discipline and results, encouraging competition and, above all, remembering that education does not begin with Washington officials or even State and local officials. It begins in the home, where it is the right and responsibility of every American."

The legislation now before the House heads in the other direction. it continues increasing the amount of taxpayer money sent to the bureaucrats at the Department of Education while, as President Reagan said in his radio address, "our traditions of opportunity and excellence in education have been under siege. We've witnessed the growth of a huge education bureaucracy. Parents have often been reduced to the role of outsiders."

One concept that has strong support from parents is President Bush's proposal to improve public education by testing children in reading and math in grades three through eight once each year. Under President Bush's proposal, schools would be held accountable for either improving scores within three years or losing their federal money, which accounts for seven cents of every education dollar. The rest comes from states and localities.

I voted against the amendment co-sponsored by Congressmen PETER HOEKSTRA and BARNEY FRANK to remove President Bush's test requirement from the bill. The tough new testing regimen designed to identify failing public schools—an idea at the heart of President Bush's education plan—survived when the amendment failed. But the rest of the President's plan to give local schools more control to make the changes necessary to improve and to give parents the option to move their children to a better school were stripped out of the bill.

For the reasons I have outlined, I decided to vote against H.R. 1. I want to praise President Bush for his leadership in proposing creative solutions to improving the education of our children. I encourage him to continue to move the federal government out of the way and to give schools more flexibility and parents more choices for their children.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act of 2001.

I want to commend Representative GEORGE MILLER and the Committee on Education and the Workforce for reporting out a bill that will help to improve this Nation's elementary and secondary education system by making students a priority, by providing school accountability and by giving financial support to our schools to train and recruit quality teachers.

H.R. 1 provides a clear signal that this Congress has prioritized children's education. It provides $5.5 billion of valuable new resources in Fiscal Year 2002 over the previous year for elementary and secondary education. More specifically, it builds upon the Federal commitment to ensure that children from disadvantaged families get an opportunity to receive a quality education by doubling the funding for the Education for the Disadvantaged Program over the next 5 years.

The bill also maintains the Federal commitment to expand quality after school programs by increasing funding for the 21st Century Learning Center After School program. Furthermore, it provides additional funding to help our children learn in safe school environments by authorizing more funding for the Safe and Free Drug Schools.

H.R. 1 helps to create a strong school accountability system by providing new funds to states to develop statewide educational standards and standardized student tests. These standards and tests will give parents information so that they can measure the quality of education that the school system is providing for their children. Parents are also empowered to monitor the quality of their children's education through this bill's requirement that states, local school agencies and schools must issue report cards to parents on aspects of school performance and teacher's qualifications.

This legislation signals to teachers that the federal government supports their efforts to educate our children by providing almost $2 billion in new resources for teacher training, recruitment and school class size reduction next year.

I also support this bill for the provisions that are left out. I am pleased that this Congress made the wise decision to reject private school vouchers. At the moment, public schools are underfunded. Diverting resources to a few students so that they can go to private schools does not resolve the issue of creating an excellent educational system for all students. At best, the capacity of private schools can only accommodate a small proportion of students' educational needs at the expense of fewer resources for all students.

Although this bipartisan bill is encouraging, I am concerned that the legislation that Congress passes today will not get the necessary appropriated funds for schools to implement it. A few weeks ago, the Majority passed a Budget Resolution that only increased education by $0.9 billion for next year. This amount is far short of the $5.5 billion of additional resources authorized for this legislation next year. I hope that my colleagues in the Majority who vote for this bill put their money where their mouths are by appropriating the necessary funds to implement this bill. Otherwise, this bill will become another hollow promise.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 1 and help to create an education system that puts students first, creates strong school accountability and provides valuable financial support to improve teacher quality.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express both my support and concern for provisions of H.R. 1, the Leave No Child Behind Act.

Since taking office, President Bush has made education reform legislation a centerpiece of his administration's domestic policy. I sincerely believe that the President has the very best of intentions to address real problems in our nation's schools.

The legislation before us today represents a great departure from current federal education policy—a policy that contains more than 50 duplicative programs and funding streams and burdens our administrators with paperwork. H.R. 1 provides unprecedented flexibility to local school districts, while retaining the overall purpose behind federal funding by targeting it to the students and districts that need them the most. It reduces the paperwork burden currently imposed by federal programs so that school administrators have time to do what they were hired to do—educate our kids.

I am extremely concerned, however, with the provision of the bill mandating yearly testing in grades 3 through 8. Administrators, parents and teachers in my district have expressed concern to me regarding the testing provisions of H.R. 1. They point out that Kansas currently tests students in order to determine progress and close the achievement gap. I understand that the President believes that yearly testing is absolutely essential to tracking student performance and promoting accountability. I share his belief that we should closely track the progress of students, but I am very concerned that this bill does not include adequate funding for school districts to implement the tests yearly. I understand that administering these tests could cost the state of Kansas nearly $10 million per year, a sum that is not adequately provided for in this bill or in the President's budget.

Recently, the Kansas State Legislature completed its business for the year, having faced a revenue shortfall of over $200 million, directly resulting in a lack of adequate funding for Kansas schools. Even Governor Graves, reflecting on large tax cuts of previous years, recommended a tax increase to meet the revenue shortfall for education funding. Unfortunately, the Governor's proposal failed and the State Legislature has still not adequately funded education in Kansas.

Like the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, I am extremely concerned that this bill, although well-meaning, will shift an additional unfunded financial burden to local school districts that are already struggling. We in Congress need to accept that real education reform will require a substantial investment on the federal level, and not a cost-shifting strategy that leaves local school districts holding the bag.

A serious dialogue needs to begin, between Congress, the public, and those concerned with the quality of education about the value and efficacy of testing, the frequency of testing and the need for local authority for testing. We in Congress should listen to the concerns of teachers, administrators and parents about "over-testing" and incentives to "teach to the test." These concerns are often easily dismissed, but I believe that they are valid and have not been adequately addressed by those who support yearly testing.

The White House has made it clear that without the testing component, this bill would not be signed into law. Knowing this, I voted against the Hoekstra/Frank amendment to strip the testing provisions from the bill, despite grave reservations about the testing component. I am supporting this bill because I believe that it is fundamentally sound and bipartisan. It greatly improves current law by providing increased flexibility to local school districts while maintaining the federal focus on disadvantaged students. I support, and wish to encourage, the efforts of the President and the Democratic and Republican leaders who have worked together on this legislation. Drafting legislation is a very difficult process, and I doubt that all parties involved will ever be completely satisfied with the final product. The bill is not perfect, but it is extremely good, and I think it would be a mistake to sacrifice the careful balance of the underlying bill and go back to the drawing board.

I believe that this bill can be further improved, before it arrives on the President's desk, by addressing the valid concerns that I have mentioned. I will continue to work with my colleagues on the conference committee to ensure that the concerns of my school administrators, teachers and parents are addressed.

Mr. LANGEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend my colleagues on the Education and the Workforce Committee for crafting a bill that contains landmark investments in education and prioritizes disadvantaged children and low-performing schools.

In total, H.R. 1 authorizes $22.8 billion, about $5 billion more than was appropriated in fiscal year 2001. This bill creates new accountability systems that hold our schools responsible for delivering the first-rate education that our children deserve. It tackles the problem of illiteracy by creating two new reading programs and authorizing them at three times the level of past programs. H.R. 1 gives children more personal attention and improves teacher quality by almost doubling funding for class size reduction and professional development for teachers. It authorizes $11.5 billion for Title I in 2002 with increases over five years that amount to almost twice the 2001 level. Finally, H.R. 1 rejects both vouchers, which would drain resources from public schools, and 'Straight As,' which would politicize education and deny critical funding to the students who need the money most.

In sum, H.R. 1 is a remarkable measure. My only fear is that the budget we were forced to vote on last week so binds our hands that we will not be able to keep our promises. By enacting a $1.35 trillion tax cut and a four percent cap on discretionary spending increases, we have virtually guaranteed that we will not adequately fund all the programs we are about to authorize. Mr. Speaker, reforms without resources will not produce results.

I ask my colleagues to vote in favor of H.R. 1. However, we must all remember that our job is not over until we meet these obligations during the appropriations process.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives passed H.R. 1, the No Child Left Behind Act. After having voted against this legislation in the Education and Workforce Committee, today I supported President Bush, Chairman BOEHNER, and Ranking Member MILLER and voted in favor of this legislation.

I remain concerned that H.R. 1 does not grant local school districts, teachers and parents the degree of flexibility originally contained within President Bush's education plan.

Yet, I also feel this legislation was honestly debated and voted upon on the House floor. I am hopeful that through the continuing work of Congress and the Conference Committee on H.R. 1, that certain aspects of the President's original plan will be reinforced or reinserted.

I look forward to working with the President and Members of Congress to further improve this legislation.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, today, I will vote against two amendments to H.R. 1, the Leave No Child Behind Act. In a bill that is heralded for promoting greater local decision making authority, both of these amendments are efforts to impose federal mandates and place strings on schools districts eligible for precious federal dollars.

Mr. Vitter's amendment to mandate that public schools receiving ESEA dollars allow military recruiting is currently playing out at the local level in my district. Last night, the Portland School Board voted to continue a ban on military recruiters on schools grounds. Military service is a rewarding career and vital to our national interests. The information recruiters provide can be very helpful to many students. But, it's local school districts and their locally elected school boards, not politicians 3000 miles away, that should decide whether or not the military should be allowed to recruit on school grounds.

Similarly, the Hilleary Amendment seeks to overturn school district decisions to deny access to organizations that discriminate by mandating that schools which receive Federal funding allow Boy Scouts to meet on their premises. Personally, I agree with the decisions of local school districts to ban organizations that engage in discriminatory practices from school grounds, but, more importantly, I will vote against this amendment because these types of decisions should be made by local government entities, not the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, today I will, however, vote in favor of H.R. 1, the Leave No Child Behind Act. Since coming to Congress my goal has been to ensure that the Federal Government is a better partner in building more livable communities. Access to quality public education is a key component of a community that is safe, healthy and economically secure.

While not perfect, H.R. 1, as passed out of the House Education Committee, represents a bipartisan agreement that will move us in the right direction to providing more support and investment for public education. While I support the overall framework that the bill provides, there are several amendments that I do not support.

I am deeply concerned with amendments to block grant federal education funds or to provide taxpayer dollars for private schools through a voucher system. Both proposals threaten precious Federal funding for public schools, most harshly impacting the schools that are the most vulnerable. We can reform and improve our public education system without diverting funds from our already financially strapped public schools.

Although this bill is an important step forward, there is still unfinished business to address if we are sincere about proving education in this country. One of the most glaring omissions is the lack of funding for school construction. In my state of Oregon, 96 percent of schools need to be upgraded or repaired. In the Northwest alone, 25,000 schools need major repairs or outright replacement. Schools can serve a vital function in the community, both as places for our children to learn and grow and as a center for community activity, but only if our schools are safe places for students and adults to learn on modern technology and equipment. Investment in renovation of existing schools can significantly enhance community livability.

H.R. 1 also provides no additional funding for Individuals with Disabilities in Education Act (IDEA). In the 94th Congress, we mandated special education access for children with severe learning disabilities. Along with that mandate came a promise that the federal government would pay 40 percent of the cost, this was the right thing to do given the increased costs that are often required to teach children with special needs. Unfortunately, the Federal Government has yet to fulfill its commitment to IDEA. We have missed yet another opportunity today to provide full funding for this critical program.

Education, like livable communities, is for all of us—not just a select few. The Federal Government should lead by example in offering the best possible public education to our nation's children. H.R. 1 is a good start, but we have a long way to go.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington) having assumed the chair, Mr. SHIMKUS, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1) to close the achievement gap with accountability, flexibility, and choice, so that no child is left behind, pursuant to House Resolution 143, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. OWENS

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. OWENS. At this point I am opposed to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. OWENS moves to recommit the bill H.R. 1 to the Committee on Education and the Workforce with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

TITLE IX—SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

SEC. 901. SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS.

The Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as amended by this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

“TITLE IX—SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT PROGRAMS

“PART A—SCHOOL REPAIR, RENOVATION, AND CONSTRUCTION; ASSISTANCE FOR CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES; TECHNOLOGY ACTIVITIES

“SEC. 9101. GRANT PROGRAM.

“(a) GRANTS TO NATIVE AMERICAN SCHOOLS AND STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

“(1) ALLOCATION OF FUNDS.—Of the amount made available to carry out this section for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall allocate—

“(A) $75,000,000 for grants to impacted local educational agencies (as defined in paragraph (3)) for school repair, renovation, and construction;

“(B) $3,250,000 for grants to outlying areas for school repair and renovation in high-need schools and communities, allocated on such basis, and subject to such terms and conditions, as the Secretary determines appropriate;

“(C) $25,000,000 for grants to public entities, private nonprofit entities, and consortia of such entities, for use in accordance with part B; and “(D) the remainder to State educational agencies in proportion to the amount each State received under part A of title I for the previous fiscal year, except that no State shall receive less than 0.5 percent of the amount allocated under this subparagraph.

“(2) DETERMINATION OF GRANT AMOUNT.—

“(A) DETERMINATION OF WEIGHTED STUDENT UNITS.—For purposes of computing the grant amounts under paragraph (1)(A) for any fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine the results obtained by the computation made under section 6003 with respect to children described in subsection (a)(1)(C) of such section and computed under subsection (a)(2)(B) of such section for such year—

“(i) for each impacted local educational agency that receives funds under this section; and “(ii) for all such agencies together.

“(B) COMPUTATION OF PAYMENT.—The Secretary shall calculate the amount of a grant to an impacted local educational agency by—

“(i) dividing the amount described in paragraph (1)(A) by the results of the computation described in subparagraph (A)(ii); and “(ii) multiplying the number derived under clause (i) by the results of the computation described in subparagraph (A)(i) for such agency.

“(3) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘impacted local educational agency’ means, for any fiscal year—

“(A) a local educational agency that receives a basic support payment under section 6003(b) for such fiscal year; and

“(B) with respect to which the number of children determined under section 6003(a)(1)(C) for the preceding school year constitutes at least 50 percent of the total student enrollment in the schools of the agency during such school year.

“(b) WITHIN-STATE ALLOCATIONS.—

“(1) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—

“(A) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY ADMINISTRATION.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each State educational agency may reserve not more than 1 percent of its allocation under subsection (a)(1)(D) for the purpose of administering the distribution of grants under this subsection.

“(B) STATE ENTITY ADMINISTRATION.—If the State educational agency transfers funds to a State entity described in paragraph (2)(A), the agency shall transfer to such entity 0.75 of the amount reserved under this paragraph for the purpose of administering the distribution of grants under this subsection.

“(2) RESERVATION FOR COMPETITIVE SCHOOL REPAIR AND RENOVATION GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the reservation under paragraph (1), of the funds allocated to a State educational agency under subsection (a)(1)(D), the State educational agency shall distribute 75 percent of such funds to local educational agencies or, if such State educational agency is not responsible for the financing of education facilities, the agency shall transfer such funds to the State entity responsible for the financing of education facilities (referred to in this section as the ‘State entity’) for distribution by such entity to local educational agencies in accordance with this paragraph, to be used, consistent with subsection (c), for school repair and renovation.

“(B) COMPETITIVE GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—The State educational agency or State entity shall carry out a program of competitive grants to local educational agencies for the purpose described in subparagraph (A). Of the total amount available for distribution to such agencies under this paragraph, the State educational agency or State entity, shall, in carrying out the competition—

“(I) award to high poverty local educational agencies described in clause (ii), in the aggregate, at least an amount which bears the same relationship to such total amount as the aggregate amount such local educational agencies received under part A of title I for the previous fiscal year bears to the aggregate amount received for such fiscal year under such part by all local educational agencies in the State;

“(II) award to rural local educational agencies in the State, in the aggregate, at least an amount which bears the same relationship to such total amount as the aggregate amount such rural local educational agencies received under part A of title I for the previous fiscal year bears to the aggregate amount received for such fiscal year under such part by all local educational agencies in the State; and “(III) award the remaining funds to local educational agencies not receiving an award under subclause (I) or (II), including high poverty and rural local educational agencies that did not receive such an award.

“(ii) HIGH POVERTY LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—A local educational agency is described in this clause if—

“(I) the percentage described in subparagraph (C)(i) with respect to the agency is 30 percent or greater; or “(II) the number of children described in such subparagraph with respect to the agency is at least 10,000.

“(C) CRITERIA FOR AWARDED GRANTS.—In awarding competitive grants under this paragraph, a State educational agency or State entity shall take into account the following criteria:

“(i) The percentage of poor children 5 to 17 years of age, inclusive, in a local educational agency.

“(ii) The need of a local educational agency for school repair and renovation, as demonstrated by the condition of its public school facilities.

“(iii) The fiscal capacity of a local educational agency to meet its needs for repair and renovation of public school facilities without assistance under this section, including its ability to raise funds through the use of local bonding capacity and otherwise.

“(iv) In the case of a local educational agency that proposes to fund a repair or renovation project for a charter school or schools, the extent to which the school or schools have access to funding for the project through the financing methods available to other public schools or local educational agencies in the State.

“(v) The likelihood that the local educational agency will maintain, in good condition, any facility whose repair or renovation is assisted under this section.

“(D) POSSIBLE MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—A State educational agency or State entity may require local educational agencies to match funds awarded under this subsection.

“(ii) MATCH AMOUNT.—The amount of a match described in clause (i) may be established by using a sliding scale that takes into account the relative poverty of the population served by the local educational agency.

“(3) RESERVATION FOR COMPETITIVE IDEA OR TECHNOLOGY GRANTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the reservation under paragraph (1), of the funds allocated to a State educational agency under subsection (a)(1)(D), the State educational agency shall distribute 25 percent of such funds to local educational agencies through competitive grant processes, to be used for the following:

“(i) To carry out activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.).

“(ii) For technology activities that are carried out in connection with school repair and renovation, including—

“(I) wiring;

“(II) acquiring hardware and software;

“(III) acquiring connectivity linkages and resources; and “(IV) acquiring microwave, fiber optics, cable, and satellite transmission equipment.

“(B) CRITERIA FOR AWARDED IDEA GRANTS.—In awarding competitive grants under subparagraph (A) to be used to carry out activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.), a State educational agency shall take into account the following criteria:

“(i) The need of a local educational agency for additional funds for a student whose individually allocable cost for expenses related to the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act substantially exceeds the State's average per-pupil expenditure.

“(ii) The need of a local educational agency for additional funds for special education and related services under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.).

“(iii) The need of a local educational agency for additional funds for assistive technology devices (as defined in section 602 of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1401)) or assistive technology services (as so defined) for children being served under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.).

“(iv) The need of a local educational agency for additional funds for activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.) in order for children with disabilities to make progress toward meeting the performance goals and indicators established by the State under section 612(a)(16) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1412).

“(C) CRITERIA FOR AWARDED TECHNOLOGY GRANTS.—In awarding competitive grants under subparagraph (A) to be used for technology activities that are carried out in connection with school repair and renovation, a State educational agency shall take into account the need of a local educational agency for additional funds for such activities, including the need for the activities described in subclauses (I) through (IV) of subparagraph (A)(ii).

“(c) RULES APPLICABLE TO SCHOOL REPAIR AND RENOVATION.—With respect to funds made available under this section that are used for school repair and renovation, the following rules shall apply:

“(1) PERMISSIBLE USES OF FUNDS.—School repair and renovation shall be limited to one or more of the following:

“(A) Emergency repairs or renovations to public school facilities only to ensure the health and safety of students and staff, including—

“(i) repairing, replacing, or installing roofs, electrical wiring, plumbing systems, or sewage systems;

“(ii) repairing, replacing, or installing heating, ventilation, or air conditioning systems (including insulation); and

“(iii) bringing public schools into compliance with fire and safety codes.

“(B) School facilities modifications necessary to render public school facilities accessible in order to comply with the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.).

“(C) School facilities modifications necessary to render public school facilities accessible in order to comply with section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794).

“(D) Asbestos abatement or removal from public school facilities.

“(E) Renovation, repair, and acquisition needs related to the building infrastructure of a charter school.

“(2) IMPERMISSIBLE USES OF FUNDS.—No funds received under this section may be used for—

“(A) payment of maintenance costs in connection with any projects constructed in whole or in part with Federal funds provided under this section;

“(B) the construction of new facilities, except for facilities for an impacted local educational agency (as defined in subsection (a)(3)); or

“(C) stadiums or other facilities primarily used for athletic contests or exhibitions or other events for which admission is charged to the general public.

“(3) CHARTER SCHOOLS.—A public charter school that constitutes a local educational agency under State law shall be eligible for assistance under the same terms and conditions as any other local educational agency.

“(4) SUPPLEMENT, NOT SUPPLANT.—Excluding the uses described in subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1), a local educational agency shall use Federal funds subject to this subsection only to supplement the amount of funds that would, in the absence of such Federal funds, be made available from non-Federal sources for school repair and renovation.

“(d) SPECIAL RULE.—Each local educational agency that receives funds under this section shall ensure that, if it carries out repair or renovation through a contract, any such contract process ensures the maximum number of qualified bidders, including small, minority, and women-owned businesses, through full and open competition.

“(e) PUBLIC COMMENT.—Each local educational agency receiving funds under paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (b)—

“(1) shall provide parents, educators, and all other interested members of the community the opportunity to consult on the use of funds received under such paragraph;

“(2) shall provide the public with adequate and efficient notice of the opportunity described in paragraph (1) in a widely read and distributed medium; and

“(3) shall provide the opportunity described in paragraph (1) in accordance with any applicable State and local law specifying how the comments may be received and how the comments may be reviewed by any member of the public.

“(f) REPORTING.—

“(1) LOCAL REPORTING.—Each local educational agency receiving funds under subsection (a)(1)(D) shall submit a report to the State educational agency, at such time as the State educational agency may require, describing the use of such funds for—

“(A) school repair and renovation (and construction, in the case of an impacted local educational agency (as defined in subsection (a)(3)));

“(B) activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.); and

“(C) technology activities that are carried out in connection with school repair and renovation, including the activities described in subclauses (I) through (IV) of subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii).

“(2) STATE REPORTING.—Each State educational agency shall submit to the Secretary, not later than December 31 of each year (beginning with 2003), a report on the use of funds received under subsection (a)(1)(D) by local educational agencies for—

“(A) school repair and renovation (and construction, in the case of an impacted local educational agency (as defined in subsection (a)(3)));

“(B) activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.); and

“(C) technology activities that are carried out in connection with school repair and renovation, including the activities described in subclauses (I) through (IV) of subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii).

“(3) ADDITIONAL REPORTS.—Each entity receiving funds allocated under subparagraph (A) or (B) of section (a)(1) shall submit to the Secretary, not later than December 31 of each year (beginning with 2003), a report on its uses of funds under this section, in such form and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

“(g) APPLICABILITY OF PART B OF IDEA.—If a local educational agency uses funds received under this section to carry out activities under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.), such part (including provisions respecting the participation of private school children), and any other provision of law that applies to such part, shall apply to such use.

“(h) REALLOCATION.—If a State educational agency does not apply for an allocation of funds under subsection (a)(1)(D) for any fiscal year, or does not use its entire allocation for any fiscal year, the Secretary may reallocate the amount of the State educational agency's allocation (or the remainder thereof, as the case may be) to the remaining State educational agencies in accordance with subsection (a)(1)(D).

“(i) PARTICIPATION OF PRIVATE SCHOOLS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 4142 shall apply to subsection (b)(2) in the same manner as it applies to activities under subpart 1 of part A of title IV, except that—

“(A) such section shall not apply with respect to the title to any real property renovated or repaired with assistance provided under this section;

“(B) the term ‘services’ as used in section 4142 with respect to funds under this section shall be provided only to private, nonprofit elementary or secondary schools with a rate of child poverty of at least 40 percent and may include for purposes of subsection (b)(2) only—

“(i) modifications of school facilities necessary to meet the standards applicable to public schools under the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.);

“(ii) modifications of school facilities necessary to meet the standards applicable to public schools under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794); and

“(iii) asbestos abatement or removal from school facilities; and

“(C) notwithstanding the requirements of section 4142(b), expenditures for services provided using funds made available under subsection (b)(2) shall be considered equal for purposes of such section if the per-pupil expenditures for services described in subparagraph (B) for students enrolled in private nonprofit elementary and secondary schools that have child poverty rates of at least 40 percent are consistent with the per-pupil expenditures under this section for children enrolled in the public schools in the school district of the local educational agency receiving funds under this section.

“(2) REMAINING FUNDS.—If the expenditure for services described in paragraph (1)(B) is less than the amount calculated under paragraph (1)(C) because of insufficient need for such services, the remainder shall be available to the local educational agency for renovation and repair of public school facilities.

“(3) APPLICATION.—If any provision of this section, or the application thereof, to any person or circumstances is judicially determined to be invalid, the provisions of the remainder of the section and the application to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

“(j) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

“(1) CHARTER SCHOOL.—The term ‘charter school’ has the meaning given such term in section 4210(1).

“(2) POOR CHILDREN AND CHILD POVERTY.—The terms ‘poor children’ and ‘child poverty’ refer to children 5 to 17 years of age, inclusive, who are from families with incomes below the poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Community Services Block Grant (42 U.S.C. 9902(2)) applicable to a family of the size involved for the most recent fiscal year for which data satisfactory to the Secretary are available.

“(3) RURAL LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCY.—The term ‘rural local educational agency’ means a local educational agency that the State determines is located in a rural area using objective data and a commonly employed definition of the term ‘rural’.

“(4) STATE.—The term ‘State’ means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

“(k) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

“PART B—CREDIT ENHANCEMENT INITIATIVES TO ASSIST CHARTER SCHOOL FACILITY ACQUISITION, CONSTRUCTION, AND RENOVATION

“SEC. 9201. PURPOSE.

“The purpose of this part is to provide one-time grants to eligible entities to permit them to demonstrate innovative credit enhancement initiatives that assist charter schools to address the cost of acquiring, constructing, and renovating facilities.

“SEC. 9202. GRANTS TO ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall use 100 percent of the amount available to carry out this part to award not less than three grants to eligible entities having applications approved under this part to demonstrate innovative methods of assisting charter schools to address the cost of acquiring, constructing, and renovating facilities by enhancing the availability of loans or bond financing.

“(b) GRANTEE SELECTION.—The Secretary shall evaluate each application submitted, and shall make a determination of which are sufficient to merit approval and which are not. The Secretary shall award at least one grant to an eligible entity described in section 9210(2)(A), at least one grant to an eligible entity described in section 9210(2)(B), and at least one grant to an eligible entity described in section 9210(2)(C), if applications are submitted that permit the Secretary to do so without approving an application that is not of sufficient quality to merit approval.

“(c) GRANT CHARACTERISTICS.—Grants under this part shall be of a sufficient size, scope, and quality so as to ensure an effective demonstration of an innovative means of enhancing credit for the financing of charter school acquisition, construction, or renovation.

“(d) SPECIAL RULE.—In the event the Secretary determines that the funds available are insufficient to permit the Secretary to award not less than three grants in accordance with subsections (a) through (c), such three-grant minimum and the second sentence of subsection (b) shall not apply, and the Secretary may determine the appropriate number of grants to be awarded in accordance with subsection (c).

“SEC. 9203. APPLICATIONS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—To receive a grant under this part, an eligible entity shall submit to the Secretary an application in such form as the Secretary may reasonably require.

“(b) CONTENTS.—An application under subsection (a) shall contain—

“(1) a statement identifying the activities proposed to be undertaken with funds received under this part, including how the applicant will determine which charter schools will receive assistance, and how much and what types of assistance charter schools will receive;

“(2) a description of the involvement of charter schools in the application's development and the design of the proposed activities;

“(3) a description of the applicant's expertise in capital market financing;

“(4) a description of how the proposed activities will leverage the maximum amount of private-sector financing capital relative to the amount of government funding used and otherwise enhance credit available to charter schools;

“(5) a description of how the applicant possesses sufficient expertise in education to evaluate the likelihood of success of a charter school program for which facilities financing is sought;

“(6) in the case of an application submitted by a State governmental entity, a description of the actions that the entity has taken, or will take, to ensure that charter schools within the State receive the funding they need to have adequate facilities; and “(7) such other information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

“SEC. 9204. CHARTER SCHOOL OBJECTIVES.

“An eligible entity receiving a grant under this part shall use the funds deposited in the reserve account established under section 9205(a) to assist one or more charter schools to access private sector capital to accomplish one or both of the following objectives:

“(1) The acquisition (by purchase, lease, donation, or otherwise) of an interest (including an interest held by a third party for the benefit of a charter school) in improved or unimproved real property that is necessary to commence or continue the operation of a charter school.

“(2) The construction of new facilities, or the renovation, repair, or alteration of existing facilities, necessary to commence or continue the operation of a charter school.

“SEC. 9205. RESERVE ACCOUNT.

“(a) USE OF FUNDS.—To assist charter schools to accomplish the objectives described in section 9204, an eligible entity receiving a grant under this part shall, in accordance with State and local law, directly or indirectly, alone or in collaboration with others, deposit the funds received under this part (other than funds used for administrative costs in accordance with section 9206) in a reserve account established and maintained by the entity for this purpose. Amounts deposited in such account shall be used by the entity for one or more of the following purposes:

“(1) Guaranteeing, insuring, and reinsuring bonds, notes, evidences of debt, loans, and interests therein, the proceeds of which are used for an objective described in section 9204.

“(2) Guaranteeing and insuring leases of personal and real property for an objective described in section 9204.

“(3) Facilitating financing by identifying potential lending sources, encouraging private lending, and other similar activities that directly promote lending to, or for the benefit of, charter schools.

“(4) Facilitating the issuance of bonds by charter schools, or by other public entities for the benefit of charter schools, by providing technical, administrative, and other appropriate assistance (including the recruitment of bond counsel, underwriters, and potential investors and the consolidation of multiple charter school projects within a single bond issue).

“(b) INVESTMENT.—Funds received under this part and deposited in the reserve account shall be invested in obligations issued or guaranteed by the United States or a State, or in other similarly low-risk securities.

“(c) REINVESTMENT OF EARNINGS.—Any earnings on funds received under this part shall be deposited in the reserve account established under subsection (a) and used in accordance with such subsection.

"SEC. 9206. LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.

"An eligible entity may use not more than 0.25 percent of the funds received under this part for the administrative costs of carrying out its responsibilities under this part.

"SEC. 9207. AUDITS AND REPORTS.

"(a) FINANCIAL RECORD MAINTENANCE AND AUDIT.—The financial records of each eligible entity receiving a grant under this part shall be maintained in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and shall be subject to an annual audit by an independent public accountant.

"(b) REPORTS.—

"(1) GRANTEE ANNUAL REPORTS.—Each eligible entity receiving a grant under this part annually shall submit to the Secretary a report of its operations and activities under this part.

"(2) CONTENTS.—Each such annual report shall include—

"(A) a copy of the most recent financial statements, and any accompanying opinion on such statements, prepared by the independent public accountant reviewing the financial records of the eligible entity;

"(B) a copy of any report made on an audit of the financial records of the eligible entity that was conducted under subsection (a) during the reporting period;

"(C) an evaluation by the eligible entity of the effectiveness of its use of the Federal funds provided under this part in leveraging private funds;

"(D) a listing and description of the charter schools served during the reporting period;

"(E) a description of the activities carried out by the eligible entity to assist charter schools in meeting the objectives set forth in section 9204; and

"(F) a description of the characteristics of lenders and other financial institutions participating in the activities undertaken by the eligible entity under this part during the reporting period.

"(3) SECRETARIAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall review the reports submitted under paragraph (1) and shall provide a comprehensive annual report to the Congress on the activities conducted under this part.

"SEC. 9208. NO FULL FAITH AND CREDIT FOR GRANTEE OBLIGATIONS.

"No financial obligation of an eligible entity entered into pursuant to this part (such as an obligation under a guarantee, bond, note, evidence of debt, or loan) shall be an obligation of, or guaranteed in any respect by, the United States. The full faith and credit of the United States is not pledged to the payment of funds which may be required to be paid under any obligation made by an eligible entity pursuant to any provision of this part.

"SEC. 9209. RECOVERY OF FUNDS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in accordance with chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code, shall collect—

"(1) all of the funds in a reserve account established by an eligible entity under section 9205(a) if the Secretary determines, not earlier than 2 years after the date on which the entity first received funds under this part, that the entity has failed to make substantial progress in carrying out the purposes described in section 9205(a); or

"(2) all or a portion of the funds in a reserve account established by an eligible entity under section 9205(a) if the Secretary determines that the eligible entity has permanently ceased to use all or a portion of the funds in such account to accomplish any purpose described in section 9205(a).

"(b) EXERCISE OF AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall not exercise the authority provided in subsection (a) to collect from any eligible entity any funds that are being properly used to achieve one or more of the purposes described in section 9205(a).

"(c) PROCEDURES.—The provisions of sections 451, 452, and 458 of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1234 et seq.) shall apply to the recovery of funds under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—This section shall not be construed to impair or affect the authority of the Secretary to recover funds under part D of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1234 et seq.).

"SEC. 9210. DEFINITIONS.

"In this part:

"(1) The term 'charter school' has the meaning given such term in section 4210(1).

"(2) The term 'eligible entity' means—

"(A) a public entity, such as a State or local governmental entity;

"(B) a private nonprofit entity; or

"(C) a consortium of entities described in subparagraphs (A) and (B)."

Mr. BOEHNER (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion to recommit.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, this motion to recommit adds a vital component that has been left out of our deliberations so far. We were not allowed to offer an amendment on the floor dealing with school construction, renovation or modernization, and this motion to recommit includes instructions to continue the school renovation program, which is now in its first year, and increase that funding to $2 billion.

My colleagues will recall that last year we did agree on a $1.2 billion school repair, renovation bill. We would like to at least raise that to $2 billion. It is a small amount compared to the need. We know that in 1994, the General Accounting Office said we needed $110 billion at that time for school renovation, construction, and repairs. The NEA did a survey last year which said we need about $320 billion for school construction, repair, and renovation across the whole Nation. The $2 billion was merely to make a beginning on emergency repairs and is still very important.

It is important we say to the children in the public schools of America, 53 million children, that we care about more than just testing them. Accountability means more than accountability of the students and school and the massive testing we have proposed. Accountability also means we will stand up and make certain that those tools that they need to work with are there, especially the infrastructure, the facilities.

In a religion we would never propose to proceed without the temple, the infrastructure, the physical building being in tip-top shape to begin with. We cannot propose to have decent education if we are going to neglect the actual infrastructure, the buildings and the facilities, that children are to receive their education in.

So this is a modest proposal, a mere $1.2 billion at this time. We want to raise that to $2 billion to take care of emergency repairs and renovations, and we ought to continue this. I hope every Member will vote for this.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OWENS. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. America's schools are in a State of disrepair, and that is interfering with the education of today's students. On average, schools were built about 50 years ago to meet the oncoming demand of the baby boom generation, and they are now in disrepair.

The General Accounting Office reports that now one-third of our public schools are in need of extensive repair or replacement. Nearly 60 percent of schools need new roofs, walls, plumbing and heating systems or electric and power systems. Over half pose environmental concerns, such as poor ventilation, flaking paint, crumbling plaster, and nonfunctioning toilets.

Leave no child behind; is that the phrase the President has appropriated for his use? How can we expect to reform education and improve student achievement when so many schools are crumbling? Why do we keep ignoring this growing problem? We cannot relegate it to the back burner. We must ensure that our schools are safe and modern and that we have modern technology.

Too often I hear the argument this is a problem for the local school districts to handle.

□ 1830

Mr. Speaker, too often I hear the argument that this is a problem for the local school districts to handle. However, local school districts cannot handle this problem alone. Property tax payers are beleaguered by the costs of a growing student population. The repairs are just too expensive. According to the GAO, the cost of needed repairs is on order of $127 billion.

Mr. Speaker, with this motion to recommit, we are asking for merely a fraction of that amount, $2 billion to help our schools most in need. This will not kill the bill. That is not our intent.

Mr. Speaker, I am a strong supporter of the bill and intend to vote for final passage; but, I urge my colleagues to support this very important motion to recommit so we can deal with this pressing national problem.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT), I think that a motion to recommit that would bring an additional $2 billion worth of authorization to this bill, a 10 percent increase over the current level in the bill, is unwise.

Mr. Speaker, when we talk about school construction and the need for school buildings in America, the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from New York could be no more right. There is a great need. But we all know that school construction has been a province of State and local governments since our inception.

As a matter of fact, State governments over the last 10 years or so have increased funding for school construction by some 39 percent, and today every State has a huge budget surplus.

In my own State, Ohio, from a State standpoint, never got involved in school construction until the last several years, and the State has been helping low-income districts in my State to provide this.

But I do not think that at this point in time we ought to do this. Here is one big reason: All of the programs that we have agreed to and the funding levels that we have agreed to in the base bill are there. If we expect to work with our appropriators to get most of those authorizations funded, the last thing we want to do is to open it up for more disparate funding.

We have a serious education proposal on the floor which has been put together on a bipartisan basis. Let us reserve the precious funds that we can get out of the appropriation process to fund that program to ensure that it works. Where does that money go? It goes to low-income schools and high-poverty students who need this money the most.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON) who has worked on this proposal in the past.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. Speaker, as we are poised to make a substantial improvement in public education, let us not end by making a hollow promise to public education.

The gentlemen are correct that their proposal represents but a fraction, and I mean a fraction, of the need.

But if the Congress of the United States ever sent the message to the public we will take care of that construction, we will do more damage to public education. Voters will not pass bond referendums. Local options, sale taxes will not be passed, and the capital investments will not be made by the local schools.

Let us leave no child behind. Let us make sure that the poorest and the most disadvantaged have the advantage of this bill. Let us reject the motion to recommit. Instead of making this hollow promise, let us make a promise to the children of America and improve their education forever. I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recommit.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

NOT VOTING—3

□ 1852

Messrs. PETERSON of Minnesota, RADANOVICH, GILMAN and SCHAFER changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERMISSION FOR CHAIRMAN AND RANKING MEMBER OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION AND THE WORKFORCE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for the Chair to recognize myself and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) to address the House each for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking everybody in the House for their patience as we deliberated this bill. I also want to begin by thanking staffs on both sides of the aisle for all of their very difficult and hard work. We have spent 2 days deliberating this bill on the floor. The staff of this committee has spent 4 months, along with members of the working group on both sides of the aisle.

I want to thank the Members of the working group on our side of the aisle, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE), the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK), the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), for all of their help on this and on the other side, the gentleman from California (Mr. McKEON) and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) and the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) for all of their effort to bring the Members together to talk about whether or not there was a possibility of getting the legislation that, in fact, would reflect what many Members in this House have said they wanted for our education system, for the Federal participation in our education system, for many years, but we have not achieved.

Some 35 years ago, we set out to see whether or not the Federal Government could help the poorer children in this Nation residing in the poorer school districts in this Nation. We have spent $120 billion, and in many instances we have changed the lives of those children and their education, but we have not achieved all that we have wanted to achieve. We have made a difference in many ways, but we have also had our disappointments.

This effort and this legislation is an effort to do it in a different fashion, to hold schools more accountable; and I do not mean accountable just in the sense of testing or just in the sense of money, but accountable for results. We are no longer going to ask schools how is the average child doing in their district. In this legislation, we are going to ask how each and every child in that district is doing, how is each Hispanic child, every African American child, every rich child, poor child, limited English-proficient child, how are they doing.

We are also going to ask them whether or not the gap is being closed that exists today in education between the majority and minority in America.

That question has not been asked. We have put out the money there to get the results, but we never asked them whether or not it was taking place; and in fact, the gap to some extent has widened.

We also said we are going to hold them accountable because we are going to ask for annual testing and annual assessment, a diagnostic effort so if a child is falling behind in second or third grade in reading we know the resources that we can attach that that child needs. Do they need a Saturday school? Do they need after-school? Do they need a mentor? Do they need a tutor? So that, in fact, children do not fall behind.

Many on my side of the aisle said that is all well and good and we have always been for that; but if we do not have the resources, we cannot obtain it. So we also made a commitment in this legislation, through a very lot of hard and very difficult negotiations, that, in fact, the resources would be there; that the resources would be there to fix the failing schools and not abandon them; the resources would be there to help align the test to the curriculum and improve many of the tests in States today that are not acceptable to challenge our children; to improve the curriculum. Those are the efforts we would make, and we just reconfirmed those figures on this floor on a huge bipartisan vote of 324 in support of those resources being there. That is a commitment to this legislation. We are not going to try to reform this system on the cheap.

Some on this side of the aisle said we have to have more flexibility, we have to have Straight A's down to the States. We thought, why would we give money to the States? Why can it not go locally? I could not work it out, probably because I am very much against that kind of effort. But the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY), the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON) and others got together and the staffs got together; and they hammered out something that I think is superior.

We said, fine, we will give local districts flexibility, and we have increased the flexibility ten times what it is in current law so that they can set some priorities about whether they want to train the teachers first to become proficient in computers and then buy the computers, or whether they want to buy the computers and then train the teachers. That is their decision. They can combine these monies based upon their local needs and priorities. Ten times the flexibility that we have ever experienced in Federal law.

I think it is an experiment, and we will see. Other people are very confident about it. Anyway, that is what a compromise is. That is what a compromise is.

□ 1900

There are some places we could not go. Clearly, this caucus was not going to go for vouchers and it was not going to go straight As, and we did not go there. But we have tried to provide alternatives and responses to that. We have said that if a school is failing, a parent can, in fact, go out and purchase, purchase those services to tutor a child, to provide the kind of remedial help that may be necessary, and they go out in the community and get those services from private vendors. That is an important change. It is a very important change, especially when we see what technology is bringing to bear for the educational problems of our children, the technology that the private sector is developing. We have to call those resources in and make them available to the parents, and that is what this legislation does.

If I just might, Mr. Speaker, if I just might add that I think this is legislation that does very well by America's children. It is not everything I would do, it is not a bill I would write and it is certainly not a bill that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the committee would write, but it is a bill that we were capable of writing, trying to keep in mind what all of us have said when we go home to our districts.

We are not all going to be happy and we have a long way to go before the end of this road. But I think this is a very good beginning for a House of Representatives as a statement of where we should be on education.

Finally, I want to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), our chairman, who provided exceptional leadership. He acted with honor. His word was his bond and he opened up lines of communication that we have not had available to us before. I want to say how much I appreciate that and I thank him very much for that effort.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage all of my colleagues to support this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues for their patience as we have gone through what really has been, I think, an extraordinary process. It all started last December when our new President-elect invited a bipartisan, bicameral group of Members to Austin, Texas to talk about his desire for dealing with the issue of education in an honorable, up-front and positive way. It was a step that many of my colleagues on our side of the aisle were somewhat uncomfortable with, a step that many of my colleagues on the other side were uncomfortable with as well. But the President laid out his agenda in great detail, and the Members of the House and the Senate that were there all had their opportunity to put their fingerprints on how this path was going to be started, and they did it in Austin, Texas.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) was not on the list to be invited, but he ended up on the list at my insistence, because if the President was serious about having a new tone in Washington and if the President was serious about working together in a bipartisan way, it was right for the President to invite the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) to Austin, Texas, and he did. And after the President spoke, all of the Members spoke, and the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) was the last person to speak. The gentleman stood up and said, Mr. President, I think you are serious about helping underprivileged children in America. And if you are serious about helping underprivileged children in America, and you are willing to stand up and fight for accountability, I am going to be standing right there with you, and he has, each and every step along the way, and I want to say to the gentleman from California, "thank you."

Now, as the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) pointed out, there were people who helped, there were a lot of people who helped. The gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE); the gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON), the subcommittee chairman; the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON); and even the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER), my good friend, who is hiding way in the back, were Members on our side who sat in rooms for months, as well as the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE) and the gentlewoman from Hawaii (Mrs. MINK) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), and all of our staffs who have done a very good job. I really do want to thank them for all of what they have done.

Mr. Speaker, we stand here at this moment on the threshold of the most significant change in Federal education policy in 35 years. We all know the money that we have spent, we all know the results that we have gotten, but we have a problem in America, and every one of us knows it; every one of us. We have an achievement gap that exists between Anglo students and their minority peers that has widened over the last 10 years, while we have had the best economy in the history of our country.

We have a growing achievement gap that exists between middle income and upper income schools than our minority and lower income schools. Good schools have gotten better over the last 10 years. Middle income schools have gotten better over the last 10 years. Our worst schools, unfortunately, have gotten worse.

We as a society cannot turn a blind eye to this problem. The President has made it perfectly clear over the last 4 months that we have to act. So, we have acted, and we have done it in a way that we can work together on both sides of the aisle to address all of the Members' concerns. This truly is a bipartisan bill. There are issues that my Democrat colleagues do not like in this bill, I know that, and I can tell my colleagues that there are problems with my guys on this side of the aisle, and I can show my colleagues the wounds of my back to prove it. But bipartisanship means working together for the benefit of the whole, and I can tell my colleagues that the bill that we have before us today is a solid achievement for this House. It is a solid achievement that will improve the lives of the neediest children in our country.

Those who are at the bottom of the economic ladder who today are not getting a good education in our society will suffer if we do not step up and have the courage, the courage to take this step, and that is really what this bill today is all about. Do we have the courage as conservative Republicans to stand up and take a step in the direction that some of us are a bit uncomfortable with? And, to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, do they have the courage to stand up today and to take a step toward bipartisanship, toward an effort that truly will help the neediest students in our country.

I have talked to virtually all of my colleagues over the last several months about this bill. Everyone has had their opportunity for input. Yes, some are disappointed. But I think each and every one of my colleagues know that unless we exhibit courage today, that this will not happen. We need it to happen. We need to exhibit the courage and show the American people that we can work together to solve the problems that we have in this country. Remember, when we vote today, this is not about the House, and it is not about this bill, it is about the neediest children in America who are counting on us today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

NOT VOTING—4

Cubin	Moakley
Larson (CT)	Visclosky

□ 1925

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. LARSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, for Roll Call Vote No. 145, on final passage of H.R. 1, I was present in the Chamber and engaged in the debate on this bill as indicated by my previous vote on the Motion to Recommit (Roll Call Vote No. 144) and subsequent vote on the Motion to Instruct Conferees on H.R. 1836. Although I intended to vote "aye" on final passage of this bill, my vote was not registered.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 1, NO CHILD LEFT BEHIND ACT OF 2001

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill, H.R. 1, the Clerk be authorized to make technical corrections and conforming changes to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed with amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1836. An act to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 1836) "An Act to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002" requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BREAUX, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 1836, ECONOMIC GROWTH AND TAX RELIEF RECONCILIATION ACT OF 2001

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 1836) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 104 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, President

Bush has said that this bill, which is the tax bill, should be rushed through the Congress to, first, stimulate the economy; and then, more recently, has been offered as a means by which we can deal with the energy crisis in this country.

Now, unfortunately, this bill does not meet the President's request, because it gives no tax relief whatsoever to the people in the bottom part of the Tax Code, those people who do not pay income tax; those people who will be paying $3 a gallon for gasoline, and who are paying enormous rates for electricity in California, Washington, and Oregon.

Now, in the Committee on Ways and Means, we tried to offer amendments on a windfall profits tax, because in the fall and in the winter, people are not going to be able to pay their utility bills.

It is my view that there ought to be conservation rebates in this bill. There ought to be a whole series of energy-related issues taken up in this bill since this is going to be the tax bill of the session.

There is no more money left. This is it. We have been told $1.3 trillion. It is out the door, and there is no chance to come back on energy. There is no chance to come back on any of the problems related to the economy because of the energy crisis in this country.

It is my belief that we ought to be dealing with that now. It is a crisis. The California Assembly is suing FERC, the Federal Energy Regulation Commission, because they will not impose price caps. You have a situation where you have price gouging all over the West.

Energy companies in Texas have gotten 400 percent profit in the last 6 months. I mean, we all believe in the free enterprise system, but 10 percent, 15 percent, that is enough, I should think, 400 percent being put on the backs of people who are not going to get a penny out of this tax bill.

This bill deals with people like us and above. It does not deal with people who are making $25,000 a year for a family of four. They get absolutely nothing out of this bill. I think that the President is being done a disservice by this House by us not dealing with energy in this piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I, for that reason, have raised the objection that I think we ought to stop the process, go back to committee and work it out. We do not need to go rushing to the conference committee. It will be rushed back tomorrow. There will not be a soul in this House who knows what is in the bill.

We can get on those planes tomorrow at 5 p.m., everybody is going to say we passed a tax cut; and they are not going to know what they did. It is my view that the crisis in energy in this country that is beginning in California, it is going to cover the entire country.

Anybody who does not believe that, they should go to Los Angeles, walk around for a week, and you will see what is going to happen in the rest of the United States.

Some of my colleagues are already facing places where gasoline prices are up over $2, $2.50 in some parts of this country this last weekend.

Think of those people who have to commute 30 miles, 40 miles, 50 miles, 60 miles a day in an SUV that gets 10 miles, 12 miles, 15 miles to the gallon. It is going to be expensive, and my colleagues are going to hear about it. My colleagues will have passed the only tax bill of this session without ever dealing with energy.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, the motion is to go to conference, because the tax bill has got to get out before Memorial Day. I wish the majority party, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, would say we need to get out a bill to help California and the West before Memorial Day.

Why are we rushing on this before Memorial Day when California is being bled dry? The gentleman from California (Chairman THOMAS) knows what is going on in California. We are paying as a State now $3 million an hour for electricity. We are paying $70 million, sometimes $90 million a day, over $3 billion a month.

No State, even if it is the sixth biggest economy in the world, can survive that kind of bleeding.

Mr. Speaker, 65 percent of the business in San Diego County by a report that came out by the Chamber of Commerce, 65 percent of the small businesses in San Diego County are facing bankruptcy this year because of energy. They cannot survive given the costs of electricity.

We have social service organizations for our children who we are not going to leave behind after the last vote closing up half the time because of the overhead in electricity.

We have schools who cannot teach because of the overhead in electricity. We have libraries that cannot buy books because of the overhead in electricity. We are bleeding in California and in Oregon and in Washington and in New Mexico and Wyoming and Montana. In Rhode Island, I heard the prices have just doubled.

We need to act as a Congress on this; yet, my colleagues want to rush through a tax bill by Memorial Day.

Mr. Speaker, I think my colleagues ought to rush through by Memorial Day a bill to give us some relief in San Diego and California and the West.

My colleagues are looking at me now as if they do not know what I am talking about. My colleagues are going to have the same prices and the same crisis very soon. We need to put cost-based rates on electricity in the West.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, which is FERC in California, has said that they have found that these prices are illegal. They are illegal, Mr. Speaker, and yet we continue to have to pay them.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT) for his reservation. We ought to be acting on the crisis that exists in this Nation and not get out of here to save those who make a million or more a year on their tax bills for the coming year.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, to do something for California.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the reservation of objection of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. McDERMOTT), because this is truly the wrong moment to be dealing with this issue when we have a crisis of such enormity.

Let us talk about the amount of action that our friends on the Republican aisle want us to take in light of this crisis, which is zero, to the people who have cut their energy use by 40 percent in some instances to conserve electricity in the State of Washington but whose bills have gone up nonetheless.

The message of this bill is tough luck. Mr. Speaker, we need to continue our effort.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my unanimous consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentleman from California withdraws his unanimous consent request.

MOTION TO GO TO CONFERENCE ON H.R. 1836, ECONOMIC GROWTH AND TAX RELIEF RECONCILI- ATION ACT OF 2001

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 2 of House Resolution 142, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMAS moves that the House take from the Speaker's table H.R. 1836, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I have no problem at all debating the issue of energy. My understanding was we had an agreement in which one individual and then a second individual was going to be allowed to participate. No one communicated to this side of the aisle that there were going to be additional people participating.

My understanding is that this place can only function when people operate on the agreements that they reach.

Mr. Speaker, I have more than a willing opportunity to discuss any issue under the motion to instruct in which time is divided equally on either side, but under a reservation on a unanimous consent, the agreement that we had reached was violated by the other side. I believe we should move forward.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise in opposition to the motion to go to conference on H.R. 1836 the so-called reconciliation measure considered last week. In the House this measure was considered with little notice, without the consultation with, nor input from, the Democratic Party. This measure was crafted in the dead of the night, behind closed doors and now we are instructed to vote to send it to Conference.

I say vote no on the motion to go to conference on H.R. 1836. This measure was re-introduced under the cover of a reconciliation bill in order to deprive the power of the minority in the Senate. The American people should ask themselves: Why couldn't the Republicans Leadership bring this bill up under normal procedures? Why did they resort to procedural tricks in order to thwart the will of the Senate minority? Then, in order to aggravate the situation, the rule passed in the House was a closed one, allowing for only one Democratic Amendment and a motion to recommit. Why was the Republican Leadership in the House afraid of an honest and open debate on this measure?

It is clear that despite Republican claims to the contrary, this reconciliation-bill won't be the only tax cut bill sent to the President this year. Although the budget resolution provided for $1.35 trillion in tax cuts, the Republican wish list includes a total of $2.4 trillion in tax expenditures. Including the interest cost, the total drain on the budget surplus from these tax cuts over ten years would be nearly $3.0 trillion, more than the $2.7 trillion available in the projected surpluses outside Social Security and Medicare.

This bill is essentially the same as H.R. 3, which this Chamber passed earlier in the year. I voted "no" then and I will vote "no" now. The Joint Tax Committee estimated the cost at nearly $1.0 trillion over ten years, excluding interest, with the wealthy receiving the lion's share of the benefits. According to an analysis by Citizens for Tax Justice, 44 percent of the tax cuts would go to those in the top 1 percent, while the 60 percent of families with incomes of $44,000 or less would get a mere 16.5 percent of the tax cuts. The bill does make a portion of the new bottom 10 percent tax bracket effective in 2001. However, the bill disregards the need for immediate economic stimulus, providing only $5.6 billion in 2001. In a budget of $10 trillion, $5.6 billion is a drop in the bucket and there will be no trickle down economic stimulus resulting from this tax cut.

Democrats offered an alternative tax cut that gave everyone that pays federal income or payroll taxes a tax cut, and provides approximately $60 billion immediate economic stimulus through a rebate of $300 for married couples.

Our alternative was reasonable and fiscally responsible because it left money to address other problems facing our nation. Our tax cut protected Social Security and Medicare and invested in education and prescription drug coverage in Medicare for all seniors.

President Bush ran on the issue of a strong defense, the price of which we have not yet seen. This budget, however, does not even consider the cost of the changes he has advocated to our defense infrastructure. While he deals in theory, our budget dealt with reality. A realistic tax cut that left enough money in the budget to ensure a strong defense.

Democrats believe in tax cuts, but not at any cost. Our tax cut fixed the problem of the Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) that the Republican bill ignores. It creates a new 12 percent tax rate bracket and expands the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). Our alternative even gives marriage penalty relief to couples who use the standard deduction.

Yet our alternative did this at a realistic cost. Our alternative cost $585 billion over ten years, with a total cost of $750 billion including interest.

So, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote no on the Republican tax trick. Vote against the motion to go to conference on H.R. 1836.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

The motion was agreed to.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES OFFERED BY MR. STARK

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to instruct conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STARK moves that, to the maximum extent permitted within the scope of the conference, the conferees on the part of the House in the conference on H.R. 1836, the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001, be instructed to produce a Conference Report in which—

1. The revenue losses and associated debt service costs do not grow as a percentage of gross domestic product on either a long or short term basis. In order to do so—

A. The Conference Report shall not include phase-ins longer than 5 years, delayed effective dates, or sunsets.

B. The Conference Report shall include provisions on all of the following issues: marriage penalty relief, increasing per-child tax credit, estate tax relief, pension reform legislation, and permanent extension of the research credit.

C. The Conference Report shall adjust the current law alternative minimum tax so that it does not disallow the benefits of the tax reductions contained in the bill.

2. The Conference Report shall be designed so that its revenue loss and associated debt service costs for each fiscal year do not exceed the projected non-Social Security/non-Medicare surplus for such fiscal year. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the projected non-Social Security/non-Medicare surplus for any fiscal year is the projected amount of the surplus for such year determined by disregarding the receipts and disbursements of the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds and by reducing the projected surplus for any year by its ratable portion of $300 billion over the 10-year budget period.

3. The Conference Report provides benefits to every family with children that has income or payroll tax liability and the Conference Report includes inflation adjustments so that the benefits provided to families with children are not reduced over time.

4. The conference committee shall be required to meet in preparing the Conference Report pursuant to House Rule 22.

Mr. THOMAS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from California would yield, I think it is almost complete.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will continue to read.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, how long is the motion that we are not wanting to read? How long is that reading?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from California addressing a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair?

Mr. FILNER. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the Clerk is close to finishing reading the motion.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I just again want to register my opinion that this House should be taking up the crisis of electricity in California where my constituents are dying.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the unanimous consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) withdraws his request.

The Clerk will continue to read.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to instruct be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I will not object.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, under the reservation of objection of the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), I wanted to say that I felt that the gentleman was correct in his first statement. There was an agreement and the gentleman was absolutely correct. We intruded on his good nature by extending the courtesy that he had offered to us.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say that the gentleman was correct in his assumption and his statement of the facts.

Mr. Speaker, I hope we can now get on with the motion to instruct and debate it as we agreed.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) for that explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under clause 7 of rule XXII, the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) and the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK).

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am not sure where the Clerk had quite finished, but I would just read the last section or two here, the conference report does provide benefits to every family with children that has income or payroll tax liability, and the conference report includes inflation adjustments so that the benefits provided to families with children are not reduced over time, this is required in our motion to instruct, and that the conference committee shall be required to meet in preparing the conference report pursuant to House Rule 22.

This motion to instruct does have three basic directions, and they deal with constraining the exploding revenue costs.

The motion to instruct requires that the conference report would preserve the funds necessary for Medicare and Social Security which the current bills do not, and it should provide benefits to all families with children that have income or payroll tax liability.

Mr. Speaker, we do, as I mentioned in the last paragraph, require an open conference as provided in the House rules.

Since this tax bill has been written by the Senate, compliance with the House rules is necessary so that there is some input from House Members on the conference report. We should not completely abandon the House's constitutional role on tax legislation.

Both the Senate bill and the various tax bills passed by the House this year affect or create exploding revenue costs.

The revenue costs of the second 5 years in the bill is approximately twice the costs in the first 5 years, and some press estimates have suggested that we could be spending $4 trillion over the next 10 years.

These outyear revenue costs will come at the same time as the retirement of the baby-boom generation, and it will create demands on Medicare and Social Security systems that we will not be able to afford.

□ 1945

The bill is based on rather uncertain surplus protections, but it ignores the certainty of the demographic pressures on the Medicare and Social Security systems.

The bill has gimmicks that artificially reduce the cost of the bill in the 10-year budget window, but blow away the ranch dramatically after the 10-year period. These gimmicks include delayed effective dates, long phase-ins and sunsets. Very few provisions of the Senate bill are fully effective at all times during the budget window.

The conference report uses the current law minimum tax to disallow many of the benefits promised in the big print of the bill. We all know that we will enact legislation addressing the minimum tax, legislation that could increase the cost of this bill by hundreds of billions of dollars.

I am most concerned personally, Mr. Speaker, with protecting Medicare and Social Security. The motion to instruct requires the conferees to construct a conference report that does not invade the Medicare and Social Security surpluses and that reserves funds for a prescription drug benefit. We have committed to preserving Medicare and Social Security surpluses, and there is broad bipartisan support for a Medicare prescription drug benefit. This aspect of the motion to instruct merely requires the conferees to preserve fiscal resources to meet our commitments.

Finally, the motion requires that all families with children that have payroll or income tax liability should receive benefits under the conference report. It is clear that the Republicans will guarantee that the wealthiest segment of our society will receive large benefits from the conference report.

It is only fair that families with payroll tax liability should not be ignored. It is within that context that our motion to instruct conferees is offered and that we ask support for it.

I suspect that the conferees, as few as there are from this side of the Capitol, will meet late into the night. I further suspect that many agreements have been struck in private and have been agreed to even as we talk here this evening.

So as this runs through in a rush to judgment for tomorrow's get-away day, I would hope that this instruction would be taken to heart and imposed upon the conferees to protect some of the frail elderly, the people who depend on Medicare, the lowest-income families in our country who are trying to raise their children in today's turbulent economy.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of our motion to instruct.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as is usually the case with motions to instruct, it contains a number of phrases which seem controlling in nature. For example, under the first point and the A section, "shall not include"; B, "shall include provisions"; C, "shall adjust".

The fact of the matter is that the motion to instruct has no binding capability whatsoever. In fact, if one goes up to the very first line and reads the motion to instruct it says, "Mr. Stark moves that, to the maximum extent permitted," which means any time one reads "shall" under here, it has no consequence whatsoever.

However, we should not let this opportunity go by without correcting some of the factual misstatements that have already occurred, not just about the bill that we have in front of us, but about the bills that the House has voted on in terms of modifying the tax obligation of citizens of the United States.

In the bill that the House passed dealing with the child tax credit, which seems to be the thrust of point number three of the listed points in terms of providing benefits to every family with children that has income tax on payroll tax liability, the answer is simple. The bill that passed the House provided for the ability to utilize a refundable credit to cover payroll taxes beyond income taxes.

I would also tell my colleagues it is a factual statement that, on the Senate finance bill which just passed the floor of the Senate by a vote of 62 to 38, not only did they provide a tax credit on a refundable basis to those individuals who do not have income tax liability, but who have also exceeded their payroll tax exposure. So notwithstanding the statements that this is not being done, the fact of the matter is it simply is not true.

As we go through and examine the other structures, we have to remember that this tax conference is being conducted under the budget resolution which passed both the House and the Senate, which said we must pay down the public debt, we must protect the Medicare or HI Trust Fund, we must protect the Social Security Trust Fund, and we are to set aside $300 billion for a prescription drug modernization in Medicare, and there is an additional $500 billion fund which is available for other discretionary programs as the Congress may determine. All of that with an inclusion of a $1.350 trillion tax bill that is the reason for us being here tonight.

So not withstanding the lamentations, the concerns and the wringing of hands, this motion to instruct, which has no binding effect whatsoever, outlines a number of concerns that have already been taken into consideration and are being dealt with.

I believe that the concern of many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle is to see the Senate move in a bipartisan way with 62 Senators supporting the Senate product and are moving now to a conference.

I am reminded of our days in the minority when the phrase is risky or rushing to judgment, because, frankly, if anybody has bothered to turn on the TV and watch the Senate floor, to describe the Senate rushing to judgment with more than 100 amendments over the last 4 days in which every item was examined and voted on could hardly be described by most people being neutral as rushing to judgment.

Conferences are a unique animal around here. When the House passes a bill that is different than the Senate and the Senate passes a bill different than the House, under the Constitution we are required to reconcile the differences in the bill. That is called going to conference. If it takes an hour, it takes an hour. If it takes a week, it takes a week. The job of the House and the Senate conferees is to reconcile the two bills to be presented back to each House in the same form to be voted up or voted down.

I will tell my colleagues that, if one does not like the product produced out of the bipartisan bicameral conference committee on permanently reducing taxes of hard-working Americans by a $1.350 trillion over the next decade, one has every right and obligation, I believe, to vote no, just as some of your colleagues on the other side of the aisle did.

So let us wait until we have a product before we condemn it; for example, the argument that we do not supply tax relief to those individuals who have no income tax obligation or payroll tax obligation. The product that came from the Senate in fact meets both of those criteria. The product that came from the House met one of them.

Let us kind of turn the flame down until one has an honest actual target to shoot at. This motion to instruct is a gun with no bullets. Wait until we have the product in front of us. If my colleagues do not like it, they can vote no. I think they will find, based upon the House and the Senate coming together, the product will be overwhelmingly accepted, voted on, and signed by the President.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a sweeping prediction here to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, that before I have seen the final product, I am not going to like it. I can assure my colleagues I am not going to like that final product.

This motion to instruct conferees contains many good elements. As the chairman has acknowledged, this is one of the tools of the minority to make a point. I recall the distinguished majority leader of the House now when he was the, I believe, minority second person in command on the Republican side, when he said that the Clinton budget would be fiscal Armageddon; and I recall when the former chairman of the Committee on the Budget, Mr. KUCINICH, the gentleman from Ohio, indicated that we were headed toward a depression with the Clinton budget agreement in 1997. So there are tools that the minority employs from time to time to make a point around here.

The key point of this motion is that the conference report should not include phase-ins longer than 5 years. This limits the ability of each party to push costs we cannot afford now out into the future. It also means that whatever we enact into law would probably stick.

It also is fair to acknowledge that this is truth-in-advertising for the House of Representatives tonight. Nor is it unheard of. As the current chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has said many times, and I agree with him, the House works off of a 5-year projection. So to ask that this bill is fully phased in within 5 years is simply consistent.

The motion to instruct also asks that the alternative minimum tax be adjusted so that none of the benefits in this bill is reversed by AMT. Again, taxpayers get what they have been promised. Another truth-in-advertising provision.

I would add my personal plea to the leadership on the other side, however, that we explore how to solve, even on a temporary basis, the incentive stock option issue with the alternative minimum tax. As the chairman knows, the interaction of the regular tax treatment of incentive stock options and AMT treatment leads to a tax trap to individuals in a declining market. I have a number of letters on my desk from people who know that right now.

The gentleman from California (Chairman THOMAS) has said to me consistently, and I believe him, that he wants to resolve the AMT issues as they arise and to look at the whole issue sometime in the future. AMT is a serious issue that we have to take up, and I have been on it consistently for a couple of years. I appreciate his sentiments, but this issue is one that taxpayers are facing today. They are filing for bankruptcy, and we cannot wait to resolve this issue in the next year or the year after.

So I request the chairman to seek at least a temporary solution in conference such as removing incentive stock options from the alternative minimum tax for last year and this year while we decide how to permanently resolve the many problems of alternative minimum tax in which I will remind this body multiply and get worse day after day after day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, to show my colleagues the seriousness of the minority's offer on the motion to instruct and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL), in terms of the statement that he just made, especially in dealing with the part A provision that says that it shall not include a phase-in longer than 5 years, I think it would be instructive if some of my friends on the other side of the aisle would revisit the Democrat tax plan which was offered on three separate occasions on the floor of the House which contains on its estate tax structure a 10-year relief period.

So I find it interesting that they are attempting to impose on the conference a standard of time limit which they chose not to impose on themselves in bills that they offered.

That should give my colleagues just one example of the seriousness of the approach of our friends on the other side of the aisle.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. RYAN), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I appreciate all the hard work and time he has put into putting this tax plan together.

As I look at the motion to instruct conferees, I know that the actual motion to instruct violates the very Democrat plan that has been offered here on the floor previous times, as the chairman just mentioned. So not only does it violate the earlier Democratic substitutes that we have seen, it also backs us off of the very important commitments that we have achieved in the budget resolution that we are achieving in this tax bill.

Number one, what we are accomplishing here with this conference report as we roll this through is to put the details into the tax provision of the budget resolution. We have a vision which is the 10-year budget, which has very important priorities but in that budget has very strict provisions that do these things: pays off our public national debt as fast as possible to a very negligible, almost zero dollar amount by the end of this decade.

□ 2000

Two, once and for all, once and for all, for the first time in 30 years, we will stop the raid on the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds by making sure that we apply those dollars to those very programs, and to pay off the national debt, which helps us with those programs on top of that.

And, third, we see that the American taxpayer, the hard-working families of America, continue to overpay their taxes. After we pay down our debt, after we improve Medicare and Social Security, people are still overpaying their taxes. And that is why we are taking a very important step by giving people some of their money back. We are putting money back into the paychecks of the very hard-working taxpayers who gave us this surplus in the first place.

So what is important to watch is that as we take a look at this motion to instruct, it actually dilutes those commitments. It actually takes us off of the very commitments we seek to achieve, on hopefully a bipartisan basis, which is protecting Social Security and modernizing Medicare, and we have a $300 billion provision to modernize Medicare with a prescription drug benefit; paying down our national public debt; and, yes, as people overpay their taxes, giving them some of their money back. And we are doing it in such a way that it will help stimulate the economy, create jobs in this country and do it, yes, fast enough to make a difference.

Now, as to the criticism that this bill is being rushed through, that just simply is not the case. Take a look at the Senate. We can see they are clearly not rushing things. As the chairman mentioned, amendment after amendment, 110 hours of debate over this bill. Since January, we have been working on this provision. And, as a matter of fact, on these very provisions that we will hopefully be achieving in this bill we have been working on for 3 years. Vote after vote in Congress, bill after bill has been passing Congress. This is the crescendo effort to finally give people some of their money back. It is a bipartisan-bicameral effort.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a "no" vote on the motion to instruct.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), a member of the committee.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, these bills are not sound tax policy, they are not sound economic policy, and they are not sound social policy.

The conference committee is going to try to put together two bills. In this case, two minuses cannot make a plus. These bills are built on the sands of uncertain estimates. The preceding speaker talks as if the money is in the bank. It is not there. It is not there. These bills will not help in the present. If so, very little. And what they are going to do is to risk our future.

Much of the relief will be backloaded, my colleagues can be assured of that. Most of it will be in the second 5 years. And then, when we project beyond those second 5 years, it will explode in the later years.

Where is the money going to be for the education bill that we just passed? Not raiding Medicare? The plans I have seen for prescription drugs take money out of Medicare, and there is no plan here on the majority side to find it anywhere else.

The chairman of the committee says, well, a conference committee can be 1 hour, 2 hours, 3 days, 4 days. I would bet this is going to be a few hours in a back room without full bipartisan participation: Democrats, Republicans, House and Senate.

Essentially, this bill will not help hardworking Americans. So much of the money goes to the wealthiest. We do not know the percentage yet, but when we see the final product, my colleagues can be sure that it will not overwhelmingly go to hard-working middle-and low-income families.

I urge we support the instruction.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

This motion is an attempt to improve a bill that is probably insusceptible to improvement. Indeed, it has always been challenging in discussing this tax measure whether to focus on its fundamental inequity or to consider its gross fiscal irresponsibility, because this measure has embodied so many aspects of both.

It need not have been that way. There has been strong bipartisan support in this Congress for reasonable tax relief. But reason does not seem to be in vogue in Washington this year. Take, for example, the matter of correcting the marriage penalty tax. We could have done that the day after the Inauguration and done it on a unanimous basis in this Congress. Democrats tried in 1995 to implement the so-called Contract on America, but Republicans had higher priorities and they rejected any correction of the marriage penalty in the Committee on Ways and Means.

Again this year, we find very much the same set of priorities. Because the bill that comes to us tonight from the United States Senate does not provide one cent of relief to those Americans who thought they were going to receive marriage penalty correction during this year. They have deferred the entire thing for another 5 or 6 years. So all these pretty photos of married couples and the discrimination they face, they need to know that if we approve the bill that was just approved over at the United States Senate, they will not get a penny of relief out of this bill.

It need not have been that way. The priorities could have been different. A bipartisan moderate approach to resolve the major inequities could have been accomplished, but instead, things like the marriage tax penalty were used as political ploys instead of as a basis for coming about with reasonable reform.

As the Senate Committee on Finance chairman said of the bill this week, quote, one criticism is that this bill's tax cuts are backloaded for high-income taxpayers. In other words, high-income taxpayers receive a lot of relief toward 2011 instead of 2001. This is a true fact, but not a valid criticism. That is some real double-speak.

What it really means is they are loading up these tax cuts in a way that at the very time more people are making their demands felt as they retire as baby boomers, there will not be the resources there to meet those needs. Need increases, the ability to meet those needs decreases.

And this is part of an overall plan of this administration and those within this Congress. This weekend, the Secretary of the Treasury gave an interview to a paper in London where he called for the total abolition of the corporate income tax. We will see one measure after another. As one of our Republican colleague said, there is another bill pending here. And the special interest lobbyists seeking tax breaks are swarming around it like ants at a picnic. This bill is presented to us tonight as a great picnic for the American people. But all they will get out of it is one series of stings after another.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Once again, I appreciate the presentation of my colleague from Texas. It is always enjoyable.

There were 62 votes for that tax package today. There were 12 Senators of the gentleman's party who voted for it. And I would urge my friends from California, who just made an impassioned plea about dealing with energy in California, perhaps they should spend a little more time with their Democratic Senators on the other side of the aisle, holding their hands, because the Senator from California, Mrs. Feinstein, voted in favor of the package.
